Correspondence respecting the Congress proposed to be held at Paris.

No. 1.

His Majesty the Emperor of the French to Her Majesty the Queen.

Paris, le 4 Novembre, 1863.

EN présence des événements qui, chaque jour, surgissent et se pressent, je crois indispensable de dire toute ma pensée aux Souverains auxquels est confiée la destinée des peuples.

Toutes les fois que de profondes secousses ont ébranlé les bases et déplacé les limites des Etats, il est survenu des transactions solennelles pour co-ordonner les éléments nouveaux, et consacrer, en les révisant, les transformations accomplies.

Tel a été l'objet du Traité de Westphalie, au dix-septième siècle, et des négociations de Vienne en 1815;—c'est sur ce dernier fondement que repose aujourd'hui l'édifice politique de l'Europe, et, cependant, votre Majesté ne l'ignore pas, il s'écroule de toutes parts.

Si l'on considère attentivement la situation des divers pays, il est impossible de ne pas reconnaître que, presque sur tous les points, les Traités de Vienne sont détruits, modifiés, méconnus, ou menacés. De là des devoirs sans règle, des droits sans titre, et des prétentions sans frein. Péril d'autant plus redoutable que les perfectionnements amenés par la civilisation, qui a lié les peuples entre eux par la solidarité des intérêts matériels, rendraient la guerre plus destructive encore.

C'est là un sujet de graves méditations. N'attendons pas pour prendre un parti que des événements soudains, irrésistibles, troublent notre jugement, et nous entraînent, malgré nous, dans des directions contraires. Je viens donc proposer à votre Majesté de régler le présent, et d'assurer l'avenir, dans un Congrès.

Appelé au Trône par la Providence et par la volonté du peuple Français, mais élevé à l'école de l'adversité, il m'est peut-être moins permis qu'à un autre d'ignorer et les droits des Souverains et les légitimes aspirations des peuples. Aussi, je suis prêt, sans système préconçu, à porter dans un Conseil International l'esprit de modération et de justice, partage ordinaire de ceux qui ont subi tant d'épreuves diverses.

Si je prends l'initiative d'une semblable ouverture, je ne cède pas à un mouvement de vanité; mais, comme je suis le Souverain auquel on a prêté le plus de projets ambitieux, j'ai à cœur de prouver par cette démarche franche et loyale que mon unique but est d'arriver sans secousse à la pacification de l'Europe. Si cette proposition est accueillie, je prie votre Majesté d'accepter Paris comme lieu de réunion.

Dans le cas où les Princes alliés et amis de la France jugeraient convenable de rehausser par leur présence l'autorité des délibérations, je serais fier de leur offrir une cordiale hospitalité. L'Europe verrait peut-être quelque avantage à ce que la capitale d'où est parti tant de fois le signal des bouleversements devînt le siège de Conférences destinées à jeter les bases d'une pacification générale.

Je saisis, &c.

Madam, my Sister,

Paris, November 4, 1863.

IN face of the events which daily arise and press themselves on attention, I deem it indispensable to impart my whole thought to the Sovereigns to whom the destiny of nations is confided.

On all occasions when great convulsions have shaken the foundations and deranged the limits of States, solemn compacts have followed to reduce to order the new elements, and to recognize, while revising them, the changes that have been effected.

Such was the object of the Treaty of Westphalia in the seventeenth century, and of the negotiations of Vienna, in 1815. It is on this last foundation that the political edifice of Europe now rests; and nevertheless, your Majesty is not ignorant, it is crumbling to pieces on all sides.

If one considers attentively the situation of the different countries, it is impossible not to admit that on almost all points the Treaties of Vienna are destroyed, modified, disregarded, or menaced. Hence there are duties without rule, rights without title, pretensions without restraint. A peril the more formidable, since the improvements produced by civilization, which has united peoples together by an identity of material interests, would render war still more destructive.

This is a matter for serious reflection. Let us not delay taking a decision until sudden and irresistible events disturb our judgment, and draw us, in spite of ourselves, in opposite directions. I now therefore propose to your Majesty to regulate the present, and secure the future, by means of a Congress.

Summoned to the throne by Providence and the will of the French people, but brought up in the school of adversity, it is perhaps less allowable for me than for others to ignore the rights of Sovereigns and the legitimate aspirations of peoples. Thus I am ready, without any preconceived system, to bring to an International Council a spirit of moderation and justice, the ordinary portion of those who have undergone so many different trials.

If I take the initiative in such an overture, I do not yield to an impulse of vanity; but because I am the Sovereign to whom ambitious projects have mostly been attributed. I have it at heart to prove, by this frank and loyal overture, that my sole object is to arrive, without convulsion, at the pacification of Europe. If this proposal be agreed to, I beg your Majesty to accept Paris as the place of meeting.

If the Princes allies and friends of France should think fit to enhance by their presence the authority of the deliberations, I shall be proud to offer them cordial hospitality. Europe will, perhaps, see some advantage in the capital whence the signal of confusion has so often arisen, becoming the seat of Conferences destined to lay the basis of a general pacification.

I take, &c.
(Signed) NAPOLEON.

No. 2.

Her Majesty the Queen to the Emperor of the French.

Windsor Castle, November 11, 1863.

THE letter which your Imperial Majesty addressed to me on the 4th of this month has duly reached my hands. Your Imperial Majesty may feel assured that any suggestion or proposal made by your Imperial Majesty will always command my most earnest and attentive consideration, and more especially when the general welfare of nations is concerned. I have accordingly directed my confidential advisers to submit to me the opinion which, after due deliberation, they may arrive at in regard to the important measure which your Imperial Majesty recommends for adoption by your allies; and my Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs will, with as little delay as possible, authorize my Ambassador at Paris, to make known to your Government the conclusion which, after weighing that opinion, I may feel it my duty to adopt.

I avail, &c.

No. 3.

Earl Russell to Earl Cowley.

My Lord,

Foreign Office, November 12, 1863.

HER Majesty the Queen having been pleased to refer to her confidential servants a letter of the Emperor Napoleon addressed to Her Majesty on the subject of a Congress, I proceed to inform you of the view which Her Majesty's Government take of the proposal contained in it.

The letter invites Her Majesty to take part in a Congress, to be held in Paris, on the affairs of Europe.

I am commanded, in the first place, to inform your Excellency that Her Majesty's Government see in this step a proof of the interest taken by His Imperial Majesty in the welfare of Europe.

I will now proceed to remark on the ground stated for this proposal, and then examine the proposal itself.

His Imperial Majesty observes, that on all occasions when great convulsions have shaken the foundations and deranged the limits of States, solemn compacts have been entered into, having for their object to reduce to order the new elements, and to recognize, while revising them, the changes that have been effected. Such was the object of the Treaty of Westphalia in the seventeenth century, and of the negotiations of Vienna in 1815. On this last foundation the political edifice of Europe now rests, and nevertheless, His Imperial Majesty observes, it is crumbling to pieces on all sides.

The Emperor goes on to state that, if the situation of the different countries is attentively considered, it is impossible not to admit that in almost all points the Treaties of Vienna are destroyed, modified, disregarded, or menaced.

When so important a proposal as that which the Emperor has put forth is made to rest on certain grounds, it is our duty to examine carefully the grounds themselves.

Nearly half a century has elapsed since the Treaties of 1815 were signed. The work was somewhat hurried by the necessity of giving repose to Europe after so many convulsions. Yet the changes made in this period of fifty years have not been more than might have been expected from the lapse of time, the progress of opinion, the shifting policy of Governments, and the varying exigencies of nations. If we take half a century from the Peace of Westphalia to 1700, or a similar period from the Peace of Utrecht to 1763, we shall find those periods marked by extensive changes, as well as the period which has elapsed between 1815 and 1863.

Yet it was not thought necessary, at the epochs mentioned, to proceed to a general revision either of the Treaty of Westphalia or of the Treaty of Utrecht.

It is the conviction of Her Majesty's Government that the main provisions of the Treaty of 1815 are in full force; that the greater number of those provisions have not been in any way disturbed; and that on those foundations rests the balance of power in Europe.

If, instead of saying that the Treaty of Vienna has ceased to exist, or that it is destroyed, we inquire whether certain portions of it have been modified, disregarded, or menaced, other questions occur. Some of the modifications which have taken place have received the sanction of all the Great Powers, and now form part of the public law of Europe.

Is it proposed to give those changes a more general and solemn sanction? Is such a work necessary? Will it contribute to the peace of Europe?

Other portions of the Treaty of Vienna have been disregarded or set aside, and the changes thus made de facto have not been recognized de jure by all the Powers of Europe.

Is it proposed to obtain from Powers which have not hitherto joined in that recognition a sanction to those changes?

Lastly come those parts of the Treaty of Vienna which are menaced, and upon those portions the most important questions of all arise. What is the nature of the proposals to be made on this subject by the Emperor Napoleon? In what direction would they tend? And, above all, are they, if agreed to by a majority of the Powers, to be enforced by arms?

When the Sovereigns or Ministers of Austria, France, Prussia, Russia, and Great Britain met at Verona, in 1823, upon the affairs of Spain, the first four of those Powers carried into effect their resolutions by means of armed forces, in spite of the protest of Great Britain. Is this example to be followed at the present Congress in case of disagreement? Upon all these points Her Majesty's Government must obtain satisfactory explanations before they can come to any decision upon the proposal made by the Emperor.

Her Majesty's Government would be ready to discuss with France and other Powers, by diplomatic correspondence, any specified questions upon which a solution might be attained, and European peace thereby more securely established.

But they would feel more apprehension than confidence from the meeting of a Congress of Sovereigns and Ministers without fixed objects, ranging over the map of Europe, and exciting hopes and aspirations which they might find themselves unable either to gratify or to quiet.

Her Majesty's Government have no reason to doubt that the Emperor Napoleon would bring into such an assembly a spirit of moderation and of justice. They feel confident that his object is to give security to the peace of Europe. The only question is as to the means by which that object is to be obtained.

You are directed to read and give a copy of this despatch to M. Drouyn de Lhuys.

I am, &c.

No. 4.

M. Drouyn de Lhuys to the Marquis de Cadore.

Palais de Compiègne, le 23 Novembre, 1863.

M. LE COMTE COWLEY m'a communiqué, il y a plusieurs jours, une dépêche de son Excellence M. le Comte Russell, qui porte la date du 12 de ce mois, et qui exprime l'opinion du Gouvernement Britannique relativement à la proposition de réunir à Paris un Congrès pour délibérer sur les affaires de l'Europe. Vous en trouverez ci-joint copie. Ma correspondance antérieure répondait à l'avance à quelques-unes des considérations développées dans ce document. Je crois devoir néanmoins résumer dans cette dépêche, dont vous remettrez une copie à son Excellence le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat, les motifs qui ont déterminé la résolution de Sa Majesté.

Le Gouvernement Impérial n'a l'intention de faire ni l'apologie ni la critique des Traités de Vienne. L'Empereur a déclaré, en montant sur le Trône, qu'il se considérait lié par les engagements souscrits par ses prédécesseurs. Naguère encore, dans sa lettre aux Souverains, Sa Majesté constatait que les Actes Diplomatiques de 1815 étaient le fondement sur lequel repose aujourd'hui l'édifice politique de l'Europe. Mais c'est à ses yeux une raison de plus pour examiner si cette base elle-même n'est pas profondément ébranlée.

Or, le Cabinet de Londres reconnaît avec nous que plusieurs de ces dispositions ont reçu de graves atteintes. Parmi les modifications qui ont eu lieu, les unes ont été consacrées par la sanction de toutes les grandes Puissances, et forment aujourd'hui une partie du droit international ; les autres, au contraire, opérées de fait, n'ont pas été reconnues en droit par tous les Cabinets. Quant aux premières, nous ne pouvons nous empêcher de remarquer avec quelle force irrésistible elles se sont imposées à l'acceptation des Gouvernements.

L'empressement de l'Angleterre elle-même à y donner son adhésion prouve combien les anciennes combinaisons répondaient peu, suivant l'expression de Lord Russell, à ce qu'exigeaient la marche du temps, les progrès de l'opinion, la politique mobile des Gouvernements et les besoins variables des peuples. D'un autre côté, n'est-on pas autorisé à croire que des changements aussi importants ont pu altérer, dans une certaine mesure, l'harmonie et l'équilibre de l'ensemble ? Nous admettons, avec Lord Russell, qu'il n'est pas absolument nécessaire de donner à ces changements une sanction plus générale et plus solennelle ; mais nous pensons qu'il y aurait avantage à débayer les ruines et à réunir en un même corps tous ces membres vivants.

Pour les modifications auxquelles les Puissances n'ont pas donné un assentiment unanime, elles constituent autant de litiges qui, d'un moment à l'autre, peuvent diviser l'Europe en deux camps. Au lieu d'en abandonner la décision à la violence et au hasard, ne vaut-il pas mieux en poursuivre d'un commun accord la solution équitable, et sanctionner les transformations en les revisant ?

La troisième catégorie comprend celles des parties du Traité de Vienne qui sont menacées. "C'est à cet égard," dit son Excellence le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat, "que surgissent les questions les plus importantes ; de quelle nature sont les propositions que compte faire à ce sujet l'Empereur Napoléon ? Dans quelle direction tendraient-elles, et, par-dessus tout, si elles étaient adoptées par la majorité des Puissances, devraient-elles être imposées par la force ?"

L'Empereur en signalant à l'Europe les périls d'une situation profondément troublée, a indiqué le moyen d'écarter les redoutables éventualités qu'il prévoit et dont, moins que d'autres peut-être, il aurait à s'alarmer, car les questions d'où peut sortir aujourd'hui la guerre ne touchent la France qu'indirectement, et il dépendrait d'elle seule d'intervenir dans la lutte, ou de s'en tenir à l'écart. Il l'a fait en s'adressant avec confiance et simultanément à toutes les Couronnes, sans entente préalable avec aucune d'elles, afin de mieux témoigner de sa sincère impartialité et d'aborder, libre de tout engagement, les graves délibérations auxquelles il les convie. Souverain le plus nouveau, il ne se croit pas en droit d'assumer le rôle d'arbitre, et de fixer d'avance aux autres Cours le programme du Congrès qu'il propose. Tel est le motif de la réserve dans laquelle il s'est renfermé. Est-il, d'ailleurs, si difficile d'énumérer les questions non résolues qui peuvent troubler l'Europe ?

Une déplorable lutte ensanglante la Pologne, agite les Etats voisins, et menace le monde des plus graves perturbations. Trois Puissances, pour y mettre un terme, invoquent en vain les Traités de Vienne qui fournissent aux deux parties des arguments contradictoires. Cette lutte durera-t-elle toujours ?

Des prétentions opposées mettent aux prises le Danemark et l'Allemagne. Le maintien de la paix, dans le Nord, est à la merci d'un incident. Les Cabinets sont déjà intervenus dans ce débat par des négociations ; y sont-ils devenus aujourd'hui indifférents ?

L'anarchie continuera-t-elle à régner sur le Bas Danube, et pourra-t-elle, à chaque moment, rouvrir une sanglante arène au débat de la question d'Orient ?

L'Autriche et l'Italie resteront-elles en présence dans une attitude hostile, toujours prêtes à rompre la trêve qui suspend l'explosion de leurs ressentiments ?

L'occupation de Rome par les troupes Françaises se prolongera-t-elle pendant un temps indéfini ?

Enfin, doit-on renoncer, sans avoir fait de nouvelles tentatives de conciliation, à l'espoir d'alléger le fardeau qu'imposent aux peuples des armements excessifs entretenus par une mutuelle défiance ?

Telles sont, suivant nous, Monsieur, les principales questions que les Puissances jugeraient sans doute utile d'examiner et de résoudre.

Lord Russell n'attend pas, assurément, que nous indiquons ici le mode de solution applicable à chacun de ces problèmes, ni le genre de sanction que pourraient comporter les décisions du Congrès. C'est aux Puissances qui y seraient représentées qu'appartiendrait le droit de prononcer sur ces divers points. Nous ajouterons seulement que ce serait, à nos yeux, une illusion que de poursuivre ces solutions à travers le dédale de correspondances diplomatiques et de négociations séparées, et que, loin d'aboutir à la guerre, la voie proposée est la seule qui puisse conduire à une pacification durable.

Dans l'une des dernières séances du Congrès de Paris, M. le Comte Clarendon, invoquant une stipulation du Traité de Paix qui venait d'être signé et qui recommandait de recourir à l'action médiatrice d'un Etat ami, avant d'en appeler à la force, en cas de dissentiment entre la Porte et d'autres Puissances signataires, exprimait la pensée "que cette heureuse innovation pourrait recevoir une application plus générale et devenir ainsi une barrière opposée à des conflits qui, souvent, n'éclatent que parce qu'il n'est pas toujours possible de s'expliquer et de s'entendre." Les Plénipotentiaires de toutes les Cours s'associèrent unanimement à l'intention de leur collègue, et n'hésitèrent pas à exprimer, au nom de leurs Gouvernements, le vœu que les Etats entre lesquels s'élèveraient des dissentiments sérieux eussent recours à une médiation amicale avant d'en appeler aux armes. La sollicitude de l'Empereur va plus loin ; elle n'attend pas que les dissentiments aient éclaté, pour recommander l'application aux circonstances actuelles du principe salutaire inscrit sur le dernier monument du droit public Européen, et Sa Majesté invite dès à présent ses alliés "à s'expliquer et à s'entendre."

Recevez, &c.

(Translation.)

Sir,

Palace of Compiègne, November 23, 1863.

LORD COWLEY communicated to me, some days ago, a despatch from his Excellency Earl Russell, dated the 12th of this month, and which expresses the opinion of the British Government relative to the proposal to call at Paris a Congress to deliberate on the affairs of Europe. You will find annexed a copy of it. My previous correspondence has answered beforehand some of the considerations developed in this document. It is my duty, nevertheless, to sum up in this despatch, of which you will send a copy to his Excellency the Principal Secretary of State, the motives which have determined the resolution of His Majesty.

The Imperial Government have no intention either to apologise for or to criticise the Treaties of Vienna. The Emperor declared, on mounting the throne, that he should consider himself bound by the engagements subscribed to by his predecessors. Lately again, in his letter to the Sovereigns, His Majesty showed that the Diplomatic Acts of 1815 were the foundation on which rests to-day the political edifice of Europe. But this is, he considers, an additional reason for examining whether this foundation is not itself shaken to its base.

Now, the Cabinet of London recognises with us that several of these stipulations have been seriously infringed. Amongst the modifications which have taken place, some have been consecrated by the sanction of all the great Powers, and at present constitute a part of international law ; others, on the contrary, carried into execution, have not been recognised as law by all the Cabinets. As regards the first, we cannot help calling attention to the irresistible power with which they have forced themselves on the acceptance of the Governments. The eagerness of England herself to give to them her adhesion, proves how little the former combinations answered, according to the expression of Lord Russell, the requirements of the lapse of time, the progress of opinion, the shifting policy of Governments, and the varying exigencies of nations ; on the other hand, are not we authorized in believing that changes so important have diminished to some extent the harmony and equilibrium of the whole ? We admit, with Lord Russell, that it is not absolutely necessary to give to these changes a more general and more solemn sanction ; but we consider it would be an advantage to clear away the ruins, and re-unite in a single body all the living members.

As regards the modifications to which the Powers have not given an unanimous assent, they constitute so many causes of dispute which at any moment may divide Europe into two camps. Instead of leaving the decision of these to violence and chance, would it not be better to pursue their equitable solution to a common agreement, and sanction these changes by revising them ?

The third category comprises those parts of the Treaty of Vienna which are menaced. " Upon those portions," says his Excellency the Principal Secretary of State, " the most important questions of all arise. What is the nature of the proposals to be made on this subject by the Emperor Napoleon ? In what direction would they tend, and, above all, are they, if agreed to by a majority of the Powers, to be enforced by arms ?"

The Emperor, while he pointed out to Europe the dangers of a situation in deep commotion, indicated the method of averting the dire calamities which he foresees, and at which he, less than others perhaps, would have reason to take alarm ; for the questions out of which at the present time war may arise, interest France but indirectly, and it would depend on herself alone whether she would take part in the struggle or stand aloof from it. This he did by addressing all the Sovereigns in full confidence and simultaneously, without previous understanding with any of them, in order the better to testify his sincere impartiality, and to enter upon, free of every engagement, the important deliberations to which he invites them. Himself the youngest of Sovereigns, he considers he has no right to assume the part of an arbiter, and to fix beforehand for the other Courts the programme of the Congress which he proposes. This is the motive of the reserve which he has imposed upon himself. Is it, moreover, so difficult to enumerate the questions, not yet solved, which may disturb Europe ?

A deplorable struggle is bathing Poland in blood, is agitating the neighbouring States, and threatening the world with the most serious disturbances. Three Powers, with a view of putting a stop to it, invoke in vain the Treaties of Vienna, which supply the two sides with contradictory arguments. Is this struggle to last for ever ?

Pretensions opposed to one another are exciting a quarrel between Denmark and Germany. The preservation of peace in the North is at the mercy of an accident. The Cabinets have already, by their negotiations, become parties to the dispute. Are they now become indifferent to it ?

Shall anarchy continue to prevail on the Lower Danube, and shall it be able at any moment to open anew a bloody arena for the dispute of the Eastern question ?

Shall Austria and Italy remain in presence of each other in a hostile attitude, ever ready to break the truce which prevents their animosities exploding ?

Shall the occupation of Rome by the French troops be prolonged for an indefinite period ?

Lastly, must we renounce, without fresh attempts at conciliation, the hope of lightening the burthen imposed on the nations by the disproportionate armaments occasioned by mutual distrust ?

Such are, Sir, in our opinion, the principal questions which the Powers would doubtless judge it useful to examine and decide.

Lord Russell surely does not expect us to specify here the mode of solution applicable to each of these problems, nor the kind of sanction which might be given by the decisions of the Congress. To the Powers there represented would pertain the right of pronouncing upon these various points. We will only add, that it would be in our eyes illusory to pursue their solution through the labyrinth of diplomatic correspondence and separate negotiation, and that the way now proposed, so far from ending in war, is the only one which can lead to a durable pacification.

At one of the last meetings of the Congress of Paris, the Earl of Clarendon, invoking a stipulation of the Treaty of Peace which had just been signed, and which recommended recourse to the mediation of a friendly State before resorting to force, in the event of dissension arising between the Porte and others of the Signatory Powers, expressed the opinion "that this happy innovation might receive a more general application, and thus become a barrier against conflicts which frequently only break forth because it is not always possible to enter into explanation, and to come to an understanding." The Plenipotentiaries of all the Courts concurred unanimously in the intention of their colleague, and did not hesitate to express, in the name of their Governments, the wish that States between which any serious misunderstanding may arise, should have recourse to friendly mediation before appealing to arms.

The solicitude of the Emperor goes further ; it does not wait for dissensions to break out in order to recommend an application to the actual circumstances of the salutary principle engraven on the latest monument of the Public Law of Europe, and His Majesty now invites his allies "to enter into explanations, and to come to an understanding."

Accept, &c.

My Lord,

Foreign Office, November 25, 1863.

HER Majesty's Government have received from the Marquis of Cadore the copy of a despatch addressed to him by M. Drouyn de Lhuys, in answer to my despatch to your Excellency of the 12th instant. Her Majesty's Government having obtained an answer to the inquiries they made, will not any longer delay giving a definitive reply to the invitation addressed by the Emperor of the French to Her Majesty the Queen, to take part in a Congress of the European Powers to be assembled at Paris.

I inclose a copy of the Emperor's letter of invitation to the Queen,* which is similar to one which has already appeared in the "Moniteur," addressed to the German Confederation.

Her Majesty's Government fully recognize in this step the desire of the Emperor of the French to put an end to the disquietude which affects several parts of Europe, and to establish the general peace on foundations more solid than those on which, in his opinion, it now rests.

The Emperor declares that France is disinterested in this question ; that he, for his part, seeks no aggrandizement, and that the interests to be secured are those, not of France, but of Europe.

Her Majesty's Government may also declare that Great Britain is disinterested in this matter, that she seeks no aggrandizement, and that she has only to counsel moderation and peace.

But France and Great Britain being thus disinterested themselves, are bound to consider what is the position, and what, in a Congress, will be the probable conduct of Powers who may be called upon to make sacrifices of territory or of pre-eminence and moral strength.

It would be little to the purpose to say on this occasion anything more of the Treaties of 1815.

Practically, the Emperor of the French admits the binding force of many portions of those Treaties ; and Her Majesty's Government as readily allow that some portions of them have been modified or disregarded, and that other portions are now menaced or called in question.

Her Majesty's Government understand from the explanations given by M. Drouyn de Lhuys, that, in the opinion of the Government of the Emperor, it is obvious to every one that there are several questions, not hitherto solved, which may disturb Europe. Of this nature are the following :—

Must the conflict in Poland be still further prolonged ?

Is Denmark to be at war with Germany, and have the Powers which formerly took a part in the discussion of this question become indifferent to it ?

Must anarchy continue in the Danubian Principalities, and thus at any moment tend to re-open the question of the East ?

* No. 1.

Must Italy and Austria always remain in presence of each other in a hostile attitude ?
Must the occupation of Rome by French troops be prolonged for an indefinite time ?
The Emperor's Government put a further question :—

Must we, without having made new attempts at conciliation, renounce the hope of lightening the burthens imposed upon the nations of Europe by excessive armaments, kept up by the feeling of mutual distrust ?

These, no doubt, are the principal questions which either disturb or threaten the peace of Europe ; but there is a further question which Her Majesty's Government consider to lie at the bottom of this whole matter, and that is the following :—

Is a General Congress of European States likely to furnish a peaceful solution of the various matters in dispute ?

This, indeed, is the question which it behoves the Governments of the different States to consider seriously and attentively.

There appears to Her Majesty's Government to be one main consideration which must lead them to their conclusion.

After the war which desolated Germany from 1619 to 1649, and after the successive wars which afflicted the Continent of Europe from 1793 to 1815, it was possible to distribute territories and to define rights by a Congress, because the nations of Europe were tired of the slaughter, and exhausted by the burthens of war, and because the Powers who met in Congress had by the circumstances of the time the means of carrying their decisions and arrangements into effect.

But at the present moment, after a continuance of long peace, no Power is willing to give up any territory to which it has a title by Treaty, or a claim by possession.

For example, of the questions mentioned as disturbing or threatening Europe, two of the most disquieting are those regarding Poland and Italy.

Let us examine the present state of these questions, and see whether it is probable that a Congress would tend to a peaceful settlement of them.

In the first place, with regard to Poland, the question is not new to France, to Austria, or to Great Britain.

For several months these Powers, while carefully abstaining from any threat, have attempted to obtain from Russia by friendly representations the adoption of measures of a healing nature, but have only succeeded in procuring promises, often repeated, that when the insurrection shall have been put down, recourse will be had to clemency and conciliation. Would there be any advantage in repeating in the name of a Congress representations already made with so little effect ?

Is it probable that a Congress would be able to secure better terms for Poland unless by a combined employment of force ?

Considerable progress has been made by the military preponderance and by the unsparing severity of Russia in subduing the insurgents.

Is it likely that Russia will grant in the pride of her strength what she refused in the early days of her discouragement ?

Would she create an independent Poland at the mere request of a Congress ?

But if she would not, the prospect becomes one of humiliation for Europe, or of war against Russia ; and those Powers who are not ready to incur the cost and hazard of war may well desire to avoid the other alternative.

It may be truly said, moreover, that the present period is one of transition. If the insurrection shall be subdued, it will then be seen whether the promises of the Emperor of Russia are to be fulfilled. If the insurrection shall not be subdued, or if, in order to subdue it, the Polish population is treated with fresh and, if that be possible, with aggravated rigour, other questions will arise which may require further consideration, but which would hardly receive a solution from a large assembly of Representatives of all the Powers of Europe.

Indeed, it is to be apprehended that questions arising from day to day, coloured by the varying events of the hour, would give occasion rather for useless debate than for practical and useful deliberation in a Congress of twenty or thirty Representatives, not acknowledging any supreme authority, and not guided by any fixed rules of proceeding.

Passing to the question of Italy, fresh difficulties occur. In the first place, is it intended to sanction by a new Treaty the present state of possession in Italy ? The Pope and the Sovereigns related to the dispossessed Princes might, on the one side, object to give a title they have hitherto refused, to the King of Italy ; and the King of Italy, on the other, would probably object to a settlement which would appear to exclude him, by inference at least, from the acquisition of Rome and Venetia.

But is it intended to ask Austria, in Congress, to renounce the possession of Venetia ? Her Majesty's Government have good grounds to believe that no Austrian Representative would attend a Congress where such a proposition was to be discussed. They are informed that if such an intention were announced beforehand, Austria would decline to attend the Congress, and that if the question were introduced without notice, the Austrian Minister would quit the Assembly. Here again, therefore, the deliberations of the Congress would soon be brought in sight of the alternative of nullity or war.

But is it possible to assemble a Congress and to summon an Italian Representative to sit in it without discussing the state of Venetia? The Emperor of the French would be the first person to feel and to admit that such a course would not be possible.

With regard to Germany and Denmark, it is true that several of the Powers of Europe have interested themselves in that question, but the addition of Spain, Portugal, Italy, and Turkey to the deliberation would scarcely improve the prospect of a satisfactory solution. And if, with regard to Poland and Italy, no beneficial result is likely to be attained, is it expedient to call together a General Congress of all the States of Europe to find a remedy for the anarchy of Moldo-Wallachia?

Were all these questions, those of Poland, Italy, Denmark, and the Danubian Provinces, to be decided by the mere utterance of opinions, the views of Her Majesty's Government upon most of them might, perhaps, be found not materially to differ from those of the Emperor of the French.

But if the mere expression of opinions and wishes would accomplish no positive results, it appears certain that the deliberations of a Congress would consist of demands and pretensions put forward by some and resisted by others; and, there being no supreme authority in such an Assembly to enforce the decisions of the majority, the Congress would probably separate, leaving many of its members on worse terms with each other than they had been when they met. But if this would be the probable result, it follows that no decrease of armaments is likely to be effected by the proposed Congress. M. Drouyn de Lhuys refers to a proposal made by Lord Clarendon in one of the last sittings of the Congress of Paris. But Her Majesty's Government understand that proposal to have reference to a dispute between two Powers to be referred to the good offices of a friendly Power, but in no way to the assembling of a General Congress.

Not being able, therefore, to discern the likelihood of those beneficial consequences which the Emperor of the French promised himself when proposing a Congress, Her Majesty's Government, following their own strong convictions, after mature deliberation, feel themselves unable to accept His Imperial Majesty's invitation.

You are instructed to give a copy of this despatch to M. Drouyn de Lhuys.

I am, &c.

(Extract.)

Paris, November 28, 1863.

I WAITED by appointment on M. Drouyn de Lhuys, this afternoon, and communicated to his Excellency your Lordship's despatch of the 25th instant, stating the reasons why Her Majesty's Government cannot accept the invitation addressed by the Emperor of the French to Her Majesty the Queen, to take part in a Congress of European Powers to be assembled at Paris.

M. Drouyn de Lhuys, after perusing your Lordship's despatch, said that he could not but express his dissent from the reasoning which had led Her Majesty's Government to the decision which your Lordship's despatch announced. He still retained the opinion that the assembling of a Congress would have been the best means of settling the questions which now agitate Europe. It would be useless, however, to prolong the discussion. The mind of Her Majesty's Government appeared to be made up. He would communicate your Lordship's despatch to the Emperor.

TREATY between Her Majesty, the Emperor of the French, and the Emperor of Russia, on the one part, and the King of Denmark, on the other part, relative to the Accession of Prince William of Denmark to the Throne of Greece.

Signed at London, July 13, 1863.

[Ratifications exchanged at London, August 3, 1863.]

Au nom de la Très Sainte et Indivisible Trinité.

LEURS Majestés la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, l'Empereur des Français, et l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, désirant aplanir les difficultés survenues dans le Royaume de Grèce, placé sous leur commune garantie, ont jugé nécessaire de s'entendre sur les arrangements à prendre, afin de réaliser les vœux de la nation Grecque qui appellent le Prince Guillaume de Danemark au trône Hellénique.

De son côté, Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemark, se rendant à l'invitation de leurs dites Majestés, a consenti à leur prêter son concours en vue de ce résultat, conforme aux intérêts de la paix générale.

En conséquence Leurs Majestés la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, l'Empereur des Français, et l'Empereur de toutes les Russies d'une part, et Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemark de l'autre, ont résolu de conclure un Traité, et à cet effet ont nommé pour leurs Plénipotentiaires, savoir :

Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, le Très Honorable Jean Comte Russell, Vicomte Amberley de Amberley et Ardsalla, Pair du Royaume Uni, Chevalier du Très Noble Ordre de la Jarretière, Conseiller de Sa Majesté Britannique en Son Conseil Privé, Son Principal Secrétaire d'Etat pour les Affaires Etrangères ;

Sa Majesté l'Empereur des Français, le Sieur Jean Baptiste Louis, Baron Gros, Sénateur de l'Empire, Ambassadeur Extraordinaire et Plénipotentiaire près Sa Majesté Britannique, Grand-Croix de l'Ordre Impérial de la Légion d'Honneur, Grand-Croix de l'Ordre du Sauveur de Grèce, de l'Ordre d'Isabelle la Catholique d'Espagne, de l'Ordre Pontifical de Pie IX, Commandeur de l'Ordre de la Conception de Portugal, &c., &c., &c. ;

Sa Majesté l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, le Sieur Philippe Baron de Brunnow, Son Conseiller Privé Actuel, Ambassadeur Extraordinaire et Plénipotentiaire près Sa Majesté Britannique, Chevalier des Ordres de St. André, de St. Wladimir de première classe, de St. Alexandre Newski en diamants, de l'Aigle Blanc, de Ste. Anne de première classe, de St. Stanislas de première classe, Grand-Croix de l'Ordre Impérial de la Légion d'Honneur, du Danebrog de Danemark en diamants, et de l'Ordre du Sauveur de Grèce de première classe, &c., &c., &c. ;

Et Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemark, le Sieur Torben de Bille, son Chambellan, Commandeur de l'Ordre de Danebrog, et décoré de la Croix d'Honneur du même Ordre, Son Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire près Sa Majesté Britannique ;

Lesquels, après avoir échangé leurs pleins pouvoirs, trouvés en bonne et due forme, ont arrêté et signé les Articles suivants :—

ARTICLE I.

Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemark, d'accord avec le Prince Christian de Danemark, agissant en qualité de tuteur de son fils puiné le Prince Christian Guillaume Ferdinand Adolphe George, accepte pour ce Prince, encore mineur, la Souveraineté héréditaire de la Grèce, qui lui est offerte par le Sénat et par l'Assemblée Nationale de la Grèce au nom de la nation Hellénique.

ARTICLE II.

Le Prince Guillaume de Danemark portera le titre de George I, Roi des Grecs.

ARTICLE III.

La Grèce, sous la souveraineté du Prince Guillaume de Danemark, et la garantie des trois Cours, forme un Etat monarchique, indépendant, constitutionnel.

ARTICLE IV.

Les limites du territoire Grec, déterminées par l'arrangement conclu à Constantinople entre les trois Cours et la Porte Ottomane le 21 Juillet, 1832, recevront une extension par la réunion des Iles Ioniennes au Royaume Hellénique, à l'époque où cette réunion, proposée par le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique, aura été trouvée d'accord avec les vœux du Parlement Ionien, et où elle aura obtenu l'assentiment des Cours d'Autriche, de France, de Prusse, et de Russie.

ARTICLE V.

Les Iles Ioniennes, lorsque leur réunion au Royaume de Grèce aura été effectuée, seront comprises dans la garantie stipulée par l'Article III du présent Traité.

ARTICLE VI.

Dans aucun cas la Couronne de Grèce et la Couronne de Danemark ne pourront se trouver réunies sur la même tête.

ARTICLE VII.

Conformément au principe de la Constitution Hellénique, reconnu par le Traité signé à Londres le 20 Novembre, 1852, et proclamé par le Décret de l'Assemblée Nationale de la Grèce du 30 Mars, 1863, les successeurs légitimes du Roi George I devront professer les dogmes de l'Eglise Orthodoxe d'Orient.

ARTICLE VIII.

La majorité du Prince Guillaume de Danemark, fixée par la loi de la Famille Royale à dix-huit ans révolus, c'est-à-dire, au 24 Décembre, 1863, sera considérée comme accomplie avant cette époque, si un Décret de l'Assemblée Nationale en reconnaissait la nécessité.

ARTICLE IX.

A l'époque où la réunion des Iles Ioniennes au Royaume Hellénique aura lieu, aux termes de l'Article IV du présent Traité, Sa Majesté Britannique recommandera au Gouvernement des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes d'affecter annuellement une somme de dix mille livres sterling à augmenter la liste civile de Sa Majesté George I, Roi des Grecs.

ARTICLE X.

Chacune des trois Cours fera abandon en faveur du Prince Guillaume de Danemark de quatre mille livres sterling par an sur les sommes que le Trésor Grec s'est engagé à payer annuellement à chacune d'elles, en vertu de l'arrangement conclu à Athènes par le Gouvernement Grec, avec le concours des Chambres, au mois de Juin 1860.

Il est expressément entendu que ces trois sommes, formant un total de douze mille livres sterling annuellement, seront destinées à constituer une dotation personnelle de Sa Majesté le Roi, en sus de la liste civile fixée par la loi de l'Etat.

ARTICLE XI.

L'avènement du Prince Guillaume au Trône Hellénique n'apportera aucun changement aux engagements financiers que la Grèce a contractés par l'Article XII de la Convention signée à Londres le 7 Mai, 1832, envers les Puissances garantes de l'emprunt.

Il est entendu également que les Puissances veilleront d'un commun accord à l'exécution de l'engagement pris par le Gouvernement Hellénique au mois de Juin 1860, sur la représentation des trois Cours.

ARTICLE XII.

Les trois Cours s'emploieront dès à présent à faire reconnaître le Prince Guillaume de Danemark en qualité de Roi des Grecs par tous les Souverains et Etats avec lesquels elles se trouvent en relations.

ARTICLE XIII.

Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemark se réserve de prendre les mesures les plus propres à faciliter l'arrivée du Roi George I dans ses Etats, le plus tôt que faire se pourra.

ARTICLE XIV.

Les trois Cours porteront le présent Traité à la connaissance du Gouvernement Grec, et lui prêteront tout l'appui qui pourra dépendre d'elles, dans l'attente de l'arrivée prochaine de Sa Majesté le Roi.

ARTICLE XV.

Le présent Traité sera ratifié, et les ratifications en seront échangées à Londres dans le délai de six semaines, ou plus tôt si faire se peut.

En foi de quoi les Plénipotentiaires respectifs l'ont signé, et y ont apposé le cachet de leurs armes.

Fait à Londres le treize Juillet, l'an de grâce mil huit cent soixante-trois.

LE Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique pour les Affaires Etrangères ayant ouvert la séance, M. le Ministre de Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemark a donné lecture de la déclaration suivante :—

Sa Majesté le Roi George I, voulant se conformer aux usages qui prévalent en Grèce, et s'identifier autant que possible à sa patrie d'adoption, croit devoir déclarer aux Puissances protectrices de la Grèce qu'il désire prendre désormais le titre de Roi des Hellènes.

Les Plénipotentiaires de France et de la Grande Bretagne n'ayant présenté aucune observation à ce sujet, et désirant se rendre au vœu exprimé au nom de Sa Majesté le Roi George I, par M. le Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemark, se sont engagés, au nom de leurs Cours respectives, à reconnaître à Sa Majesté George I, Roi des Hellènes, le nouveau titre qu'il vient de prendre.

Le Plénipotentiaire de Russie s'est réservé de porter la déclaration du Plénipotentiaire de Danemark à la connaissance de sa Cour.

Presens :

Les Plénipotentiaires de France ;
de la Grande Bretagne ;
de Russie ; et de Danemark.

PAR le Protocole du 3 Août, le Plénipotentiaire de Russie s'est réservé d'annoncer à sa Cour l'intention de Sa Majesté le Roi George I de porter le titre de Roi des Hellènes, au lieu de celui de Roi des Grecs, mentionné aux Articles II, IX, et XII du Traité du 13 Juillet.

Le Plénipotentiaire de Russie a déclaré aujourd'hui que sa Cour adhère à ce changement de titre, qui a obtenu déjà l'assentiment des deux autres Puissances garantes.

En conséquence, il est convenu d'un commun accord de substituer aux Articles II, IX, et XII, le titre de Roi des Hellènes à celui de Roi des Grecs.

Les Plénipotentiaires ont cru devoir constater en outre l'adhésion unanime de leurs Cours à un second changement de rédaction indiqué ci-après :—

Le Décret du $\frac{18}{30}$ Mars, 1863, cité à l'Article I, étant émané de l'Assemblée Nationale seule, il est convenu d'omettre dans le texte du susdit Article la mention du "Sénat," dont les fonctions législatives avaient cessé à l'époque où les vœux de la nation Hellénique ont appelé le Prince Guillaume de Danemark au Trône de la Grèce.

Les Plénipotentiaires réunis en Conférence ont constaté par le présent Protocole les changements apportés, d'ordre de leurs Cours, aux Articles I, II, IX, et XII, depuis l'échange des ratifications du Traité signé à Londres le 13 Juillet.

Messieurs les Représentants des Cours de France, de la Grande Bretagne, et de Russie, à Athènes, seront invités à porter ce Protocole à la connaissance du Gouvernement Hellénique.

In the name of the Most Holy and Indivisible Trinity.

THEIR Majesties the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Emperor of the French, and the Emperor of all the Russias, being anxious to smooth the difficulties which have occurred in the Kingdom of Greece, placed under their common guarantee, have judged it necessary to come to an understanding with regard to the arrangements to be taken in order to give effect to the wish of the Greek nation, which calls the Prince William of Denmark to the Hellenic Throne.

His Majesty the King of Denmark, on his part, responding to the invitation of their said Majesties, has consented to afford them his co-operation with a view to that result, conformable to the interests of the general peace.

In consequence, their Majesties the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Emperor of the French, and the Emperor of all the Russias, on the one part, and His Majesty the King of Denmark on the other, have resolved to conclude a Treaty, and have for that purpose named as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say :—

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Right Honourable John Earl Russell, Viscount Amberley of Amberley and Ardsalla, a Peer of the United Kingdom, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, a Member of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, Her Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs ;

His Majesty the Emperor of the French, the Sieur John Baptist Louis Baron Gros, a Senator of the Empire, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Her Britannic Majesty, Grand Cross of the Imperial Order of the Legion of Honour, Grand Cross of the Order of the Redeemer of Greece, of the Order of Isabella the Catholic of Spain, of the Pontifical Order of Pius IX, Commander of the Order of the Conception of Portugal, &c., &c., &c. ;

His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, the Sieur Philip Baron de Brunnow, His actual Privy Councillor, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Her Britannic Majesty, Knight of the Orders of Saint Andrew, of Saint Wladimir of the first class, of Saint Alexander Newski in diamonds, of the White Eagle, of Saint Anne of the first class, of Saint Stanislas of the first class, Grand Cross of the Imperial Order of the Legion of Honour, of Danebrog of Denmark in diamonds, and of the Order of the Redeemer of Greece of the first class, &c., &c., &c.;

And His Majesty the King of Denmark, the Sieur Torben de Bille, His Chamberlain, Commander of the Order of Danebrog, and decorated with the Cross of Honour of the same Order, His Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Her Britannic Majesty;

Who, after having exchanged their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon and signed the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

His Majesty the King of Denmark, in accordance with the Prince Christian of Denmark, acting in the character of guardian of his second son the Prince Christian William Ferdinand Adolphus George, accepts for that Prince, a minor, the hereditary sovereignty of Greece, which is offered to him by the Senate and the National Assembly of Greece in the name of the Hellenic nation.

ARTICLE II.

The Prince William of Denmark shall bear the title of George I, King of the Greeks.

ARTICLE III.

Greece, under the sovereignty of Prince William of Denmark, and the guarantee of the three Courts, forms a monarchical, independent, and constitutional State.

ARTICLE IV.

The limits of the Greek territory, determined by the arrangement concluded at Constantinople between the three Courts and the Ottoman Porte on the 21st of July, 1832, shall receive an extension by the union of the Ionian Islands with the Hellenic Kingdom, when such union, proposed by the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, shall have been found to be in accordance with the wishes of the Ionian Parliament, and shall have obtained the assent of the Courts of Austria, France, Prussia, and Russia.

ARTICLE V.

The Ionian Islands, when their union with the Kingdom of Greece shall have been effected, shall be comprised in the guarantee stipulated by Article III of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE VI.

In no case shall the Crown of Greece and the Crown of Denmark be united on the same head.

ARTICLE VII.

In conformity with the principle of the Hellenic Constitution recognized by the Treaty signed at London on the 20th of November, 1852, and proclaimed by the Decree of the National Assembly of Greece of the 30th of March, 1863, the legitimate successors of King George I must profess the tenets of the Orthodox Church of the East.

ARTICLE VIII.

The majority of Prince William of Denmark, fixed by the law of the Royal family at eighteen years complete, that is to say, on the 24th of December, 1863, shall be considered as attained before that date, if a Decree of the National Assembly should recognize the necessity thereof.

ARTICLE IX.

At the moment when the union of the Ionian Islands with the Hellenic Kingdom shall take place, according to the terms of Article IV of the present Treaty, Her Britannic Majesty will recommend to the Government of the United States of the Ionian Islands to appropriate annually a sum of ten thousand pounds sterling to augment the civil list of His Majesty George I, King of the Greeks.

ARTICLE X.

Each of the three Courts will give up in favour of Prince William of Denmark four thousand pounds a-year out of the sums which the Greek Treasury has engaged to pay annually to each of them, in pursuance of the arrangement concluded at Athens by the Greek Government, with the concurrence of the Chambers, in the month of June 1860.

It is expressly understood that these three sums, forming a total of twelve thousand pounds sterling annually, shall be destined to constitute a personal dotation of His Majesty the King, in addition to the civil list fixed by the law of the State.

ARTICLE XI.

The accession of Prince William to the Hellenic Throne shall not involve any change in the financial engagements which Greece has contracted by Article XII of the Convention signed at London on the 7th of May, 1832, towards the Powers guarantees of the loan.

It is equally understood that the Powers will in concert watch over the execution of the engagement taken by the Hellenic Government in the month of June 1860 upon the representation of the three Courts.

ARTICLE XII.

The three Courts shall, from this moment, use their influence in order to procure the recognition of Prince William of Denmark in the character of King of the Greeks by all the Sovereigns and States with whom they have relations.

ARTICLE XIII.

His Majesty the King of Denmark reserves to himself to take the measures which may be most proper for facilitating the arrival of King George I in his dominions as soon as possible.

ARTICLE XIV.

The three Courts will bring the present Treaty to the knowledge of the Greek Government, and will afford to that Government all the support in their power, while awaiting the speedy arrival of His Majesty the King.

ARTICLE XV.

The present Treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at London in six weeks, or sooner if possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Done at London, the thirteenth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three.

Protocol of Conference held at the Foreign Office, October 13, 1863.

Present :

The Plenipotentiaries of France ;
Great Britain ;
Russia ; and Denmark.

BY the Protocol of the 3rd of August the Plenipotentiary of Russia reserved to himself to announce to his Court the intention of His Majesty King George I to assume the title of King of the Hellenes, instead of that of King of the Greeks, mentioned in Articles II, IX, and XII of the Treaty of the 13th of July.

The Plenipotentiary of Russia now declared that his Court accedes to that change of title, which had already obtained the assent of the two other guaranteeing Powers.

In consequence, it was agreed by common consent to substitute in Articles II, IX, and XII the title of King of the Hellenes for that of King of the Greeks.

The Plenipotentiaries deemed it proper to place, moreover, upon record the unanimous accession of their Courts to the further verbal alteration indicated hereinafter.

The Decree of the $\frac{1}{30}$ th of March, 1863, referred to in Article I, having been issued by the National Assembly only, it was agreed to omit in the text of the said Article the mention of the "Senate," whose legislative functions had ceased at the time when the wish of the Hellenic nation called Prince William of Denmark to the Throne of Greece.

The Plenipotentiaries assembled in Conference recorded by the present Protocol these alterations made, by order of their Courts, in Articles I, II, IX, and XII subsequently to the exchange of the ratifications of the Treaty signed at London on the 13th of July.

The Representatives of the Courts of France, Great Britain, and Russia at Athens will be instructed to bring this Protocol to the knowledge of the Hellenic Government.

de Prusse ; et de Russie.

LE Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique pour les Affaires Etrangères s'étant entendu avec les Plénipotentiaires de France et de Russie, a annoncé que les trois Cours Protectrices s'accordent unanimement à penser—

1. Qu'il n'y a pas lieu d'insister sur la limitation des forces navales et militaires que la Grèce entretiendra dans les Iles Ioniennes, ainsi que le porte l'Article II du Traité du 14 Novembre.

2. Que les avantages de la neutralité établie par le même Article en faveur des Sept Iles devront s'appliquer seulement aux Iles de Corfou et de Paxo, ainsi qu'à leurs dépendances.

Afin de réaliser la pensée des Puissances signataires du Traité du 14 Novembre, le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat est d'avis qu'il suffit d'insérer dans le Traité à conclure avec la Grèce, un Article conçu dans les termes suivants :—

Protocol (A) of Conference held at the Foreign Office, January 25, 1864.

Present :

The Plenipotentiaries of Austria ;
France ;
Great Britain ;
Prussia ; and Russia.

THE Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of Her Britannic Majesty having come to an understanding with the Plenipotentiaries of France and Russia, announced that the three Protecting Courts are unanimously of opinion—

1. That it is not necessary to insist upon the limitation prescribed by Article II of the Treaty of the 14th of November, as to the naval and military forces to be maintained by Greece in the Ionian Islands.

2. That the advantages of neutrality established by the same Article in favour of the Seven Islands shall apply only to the Islands of Corfu and Paxo and their dependencies.

In order to carry out the intention of the signing Powers of the Treaty of the 14th of November, the Principal Secretary of State was of opinion that it would be sufficient to insert in the Treaty to be concluded with Greece an Article in the following terms:—

“The Courts of Great Britain, France, and Russia, in their character of guaranteeing Powers of Greece, declare, with the assent of the Courts of Austria and Prussia, that the Islands of Corfu and Paxo, as well as their dependencies, shall, after their union to the Hellenic Kingdom, enjoy the advantages of perpetual neutrality.

The Plenipotentiaries of Austria and Prussia gave their adhesion to the two modifications above mentioned, as well as to the wording of the Article as proposed by the Plenipotentiaries of the three Protecting Powers.

Protocole (B) de la Conférence tenue au Foreign Office, le 25 Janvier, 1864.

Présens :

Les Plénipotentiaires d'Autriche ;
de France ;
de la Grande Bretagne ;
de Russie.

LE Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique pour les Affaires Etrangères, en ouvrant la séance, a annoncé que les Plénipotentiaires des Cours de France, de la Grande Bretagne, et de Russie, conformément à la teneur de l'Article VI du Traité conclu à Londres le 14 Novembre, 1863, sont entrés déjà en communication avec le Gouvernement Hellénique, sur les arrangements que pourra nécessiter la réunion des Iles Ioniennes à la Grèce.

Afin de faciliter le succès de cette négociation, le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat a signalé l'opportunité de compléter, par un Protocole explicatif, les stipulations contenues dans l'Article IV, afin d'en préciser le sens de manière à prévenir toute fausse interprétation.

Dans ce but, il a constaté que les avantages acquis à la navigation et au commerce étrangers, en vertu des Traités conclus par le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique, en sa qualité de Protectrice de l'Etat Ionien, ne sont point permanents, mais limités dans leur durée. Par conséquent, ils ont besoin d'être renouvelés ou modifiés par de nouveaux arrangements, à l'époque où les Conventions en vertu desquelles ces avantages ont été concédés viendront à expirer, après les notifications d'usage.

Après cet exposé, le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat a invité les Plénipotentiaires, réunis en Conférence, à échanger leurs idées sur l'application des principes qu'il a cru devoir déférer à leur examen.

M. l'Ambassadeur d'Autriche a énoncé à ce sujet l'opinion de sa Cour dans les termes ci-après:—

Le Cabinet Impérial, en adhérant à la réunion des Iles Ioniennes au Royaume Hellénique, a cru devoir veiller, avec soin, à ce que ce changement, apporté à l'existence politique de l'Etat Septinsulaire, n'altérât en rien les avantages assurés aux sujets Autrichiens par les Traités et les Conventions conclus et actuellement en vigueur aux Iles Ioniennes, sous le régime du protectorat Anglais.

Dans cette vue, le Cabinet Impérial a essentiellement tenu à sauvegarder le maintien des privilèges légalement concédés à la Compagnie du Lloyd Autrichien. Ils se réfèrent principalement aux facilités accordées à la navigation du Lloyd, et consistent notamment dans la libera pratica, et dans l'exemption des droits de port, dont cette Compagnie jouit dans les Îles Ioniennes, en vertu de la Convention Postale conclue le 1 Décembre, 1853.

Le Traité de Commerce entre l'Autriche et la Grèce est loin de concéder les mêmes avantages à la navigation Autrichienne. Il s'en suit, que si, en fréquentant désormais les ports Ioniens, les bâtimens du Lloyd étaient soumis aux réglemens en vigueur en Grèce, ils éprouveraient un dommage réel. De plus, le cabotage étant réservé en Grèce à la navigation indigène, on pourrait, du moment où les ports Ioniens deviendraient Grecs, contester aux navires du Lloyd le droit de faire, comme à présent, leurs voyages réguliers entre les ports Ioniens et les ports Grecs.

Le paragraphe 3 de l'Article IV du Traité du 14 Novembre dernier a eu pour but d'obvier à cet inconvénient.

Le Cabinet Impérial est en droit de réclamer l'application pleine et entière du paragraphe précité en faveur des bateaux de la Compagnie du Lloyd : il consent cependant, à titre de concession, à ce que les dispositions de ce paragraphe ne restent en vigueur que jusqu'à la conclusion de nouvelles Conventions formelles ou d'arrangemens destinés à régler entre les parties intéressées les questions de commerce, de navigation, ainsi que celles du service régulier des communications postales.

De même, le Cabinet Impérial reconnaît au Gouvernement Hellénique le droit inhérent à chaque Etat indépendant d'élever ou d'abaisser ses tarifs de douane par mesures de législation intérieure.

M. l'Ambassadeur d'Autriche a tenu à constater, d'ordre de sa Cour, que le fait de la réunion des Îles Ioniennes à la Grèce ne saurait porter préjudice aux droits acquis au commerce et à la navigation de l'Autriche, en vertu de Traités actuellement en vigueur, aussi longtemps que de nouveaux arrangements à ce sujet n'auront pas été conclus entre les parties intéressées. Il a cru pouvoir insister d'autant plus sur ce point, que son Gouvernement avait le droit incontestable de s'en tenir purement et simplement aux stipulations du Traité du 14 Novembre dernier.

M. l'Ambassadeur de Prusse a donné à la déclaration ci-dessus son complet assentiment ; en constatant également, d'ordre de sa Cour, que le fait de la réunion des Îles Ioniennes à la Grèce ne saurait porter préjudice aux droits acquis au commerce et à la navigation de la Prusse et des autres États du Zollverein en vertu des Traités actuellement en vigueur.

Le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique, ainsi que les Ambassadeurs de France et de Russie, ont apprécié la justesse de ces explications, et exprimé l'intention d'en tenir compte dans la poursuite de la négociation confiée à leurs soins.

Dans ce but, le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique s'est chargé, au nom de la Conférence, de porter le présent Protocole explicatif à la connaissance du Cabinet d'Athènes.

Protocol (B) of Conference held at the Foreign Office, January 25, 1864.

Present :

The Plenipotentiaries of Austria ;
France ;
Great Britain ;
Russia.

THE Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of Her Britannic Majesty announced at the commencement of the meeting that the Plenipotentiaries of the Courts of France, Great Britain, and Russia had, in conformity with the provisions of Article VI of the Treaty concluded at London on the 14th of November, 1863, already entered into communication with the Hellenic Government, with regard to the arrangements which would become necessary in consequence of the union of the Ionian Islands to Greece.

In order to facilitate the success of that negotiation the Principal Secretary of State suggested that it would be desirable to complete, by an explanatory Protocol, the stipulations contained in Article IV, so that the sense thereof might be defined in such a manner as to prevent any misinterpretation.

With this view he pointed out that the advantages acquired by foreign navigation and commerce, in virtue of Treaties concluded by the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, in the character of Protector of the Ionian States, are not permanent, but limited in their duration. Consequently it would be necessary that they should be renewed or modified by fresh arrangements, at the time when the Conventions in virtue of which such advantages have been conceded should expire after the customary notices.

At the end of such term the Hellenic Government will be at liberty to come to an understanding with foreign Powers with regard to the arrangements to be made by mutual agreement for the purpose of regulating questions of commerce, customs, navigation, communication by post, &c., in a spirit favourable to the development of the relations between the respective countries.

After this statement the Principal Secretary of State invited the Plenipotentiaries assembled in Conference to communicate to each other their ideas as to the application of the principles which he had thought it desirable to submit to their consideration.

The Ambassador of Austria expressed in the following terms the opinion of his Court upon the subject :

The Imperial Cabinet, in acceding to the union of the Ionian Islands with the Hellenic Kingdom, has felt itself bound to take care that this change in the political existence of the Septinsular State shall in no way impair the advantages secured to Austrian subjects, by Treaties and Conventions concluded and actually in force in the Ionian Islands, under the system of British Protectorate.

With this view, the Imperial Cabinet has attached essential importance to the maintenance of the privileges lawfully conceded to the Company of the Austrian Lloyds. Those privileges refer chiefly to the facilities granted to the Lloyd's vessels, and especially comprise the libera pratica, and the exemption from port dues which that Company enjoys in the Ionian Islands, in virtue of the Postal Convention concluded on the 1st of December, 1853.

The Treaty of Commerce between Austria and Greece is far from conceding the same advantages to Austrian navigation. It therefore follows, that if the vessels of the Lloyd's, in henceforward visiting Ionian ports, were to be subjected to the regulations in force in Greece, they would sustain a real injury. Moreover, the coasting trade being reserved in Greece to national vessels, the right of the Lloyd's vessels to make, as at present, their regular voyages between Ionian ports and Greek ports, might, from the moment when Ionian ports become Greek ports, be disputed.

The object of the third paragraph of Article IV of the Treaty of the 14th of November was to obviate this inconvenience.

The Imperial Cabinet has the right to claim the full and entire application of the abovementioned paragraph in favour of the vessels of the Lloyd's Company ; but nevertheless it consents, by way of concession, that the arrangements of that paragraph shall remain in force only until the conclusion of new formal Conventions or of arrangements for the purpose of regulating between the parties concerned, questions of commerce and navigation, as well as questions relating to the regular service of communication by post.

The Imperial Cabinet moreover recognizes that the Hellenic Government possesses the right inherent in every independent State to raise or lower its Tariff of Customs by measures of internal legislation.

The Ambassador of Austria particularly insisted, by order of his Court, that the fact of the union of the Ionian Islands to Greece cannot prejudice the rights acquired by Austrian commerce and navigation in virtue of Treaties actually in force, so long as fresh arrangements on the subject shall not have been concluded between the respective parties. He claimed to insist the more strongly upon this point, because his Government had the incontestable right to abide purely and simply by the stipulations of the Treaty of the 14th of November last.

The Ambassador of Prussia gave his complete assent to the preceding declaration, and insisted likewise, by order of his Court, that the fact of the union of the Ionian Islands to Greece cannot prejudice the rights acquired by the commerce and navigation of Prussia and the other States of the Zollverein in virtue of Treaties actually in force.

The Principal Secretary of State of Her Britannic Majesty, as well as the Ambassadors of France and Russia, appreciated the justice of these explanations, and expressed the intention of giving them due weight in the prosecution of the negotiations entrusted to their care.

With this view the Principal Secretary of State of Her Britannic Majesty undertook, in the name of the Conference, to bring the present explanatory Protocol before the Cabinet of Athens.

RETURN to an Address of the Honourable the House of Commons, dated April 29, 1864;

“A Copy of the Arrangement concluded at Athens in June 1860 respecting the Greek Loan.”

No. 1.

Lord J. Russell to Sir T. Wyse.

Foreign Office, August 22, 1859.

WITH reference to your despatch of the 26th of May,* addressed to the Earl of Malmesbury, I have to state to you that Her Majesty's Government have had under their attentive consideration the Report of the Commission which, with the concurrence of the Greek Government, was appointed in 1857, on the part of Great Britain, France, and Russia, to inquire into the financial state of Greece, in consequence of the total failure on the part of the Greek Government to meet the charges on the Greek Loan as they became due, and the payment of which has therefore consequently for some years past entirely fallen on the three Guaranteeing Powers.

Her Majesty's Government have learned with the greatest satisfaction the perfect unanimity with which, after a long, laborious, and searching inquiry, the members of the Commission adopted the conclusions recorded in their Report, a unanimity which must tend strongly to impress on the Greek Government the necessity of those reforms in the financial administration of the country which the Greek Government are recommended at once to effect, and which, if steadily and faithfully carried out, will, Her Majesty's Government feel assured, not only enable Greece, with the actual resources at her command, to meet punctually her engagements towards the three Guaranteeing Powers, but will also materially insure the future well-being of that country.

With respect to the ulterior steps to be taken for giving due effect to the recommendation of the Commission, I have to instruct you, after consulting with your French and Russian colleagues, to address a note to the Greek Government embodying the results of the inquiries made by the Commission and the conclusions to which those inquiries have inevitably led. You will say that Her Majesty's Government, entirely concurring in the Report which has unanimously been adopted by the Representatives of the three Protecting Powers forming the Commission, have instructed you to urge on the Government of Greece the absolute necessity of adopting without delay the administrative and financial reforms recommended by them; that Her Majesty's Government, equally with the Governments of France and Russia, are not desirous unduly to press the Greek Government, and above all things are averse to retard the development of the industrial resources of Greece, and that therefore the three Protecting Powers have in concert, with all due regard to the wants of the State, fixed the minimum of the sum to be paid at first by Greece towards meeting the charges on the Loan at 900,000 francs, that sum to be afterwards increased in proportion to the improved state of the Greek finances at periods to be afterwards determined, when the question respecting the sinking fund of the debt shall be arranged.

Her Majesty's Government, from the knowledge which they have acquired of the financial resources of the country, feel assured that the Government of Greece will have no difficulty in setting aside the above-mentioned sum as its first payment, and in return for the moderation shown by the three Protecting Powers in fixing the amount those Powers may well consider that they have acquired a right to expect and to require that the Greek Government will carry out such an effectual system of reform in the

* Inclosing Report of Financial Commission. Report laid before Parliament, May 11, 1860.

Departments of the State as will entirely remove all cause of future complaint in consequence of the failure of the Greek Government to fulfil engagements solemnly contracted towards the three Powers.

You will add that if the Greek Government fails in discharging its duty in this respect the only course left for the three Protecting Powers to pursue will be rigorously to exact the execution of the XIIth Article of the Treaty of 1832, by which Greece binds herself to lay aside the first produce of Greek revenue towards the payment of the interest and sinking fund of the Loan.

I need scarcely add that you will on all occasions unreservedly consult with your colleagues as to the best mode of giving effect to the intentions of your respective Governments in regard to this matter, always bearing in mind that unanimity between you is indispensable to give full and entire effect to the object in view.

No. 2.

Sir T. Wyse to Lord J. Russell.—(Received October 29.)

(Extract.)

Athens, October 21, 1859.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith inclosed copy of a note addressed to-day to M. Coundouriotis.

Inclosure in No. 2.

Sir T. Wyse to M. Condouriotis.

Sir,

Athens, October 20, 1859.

HER Majesty's Government have had under their attentive consideration the Report of the Commission which, with the concurrence of the Greek Government, was appointed in 1857, on the part of Great Britain, France, and Russia, to inquire into the financial state of Greece, in consequence of the failure on the part of the Greek Government to meet the charges on the Greek loan as they came due, and the payment of which has therefore consequently for some time past entirely fallen on the three guaranteeing Powers.

Her Majesty's Government have in consequence instructed me to bring under the serious consideration of the Greek Government the results of the inquiries made by the Commission, and the conclusions to which those inquiries have inevitably led, and which are set forth in the Report, copy of which I have had the honour to transmit this day, on the part of the Commission, with the approbation of the Governments of the three guaranteeing Powers.

The Commission being duly constituted determined at its first meeting, for the purpose of facilitating their future labours, to proceed in the inquiry in the following order:—

1. Examination of the administration of the revenues and resources of the country.
2. Examination of the receipts and mode of collection.
3. Examination of the expenditure.
4. Examination of the reforms it might be advisable to propose.

After a long series of inquiries and discussions under each of these heads, the Commission came on each to the following conclusions:—

And first, with regard to the administration and the revenues, they found:

That the agents charged with administration as well as with the collection of the public revenues had evaded and combined to elude the proper surveillance and control of the State, though such surveillance is fully established by the legislation of the country.

That these several agents had not sufficiently applied the laws which regulate the financial administration of the country. That the Ministers charged with directing the expenditure had hitherto rendered no account to the country.

That the Ministers of Finance had in scarcely any instance since 1854 justified, by the production of the accounts which the law enjoined them to publish, the amount of the public revenue, nor the manner in which it had been applied; for although the accounts of 1850, 1851, 1852, had been completed on the first appointment of the Commission, the account of 1850 was the only one submitted to the Chambers, and no law confirming this account (Loi des Comptes) had since passed the Legislature.

That the Cour des Comptes (Audit Office) had not justified by its declarations of conformity and the Reports which it is bound to publish, that the administration had been conducted with regularity, and that consequently the accounts had not been what they ought to be; in a word, that it had not discharged the trust confided to it by the nation.

That the Chambers, which ought to have watched over of all the financial bodies of the State, had not acted with the punctuality and vigilance required from them by the Constitution.

That the judicial control not more than the Constitutional had been duly exercised, and that in consequence even the accounts actually produced by the Administration did not present all the legal guarantees of accuracy and authenticity required.

That the publicity and control of the acts of the Administration, which are the guarantees of the country and of the Protecting Powers, did not de facto exist.

In a word, that the administration of the finances of the country had not been and were not conducted with the necessary order.

And that consequently in reference to the second chapter of their inquiry, viz., the receipts:—

That the country did not draw from her soil and industry as much as under a better system of administration she would have had a right to expect.

That the property as well as several of the public imports and revenues did not return to the State what they ought.

That the national domains being neither defined nor well ascertained were exposed to diminution by constant encroachment.

That the “impôt foncier” in particular contained abuses universally recognized and injurious to the Public Treasury, while on the other hand this impost checked the development of agriculture, the principal resource of Greece.

That the income as well as the expenditure of the Communes had hitherto remained almost unknown to the State, thus eluding its superintendence, although charged with this duty by the law concerning the guardianship of the Communes, and that their prosperity was the principal element of the general prosperity of the nation.

That every year the amount of arrears augmented, thus involving in a dependence on the Treasury a large number of creditors.

That the laws intended to effectuate the liquidation of these arrears had not produced any serious result.

That this state of things reflected grave injury on the interests of the Treasury, at the same time that it seriously affected the industry of the nation.

And that in consequence, with reference to its resources, agricultural and commercial, they had not received that development of which they were capable, and of which the country stood so much in need.

And in reference to the expenditure:—

That the revenues of the country had increased without any attempt being made on the part of the Government to satisfy engagements contracted under the sanction of Treaties or promises solemnly reiterated to the three Powers.

That in proportion as the revenues and resources of the State increased, in the same proportion the expenditure augmented without presenting either in the situation of the country, or in works of public utility, or in encouragements given to industry or in any improvement originating in the State, a sufficient compensation for the sacrifices annually made by the three Protecting Powers.

That in proportion as the expenditure increased in regard to the receipts, the sums allocated in the annual budgets for the reimbursements of the sums due to the three Protecting Powers had annually diminished.

That in this situation all the sources of public credit open to those nations only who are faithful to their engagements were dried up for Greece, and that this situation, so painfully affecting the interests of the country, had become more and more aggravated every day; for even were the three Powers to sacrifice the interests due to their advances up to the 1st January, 1859, the debt would still stand at that date at 56,142,314 francs 75 centimes, and on the 1st March, 1870, the period when the holders of bonds would have their claims satisfied in full, it would have risen to a total of 121,528,198 francs 81 centimes.

That Article XII of the Convention of the 7th May, 1832, assigned the first revenues of Greece to the service of the interest and sinking fund of the loan.

And that in consequence, in conformity with the strict terms of the Convention, the service of the interest and sinking fund of the loan could even now be insisted on.

The Commission having arrived at these conclusions with regard to the three first branches of the inquiry proceeded to the consideration of the fourth, or the question of the reforms to be proposed, and after due examination and discuss decided to submit the following suggestions to their Governments:—

That the attention of the Greek Government should be seriously called, in order to apply a remedy to this state of things—

To the necessity of putting an end to the encroachments on the national domains, by means of a cadastre or national survey, or by the verification of the titles of property, or by such other measure as might best ensure such result.

To the benefits which would accrue to the interests alike of the taxpayer and of the Treasury by effective modifications in certain laws regulating the public imports, but especially in the “impôt foncier.”

To the necessity of giving to the financial laws of the country their full effect by an administration more firm and more vigilant than what had hitherto prevailed.

In fine, to the necessity of ensuring full publicity of, and effectual control over, the judicial and legislative powers created by the Constitution and especial laws at different times enacted for that purpose.

And in that view it is suggested at the Synods fixed by the law for the presentation of the Budget to the Chambers, the publication of the general report of the Cour des Comptes and its declarations of conformity, that printed copies of these documents, in sufficient numbers, be officially transmitted to the Legations of England, France, and Russia.

In conclusion, the Commission, after an attentive examination and consideration of the resources of the Greek Treasury, having arrived at the conviction that Greece, without injury to her public service or to her regular development, was at present fully able to contribute 900,000 francs to the sacrifices every year made on her behalf, it submitted to the three respective Governments that such sum ought to be fixed on as the minimum to be required from Greece for her first payment. Proviso, however, that in the presumption that the resources of the country would continue to increase, this sum should, at periods hereafter to be determined, be increased proportionably.

Her Majesty's Government concurring entirely in the report which has unanimously been adopted by the Representatives of the three protecting Powers forming the Commission, and in these premises has further instructed me to urge on the Government of Greece the absolute necessity of adopting without delay the administrative and financial reforms recommended by them. Her Majesty's Government equally with the Governments of France and Russia, are unwilling to press unduly the Greek Government, and above all things are averse to retard the development of the industrial resources of Greece, and that in consequence the three protecting Powers have in concert, with all due regard to the wants of the State, fixed the minimum of the sum to be paid at first by Greece towards meeting the charges on the Loan at 900,000 francs; that sum to be afterwards increased in proportion to the improved state of the Greek finances, at periods to be afterwards determined when the question respecting the sinking fund of the debt shall be arranged.

In return for the moderation shown by the three protecting Powers in fixing the amount, those Powers may well consider that they have acquired a right to expect and to require that the Greek Government will carry out such an effectual system of reform in the Departments of the State as will entirely remove all cause of future complaint in consequence of the failure of the Greek Government to fulfil engagements solemnly contracted towards the three Powers.

Her Majesty's Government, from the knowledge which they have acquired of the financial resources of the country, feel assured that the Government will have no difficulty in setting aside the same as its first payment.

I am further instructed to add that if the Greek Government fails in discharging its duty in this respect, the only course left for the three protecting Powers to pursue will be rigorously to exact the requisition of the XIIth Article of the Treaty of 1832, by which Greece binds herself to lay aside the first produce of Greek revenues towards the interest and sinking fund of the loan.

My Lord,

Athens, June 21, 1860.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith copy of a note which I have received this day from M. Condouriotis, in which he states that the Hellenic Government having obtained the necessary vote from the Legislative Chambers has authorized the King's Representatives at the Courts of London, Paris, and St. Petersburg to inform the Governments of the three Guaranteeing Powers that the sum of 900,000 francs is placed at their disposal, in accordance with the decision come to on the Report of the Financial Commission.

The Greek Ministers at the above mentioned Courts will be further instructed to make some observations upon certain assertions contained in the Report of the Finance Commission.

I have likewise the honour to inclose copy of my answer to M. Condouriotis' communication.

Athènes, le 9^e Juin, 1860.

L'OFFICE en date du 20 Octobre, 1859, que le très-honorable Sir Thomas Wyse m'avait fait l'honneur de m'adresser pour inviter le Gouvernement Hellénique, au nom de Sa Majesté la Reine de la Grande Bretagne, à contribuer au service de l'emprunt de soixante millions, par un versement annuel de 900,000 francs, a été pris en sérieuse considération.

Le Gouvernement du Roi tout en considérant que cette demande est très-éloignée des propositions qu'il avait spontanément soumises en 1856 aux trois Puissances garantes, et en disproportion avec ses besoins et ses ressources, s'est toutefois décidé à y faire droit en s'imposant plus d'un sacrifice et en bornant au strict nécessaire les dépenses de l'Etat.

J'ai en conséquence l'honneur de vous annoncer, Monsieur, que le crédit de 900,000 francs demandés dans ce but aux Chambres ayant été obtenu, le Gouvernement Royal vient de charger les Ministres du Roi à Londres, à Paris, et à St. Petersburg de porter à la connaissance des Puissances garantes que la somme ci-dessus mentionnée est à leur disposition, et à leur soumettre à la fois les observations nécessaires relativement à certaines assertions contenues dans le Rapport de la Commission Financière.

J'aime à espérer que l'empressement que le Gouvernement du Roi a mis à satisfaire à la demande des Puissances sera considéré à Londres comme une preuve de plus de sa sincérité à remplir ses engagements dans la mesure de ses forces.

Agréé, &c.

Sir,

Athens, June 9th, 1860.

THE communication dated the 20th of October, 1859, which the Right Honourable Sir Thomas Wyse did me the honour to address to me, inviting the Hellenic Government, in the name of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, to contribute to the settlement of the loan of sixty millions by a yearly payment of 900,000 francs, has been taken into serious consideration.

The Government of the King, while they consider that this demand is far removed from the proposals they had spontaneously submitted in 1856 to the three guaranteeing Powers, and disproportionate to their wants and their resources, has nevertheless determined to carry it out, by imposing on themselves more than one sacrifice, and confining the expenses of the State to what is strictly necessary.

I have consequently the honour to announce to you, Sir, that the vote of 900,000 francs, asked of the Chambers for this purpose, having been obtained, the Royal Government has instructed the King's Ministers in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg, to bring to the knowledge of the guaranteeing Powers that the above-mentioned sum is at their disposal, and to submit at the same time the necessary remarks relative to certain assertions contained in the Report of the Financial Commission.

I trust that the anxiety shown by the King's Government to satisfy the demand of the Powers will be considered in London as a further proof of their sincerity in fulfilling their engagements as far as lies in their power.

Accept, &c.

Correspondence respecting the Annexation of the Ionian Islands to the Kingdom of Greece.

No. 1.

Earl Russell to Lord A. Loftus.

My Lord, Foreign Office, May 16, 1863.

HER Majesty's Government find themselves compelled, as well as the Government of the Emperor of the French and the Government of the Emperor of Russia, to consider seriously the state of Greece.

Her Majesty's Government wish to show every mark of respect and regard to the Royal House of Bavaria. But, Great Britain being one of the Protecting Powers, they are bound to take into their immediate consideration the tranquillity and happiness of Greece.

King Otho having withdrawn from the Greek territory in the month of October last, no effort has since been made by the Greek nation to replace him on the Throne; nor has an intention been manifested in any quarter to attempt the restoration of His Majesty by a foreign force.

In these circumstances Her Majesty's Government think it incumbent upon them to state without reserve to the Court of Bavaria that they consider it an urgent and imperative duty on their part to endeavour to replace Greece under a Government conformable to the Monarchical principle, which they have an interest to maintain in a State to the foundation of which Great Britain has, in concert with other Powers, so greatly contributed.

With this view I have inquired of the Minister of Bavaria accredited to Her Majesty's Court whether he is authorized to attend a Conference of the three Powers at the Foreign Office on the affairs of Greece. But, as it does not appear that the Minister of Bavaria has received any authority for that purpose, a due regard to the pressing interests of Greece will require some further steps to be taken by Great Britain and the two other Protecting Powers for the maintenance of a regular form of government in that kingdom.

I am, &c.

No. 2.

Sir A. Paget to Earl Russell.—(Received June 9.)

My Lord, Copenhagen, June 6, 1863.

IN compliance with an invitation which I, in common with my French and Russian colleagues, received from the Marshal of the Palace, I proceeded to the Palace of Christiansborg this day at a quarter past 11 o'clock, to be present at the ceremony of the acceptance of the Crown of Greece by His Majesty the King of Denmark, on behalf of His Royal Highness the Prince William.

Shortly before 12 o'clock the King, preceded by the great officers of State, and followed by their Royal Highnesses the Hereditary Prince of Denmark, Prince Christian, Prince Frederick, and Prince William, entered the Throne Room and took his seat upon the Throne. The Hereditary Prince and Prince Frederick were upon His Majesty's right hand on the steps of the Throne, and Prince Christian and Prince William upon his left. Below the steps of the Throne, on the right hand, were placed the members of the Danish Ministry, on the left the officers of State, and in front of His Majesty, a little to the right, the Representatives of England, France, and Russia.

A few minutes after His Majesty was seated the Marshal of the Palace announced the arrival of the Deputation from the National Assembly of Greece, and being by His Majesty's orders invited to enter the Throne Room, they approached to within a short distance of the King, and Admiral Canaris, the President of the Deputation, made an address to His Majesty in Greek, of which I have the honour to inclose a translation. He then read the Decree of the National Assembly of Greece, recording the election of His Royal Highness the Prince William of Denmark as Constitutional King of the Greeks, under the title of George I.

The translation of His Majesty's reply, which was in Danish, is herewith inclosed.

The King then turned to King George, and requested His Majesty to approach. His Majesty made him a short and affectionate address, in which he congratulated him on his accession to sovereignty, and welcomed him as a brother. His Majesty said that he trusted that he would make the Greek nation as happy and as prosperous as he was fortunately able to think Denmark now was, and that he would find no surer way of doing this than by following the course which he (the King of Denmark) had adopted, namely, that of maintaining the Constitution and causing others to respect it. His Danish Majesty then took the Order of the Elephant, and placing the blue ribbon over King George's shoulder, desired him, in a voice deep with emotion, to keep it as a remembrance of his native land, and then embraced His Majesty on both cheeks.

The Greek Deputation withdrew, and the King shortly after left the Throne Room, leading King George by the hand, the procession following in the same order as it entered.

The ceremony, which combined the utmost solemnity with good taste and great feeling, was altogether a most imposing and touching one.

King George subsequently received the Greek Deputation at the Palace of Prince Christian, and Admiral Canaris delivered a short address in the terms of which I transmit a translation herewith, together with a translation of His Majesty's reply.

At 2 o'clock, M. Dotézac, Baron Nicolay, and myself were admitted to the honour of an audience of His Majesty, for the purpose of offering the expression of our felicitations.

There is a State dinner at the Palace of Christiansborg this evening, to which we are invited.

Address of the Greek Deputation to the King of Denmark.

Sire,

L'ASSEMBLEE Nationale de Grèce, dans sa séance du 18 Mars, a élu et proclamé Roi des Hellènes, sous le nom de Georges I, Son Altesse Royale le Prince Guillaume Georges de Danemark, et nous a honorés de la mission d'offrir la Couronne à Son Altesse Royale au nom du peuple Hellénique.

En remettant, Sire, entre les mains de votre Majesté le Décret de l'élection de Son Altesse Royale, nous espérons que la réponse de votre Majesté comblera les vœux et l'attente du peuple Hellénique.

Cette élection, Sire, est un hommage rendu à la personne de l'illustre Souverain à qui la Divine Providence a confié les destinées du Danemark, autant qu'une preuve de confiance dans les talents du jeune Prince. Elle servira, Sire, comme un lien entre deux nations qui se sont de tout temps distinguées par leurs vertus et leur patriotisme.

La Grèce, Sire, fondant toutes ses espérances sur son jeune Souverain, et confiante dans l'appui des trois Grandes Puissances bienfaitrices, a la ferme conviction qu'elle atteindra un jour l'accomplissement de ses vœux nationaux.

(Translation.)

Sire,

THE National Assembly of Greece, in its sitting of the 18th of March, elected and proclaimed as King of the Hellenes, under the name of George I, His Royal Highness Prince William George of Denmark, and has honoured us with the mission of offering the Crown to His Royal Highness in the name of the Hellenic nation.

In placing in your Majesty's hands, Sire, the decree of the election of His Royal Highness, we hope that your Majesty's reply will fulfil the wishes and expectations of the Hellenic people.

This election, Sire, is as much an act of homage rendered to the person of the illustrious Sovereign to whom Divine Providence has confided the destinies of Denmark as a proof of confidence in the talents in the young Prince. It will serve, Sire, as a bond between two nations which have at all times distinguished themselves by their virtues and their patriotism.

Greece, Sire, founding all her hopes on her young Sovereign, and confiding in the support of the three Great Powers, is firmly convinced that she will one day attain the accomplishment of her national aspirations.

Inclosure 2 in No. 2.

Reply of the King of Denmark.

NOUS acceptons pour notre jeune parent le Prince Guillaume Georges la Couronne que le peuple Grec l'a appelé à porter.

Dans les négociations poursuivies à Londres avec les trois Grandes Puissances qui ont si énergiquement contribué à la création du Royaume Grec et qui ont conservé tout leur intérêt pour sa prospérité, nous avons subordonné l'acceptation de la couronne à l'accomplissement de l'annexion des Iles Ioniennes au Royaume Hellénique. C'est avec une vive satisfaction que nous pouvons exprimer la confiance que cette annexion s'effectuera dans un terme rapproché. Nous avons désiré en effet que le jeune Roi lorsqu'il s'offrira la première fois à la vue de son peuple, puisse être salué comme apportant la réalisation de ce vœu si légitime et nourri depuis si longtemps.

Nous avons l'espoir qu'avec l'aide dévouée du peuple Hellénique il lui sera donné de développer les riches ressources du pays et de le conduire vers un bel et heureux avenir.

Ce vœu est partagé par tous ceux qui conservent le souvenir ineffaçable du grand passé de la Grèce et des luttes héroïques qu'elle a soutenues pour son indépendance. Et quand le jeune Roi quittera son pays natal, ce même vœu, sorti du cœur du Roi et du peuple de Danemark, l'accompagnera dans sa nouvelle patrie.

(Translation.)

WE accept for our young relative, Prince William George, the Crown which the Greek people has invited him to wear.

In the negotiations which have taken place in London with the three Great Powers who have so energetically contributed towards the creation of the Greek Kingdom, and who have retained all their interest in its prosperity, we have made the acceptance of the Crown dependent upon the accomplishment of the annexation of the Ionian Islands to the Hellenic Kingdom. It is with deep satisfaction that we are able to express our confidence that this annexation will be effected at no distant period. We were desirous, in fact, that the young King, when for the first time he shall present himself to the view of his people, might be saluted as bringing the realization of this wish so legitimate and for so long a time cherished.

We are in hopes that, with the devoted assistance of the Hellenic people, it will be granted to him to develop the rich resources of the country, and to lead it on to a fair and happy future.

This wish is shared by all those who preserve the indelible remembrance of the past greatness of Greece, and of the heroic struggles she has sustained for her independence. And when the young King shall quit his native country this same wish, sprung from the heart of the King and the people of Denmark, will accompany him in his new country.

Inclosure 3 in No. 2.

Address of the Greek Deputation to the King of the Hellenes.

DIEU soit béni, parcequ'il lui a plu de m'accorder à cet âge avancé la faveur de saluer votre Majesté comme Roi, et de présenter avec mes honorables collègues les félicitations de la Grèce.

Représentants de toute la race Hellénique, nous considérons ce jour comme le plus beau de notre vie, parceque nous venons déposer la foi et l'affection d'un peuple dont l'histoire et les souffrances le rendent digne de la sympathie de votre Majesté.

Par le décret de l'élection de votre Majesté la Grèce a remis entre les mains de son Souverain tout son avenir et toutes ses espérances, convaincue que, pénétré des grands devoirs qu'il aura à remplir, il se dévouera à la prospérité du pays et au développement des institutions libres de la nation.

Quant à moi, Sire, j'ai assez reçu pour pouvoir dire, après avoir vu ce jour, les paroles de Siméon, "Nunc, Domine, dimittas servum tuum."

(Translation.)

GOD be thanked that it has pleased Him to grant me, at this advanced age, the favour of saluting your Majesty as King, and to offer, with my honourable colleagues, the congratulations of Greece.

Representatives of the whole Hellenic race, we consider this day the fairest of our life, because we now give in trust the faith and affection of a people whose history and sufferings render it worthy of the sympathy of your Majesty.

By the Decree of the election of your Majesty Greece has placed in the hands of her Sovereign her whole future and all her hopes, convinced that, impressed with the great duties you will have to fulfil, you will devote yourself to the prosperity of the country and to the development of the free institutions of the nation.

As for me, Sire, I have received enough to enable me, after having seen this day, to say the words of Simeon, "Nunc, Domine, dimittas servum tuum."

Reply of the King of the Hellenes.

MON âme est pénétrée de joie en recevant aujourd'hui les premiers saluts des Représentants du peuple Grec, et j'éprouve une profonde émotion à les entendre de la bouche d'un homme dont le nom glorieux reste d'une manière impérissable lié à la renaissance de la Grèce. Je comprends dès à présent toute la responsabilité de la tâche qui m'est confiée, je promets d'y consacrer les meilleures forces de ma vie, et je compte sur le concours loyal et constant du peuple Grec pour atteindre notre but commun—le bonheur de la Grèce. Né et élevé dans un pays où l'ordre légal marche de front avec la véritable liberté constitutionnelle, et qui est ainsi parvenu à un développement fécond et bienfaisant, j'emporterai dans ma nouvelle patrie un enseignement qui ne sortira jamais de ma mémoire, et qui gravera dans mon cœur en traits ineffaçables la devise du Roi de Danemark, "L'amour du peuple est ma force."

MY soul is filled with joy at receiving to-day the first salutations of the Representatives of the Greek nation, and I experience a deep emotion at hearing them from the mouth of a man whose glorious name remains imperishably attached to the regeneration of Greece.

I comprehend from this moment all the responsibility of the task which is confided to me, I promise to devote to it the best energies of my life, and I reckon on the loyal and constant support of the Greek people to attain our common object—the welfare of Greece. Born and brought up in a country where legal order keeps pace with true constitutional liberty, and which has thus attained a fruitful and beneficent development, I shall carry into my new country a teaching which will never escape my memory, and which will engrave on my heart in indelible characters the motto of the King of Denmark, "The love of the people is my strength."

Earl Russell to Sir A. Paget.

Sir,

Foreign Office, June 17, 1863.

I HAVE received and laid before the Queen your despatch of the 6th June, containing a report of the formal acceptance by Prince William of Denmark of the Crown of Greece, with the title of George I.

Her Majesty's Government have learned with great satisfaction the happy termination of the mission of the Greek Deputation, and they earnestly hope that the reign of his Hellenic Majesty may be long and prosperous, and that the King of Denmark and Prince Christian will ever have cause to be content with his future career.

I have much pleasure in conveying to you on this occasion Her Majesty's entire approval of the manner in which you carried on the discussions with the Danish Government and with Prince Christian, which have now been brought to so prosperous an issue. Under circumstances of no small difficulty, and at times of much perplexity, you have steadily kept in view the instructions which I have given to you, and by your conciliatory and judicious conduct you have smoothed away many embarrassing questions which arose in the course of the negotiations.

Her Majesty's Government are rejoiced to hear that Count Sponneck will accompany the young King to Athens. His high reputation for ability and moderation justifies the most favourable anticipations of success in the promotion of free institutions and the maintenance of order.

Sir, Foreign Office, June 25, 1863.

I HAVE received your telegram of the 22nd instant, in which you inform me that you have been asked by the Greek Minister whether you propose to communicate to him the Protocols relative to the affairs of Greece which have been signed in London; and I stated in my telegram of the 24th instant that those documents should be forwarded to you to-day.

I now inclose the Protocols of three Conferences* which have been held at this office; by the first and second, of which you will see that the first step taken by the three Powers was to communicate with the Court of Bavaria; and by the third Protocol you will observe that the Crown of Greece has been duly accepted by the King of Denmark on behalf of his relative, Prince William of Denmark, who by Decree of the National Greek Assembly was elected King under the name of George I.

You will communicate those Protocols to the Greek Government, and you will express the hope of Her Majesty's Government that the events specially recorded in the third Protocol, and particularly the proposed union of the Ionian Islands with Greece, will contribute to the happiness and prosperity of the Greek nation.

Before making this communication, however, you will ask your French and Russian colleagues whether they will join you in making a similar communication, in which case it may be made simultaneously. If not you will make it alone.

My Lord, Vienna, July 2, 1863.

COUNT RECHBERG has alluded, in the course of a conversation with me, to his last despatch to Count Apponyi on the proposed cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece, and he made some observations as to arrangements existing between Austria and the Ionian Government, which he presumed would not be interfered with in the event of the islands belonging to Greece. I replied that I presumed these arrangements would become matter of negotiation during the Conferences which would be held to consider the whole question.

His Excellency added that the affair to which he specially alluded was one of great commercial importance to Austria,—the privileges enjoyed by the Austrian Lloyd's Company in the Ionian Islands. He understood that the question had already been mooted by interested parties whether the present arrangement was to continue. His impression was that it ought not to be interfered with, because he could not admit that an obligation contracted by either side should cease because the territory passed into other hands, and he considered the stipulations equally binding on the Government of the the Ionian Islands, whether their administration was carried on under the Protectorate of Great Britain or under the Government of the Kingdom of Greece.

I also inclose copy of a Protocol signed on the 3rd instant respecting the future title of the King. You will observe that the title "Roi des Hellènes" is the same with that given by M. Mavrocordato in his letter of the 31st March last to Mr. Elliot.

Sir A. Paget to Earl Russell.—(Received August 13.)

(Extract.)

Copenhagen, August 10, 1863.

COUNT SPONNECK has learnt that there was a project of Treaty communicated by your Lordship to the Representatives of the five Powers assembled in Conference for the affairs of Greece, which embodied two conditions relative to the annexation of the Ionian Islands, which he understood to be the upshot of communications which had taken place between Her Majesty's Government and the Cabinet of Vienna.

The first condition was the neutrality of the Ionian Islands; the second, that the fortifications of Corfu should be razed.

After speaking of the possible effect which the knowledge of these conditions might have in indisposing the Ionian Parliament to vote the annexation, for which reason it became of still greater importance to King George to have the vote before setting out for Greece, Count Sponneck said that if the union between the islands and the Kingdom was to be a real one (an incorporation, in short), as was apparently intended, he did not understand how the Islands could be neutralized without extending the neutrality to the rest of Greece.

Count Sponneck appears to have no objection to the razing of the fortifications.

Earl Russell to Mr. Scarlett.

Sir,

Foreign Office, August 27, 1863.

THERE are two corrections to be made in respect to the Treaty relating to the accession of Prince William of Denmark to the Throne of Greece.

In the First Article the hereditary Sovereignty of Greece is said to have been offered by the Senate and by the National Assembly of Greece.

This recital was taken from an incorrect document.

In point of fact, the National Assembly alone offered to Prince William the hereditary Sovereignty of Greece.

The second correction to be made is where King George is called "Roi des Grecs."

By a Protocol signed on the 3rd of August, 1863, the title of the Prince is to be "Roi des Hellènes."

But as the ratifications had been already sent off from Paris, Petersburg, and Copenhagen, when the Plenipotentiaries discovered that the insertion of the name of the

* Presented to Parliament, February 4, 1864.

Senate was a mistake, and when they agreed to alter the title of the King from "Roi des Grecs" to "Roi des Hellènes," it was thought better to exchange the ratifications of the Treaty with these imperfections than either to attempt an informal and irregular correction of them, or to frame a fresh Treaty free from these imperfections.

The Governments of France and Russia will be invited to direct their Ministers in Greece to sign with you a declaration explaining these circumstances to the Government of His Hellenic Majesty.

*Earl Russell to Lord Napier.

My Lord,

Foreign Office, August 31, 1863.

I TRANSMIT to your Excellency, for your information, a copy of a despatch I have addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Athens,† on the subject of certain corrections to be made with respect to the Treaty of the 13th of July last between Great Britain, France, and Russia on the one part, and Denmark on the other part, relative to the accession of Prince William of Denmark to the Throne of Greece.

I have to instruct your Excellency to call the attention of the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs to the imperfections in the Treaty, as shown in the despatch to Mr. Scarlett, and to state to his Excellency that Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that the regular way of correcting them would be, that Great Britain, France, and Russia, the Powers which in virtue of Article XIV of the Treaty are to communicate it to the Government of Greece, should, through their Ministers at Athens, present a joint declaration to that Government, explaining the causes of the defects; and you will accordingly propose this course to his Excellency, and invite him to send corresponding instructions to the Russian Minister in that city.

Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris has been directed to make a similar proposal to the French Government.

M. Drouyn de Lhuys expressed himself willing to make these corrections by means of a joint declaration to the Greek Government in the manner suggested by your Lordship; and he requests that you will be good enough to transmit, for his information, the draft of the Declaration which you propose should be addressed to the Hellenic Government.

Draft of Declaration.

THE Undersigned, &c., having received the commands of their respective Sovereigns that, in communicating to the Hellenic Government the annexed copy of the Treaty signed at London on the 13th of July last between France, Great Britain, and Russia, on the one part, and Denmark on the other part, relative to the accession of Prince William of Denmark to the Throne of Greece, as provided in Article XIV thereof, they should explain to that Government certain inaccuracies in the Treaty, proceed to do so in the following declaration:—

In Article I of the Treaty, the hereditary Sovereignty of Greece is said to have been offered to Prince William by the Senate and by the National Assembly of Greece.

This recital was taken from an incorrect document.

The second instance in which the Treaty is incorrect, is where in Articles II, IX, and XII, King George is called "Roi des Grecs."

By a Protocol signed on the 3rd of August, 1863, by the Plenipotentiaries who concluded the Treaty, the Minister of Denmark declared, on the part of King George, His Majesty's desire to take thenceforward the title of "Roi des Hellènes." The Plenipotentiaries of France and Great Britain agreed on the part of their respective Courts to recognize the new title. The Plenipotentiary of Russia reserved to himself the right to communicate to his Court the declaration of the Plenipotentiary of Denmark.

But as the ratifications of the Treaty had been already sent off from Paris, St. Petersburg, and Copenhagen, when the Plenipotentiaries discovered that the insertion of the name of the Senate was a mistake, and when the Plenipotentiaries of France and Great Britain agreed to the alteration of the title of King George from "Roi des Grecs" to "Roi des Hellènes," it was thought better to exchange the ratifications of the Treaty with these imperfections, than either to attempt an informal and irregular correction thereof, or to frame a fresh Treaty free from them.

In witness whereof the Undersigned, being duly authorized by their respective Governments, have signed the present declaration, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

I now transmit to your Excellency a draft of such declaration for submission to the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, and you will request his Excellency, if he approves the draft, to give the requisite instructions to the Russian Minister at Athens.

My Lord,

Athens, October 30, 1863.

I HAVE great pleasure in informing your Lordship of the safe arrival at Athens to-day of His Majesty King George I.

The "Hellas" frigate and her escorts, the "Revenge" and "Algesiras," arrived off the Piræus before 9 A.M., and before coming to anchor within the harbour all the ships of war in the Piræus manned yards and saluted.

The King landed soon after this and was most enthusiastically received on shore by the authorities, the National Guard, and people generally, both at the Piræus and at Athens.

After attending a Te Deum at the Cathedral, at which the whole Diplomatic Body were present, except Baron de Testa, the Austrian Minister, His Majesty was conducted amidst great applause to the Royal Palace.

Count Sponeck called upon me in the afternoon, with M. Calligas, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and I am to have an audience of the King to-morrow to present my credentials.

I take this opportunity of inclosing a copy of a Proclamation issued by the King, and distributed soon after His Majesty landed from the "Hellas."

To-night the whole town is illuminated and the King has been driving about in a carriage accompanied by a large crowd of people rejoicing. The greatest order prevails throughout Athens.

Hellènes,

EN montant sur le Trône auquel vos suffrages m'ont appelé, je sens le besoin de vous adresser quelques paroles.

Je ne vous apporte pas une habileté et une intelligence éprouvées, qualités que vous ne sauriez guère attendre de mon âge; mais je vous apporte une confiance et un dévouement sincères, unis à une croyance profonde dans l'identité future de vos destinées et des miennes. Je vous promets de consacrer ma vie entière à votre bonheur.

Non seulement je respecterai et j'observerai scrupuleusement vos lois, et avant tout la Constitution, pierre fondamentale du nouveau régime Hellénique, mais je révérai et j'apprendrai à aimer vos institutions, vos mœurs, votre langue, tout ce que vous vénerez, comme déjà je vous aime vous-mêmes. Je prierai les meilleurs et les plus habiles hommes de votre milieu de se grouper autour de moi, sans regarder des divergences politiques antérieurs, et je tâcherai, par leur assistance intelligente et éclairée, de développer les bons germes en tout sens et les ressources matérielles que possède votre belle patrie, qui désormais est aussi la mienne. D'en faire, autant que cela tient à moi, un royaume modèle dans l'Orient, sera le but de mon ambition.

Le Tout-Puissant, qui est fort dans les faibles, m'aidera dans mes efforts et ne me permettra jamais d'oublier les promesses solennelles que je viens de vous faire.

Sur quoi je prie Dieu de vous prendre dans sa sainte et sauve garde!

Hellenes,

IN ascending the Throne to which your suffrages have summoned me, I feel the necessity of addressing some words to you.

I do not bring to you an experienced ability and intellect, qualities which you would hardly expect of one of my age, but I bring to you a sincere confidence and devotion, united to a profound belief in the future identity of your destinies and of mine. I promise to consecrate my whole life to your welfare.

Not only will I scrupulously respect and observe your laws, and above all the Constitution, the foundation stone of the new Hellenic régime, but I will reverence and learn to love your institutions, your customs, your language, all that you venerate, as I already love yourselves. I shall pray the best and ablest men amongst you to come round me, without regard to former political differences, and I shall endeavour, with their intelligent and enlightened assistance, to develop the excellent capabilities and material resources possessed by your beautiful country, which is henceforward my own. To make of it, as far as lies with me, a model kingdom in the East will be the object of my ambition.

The Almighty, who is the strength of the weak, will aid me in my efforts, and will never permit me to forget the solemn promises which I have just made you.

Whereupon I pray God to take you under his holy and safe protection.

Mr. Scarlett's Speech on presenting his Letter of Credence to King George I.

Sire,

I ASK permission to place in your Majesty's hands my letter of credence from the Queen my august Sovereign, by which I am named her Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at the Court of your Majesty.

I am charged by the Queen to express the deep interest she feels in everything concerning your Majesty's welfare and happiness, and in the prosperity of your kingdom.

By the general wish of the Hellenic people, and with the concurrence of the three Protecting Powers, your Majesty has been called to reign over a nation endowed with some of the qualities of their illustrious ancestors, whilst others still dormant await only the impulse of a Constitutional Monarch to arouse them again into action.

To direct the public mind of Greece into safe and legitimate channels, and to develop the resources of a country now extensive in proportion to its population, is a great and glorious task, and one worthy of your Majesty.

The Queen and Her Majesty's Government look forward with hope that all your Majesty's efforts in that direction may be crowned with success. For myself, Sire, I shall endeavour to execute the duties of the post I have the honour to occupy with zeal for the Queen's service, and it will, I am sure, contribute also to Her Majesty's satisfaction as it will to mine, if at the same time I have your Majesty's confidence and approbation.

No. 17.

*Earl Russell to Lord Napier.

My Lord,

Foreign Office, November 11, 1863.

THE Assembly of the Ionian Islands at their recent meeting proposed to submit to the Protecting Sovereign a resolution on the subject of the fortifications of Corfu. But Her Majesty's Lord High Commissioner having refused to accept this resolution, as beyond the competence of the Assembly, the Assembly thereupon addressed to the Lord High Commissioner a representation, a copy of which I inclose.†

I have proposed, however, to the Ambassadors of Austria, France, Prussia, and Russia, who assembled in Conference at the Foreign Office on the 29th ultimo and on the 3rd of the present month, to consider the Articles of the Treaty for the union of the Ionian Islands to Greece without regard to this representation.

Her Majesty's Government, in fact, have certain obligations to the great Powers, which they are bound to fulfil.

The Treaty of November 1815 constituted the seven Ionian Islands a free and independent State, and placed them under the Protectorate of the Queen of Great Britain.

The fortresses were placed by Articles V and VI in the occupation of the Protecting Sovereign for the advantage of this State, and the exercise of the rights belonging to the Protectorate.

The object of the whole arrangement was to provide for the welfare of the Ionian Islands and the security of Europe.

The Sovereigns of Great Britain have anxiously sought to provide for these objects. With regard to the former, the Protectorate being about to cease, Her Majesty looks anxiously to the means of securing the future welfare of a State so long confided to her protection. Her Majesty has sought to provide for the prosperity and happiness of the Ionian people by promoting their union with a free State inhabited by a people of the same race, speaking the same language, and professing the same religion.

With regard to the second object various considerations occur. The Powers of Europe have been fully satisfied that under the Protectorate of Great Britain no European interest has been injured.

But the proposal of uniting the Ionian Islands with Greece has excited alarm in the neighbouring States of Austria and Turkey.

These States have expressed an apprehension that a revolutionary party, assisted by armed bands, may invade the provinces and raise troubles which the Greek Government, even with the best intentions, may not be able to prevent or to punish.

In this way the Island of Corfu especially might become a source of disorder, and armed volunteers defeated in Albania or Dalmatia might find a secure refuge within the walls of a strong fortress, from which they might again issue to disturb and ravage the neighbouring provinces of Austria and Turkey.

The tranquillity of the islands might thus be interrupted, and their prosperity destroyed, not only by revolutionary expeditions, but also by the measures necessary to combat and overthrow such wanton aggressions.

Impressed with these apprehensions the Government of the Emperor of Austria has proposed to Her Britannic Majesty two provisions of Treaty calculated to diminish, if not, to avert these dangers. The one, is the neutrality of the Ionian Islands; the other, the demolition of the fortifications of Corfu.

Her Majesty's Government bearing in mind the two objects, the welfare of the Ionian Islands and the security of Europe, are ready to accept these conditions. In their opinion the happiness of the Ionian Islands and of the Greek Kingdom will be best consulted by cultivating the arts of peace. A flourishing commerce, a prosperous agriculture, not taxed beyond the means of the country for the maintenance of large military forces, will be the best fruits of a free and independent Greece. An army disproportioned to the resources of Greece, a foreign policy of an aggressive and ambitious kind, are evils to be avoided by the statesmen of Greece.

Her Majesty is prepared, in conjunction with France and Russia, to guarantee the independence of the new kingdom when the Ionian Islands shall be united to it.

Her Majesty, therefore, looking as well to the internal welfare of Greece and of the Ionian Islands as to the external repose and security of her allies the Emperor of Austria and the Sultan of Turkey, is prepared to recommend to the Powers who signed the Treaty of November 1815 and the Treaty of 1832 for the protection and the guarantee of Greece, the adoption of a Treaty securing the neutrality of the Ionian Islands and the demolition of the fortifications of Corfu.

THE Assembly of the Ionian States—

Having taken into consideration the Message of his Excellency the Lord High Commissioner, dated the 6th of October, 1863, n.s., and with reference to its decision of the 23rd of September, 1863, respecting the union of the Seven Islands with the Kingdom of Greece—

Decides—

Article 1. As soon as the British Protectorate established in these States in virtue of the Treaty of Paris of the 5th of November, 1815, shall legally cease, and until the establishment of the new Constitution of Greece, with the intervention of Ionian Representatives, His Majesty the King of the Hellenes is authorized to exercise over the Ionian Islands and their dependencies all rights of sovereignty, and in such manner (ὅσα οἷα καὶ ὅς) as he shall exercise them in the rest of the Kingdom of Greece :

Art. 5. Her Britannic Majesty's Government having given a full quittance for the sum of 90,289*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*, arrears of the military contribution, as well as for every other claim on its part of any nature, the Assembly proclaims Her Majesty's Government quit and free from any claim on the part of the Ionian States.

Art. 6. The present deliberation shall be submitted to the approval of Her Majesty the Sovereign Protectress, on receiving which it shall be carried into execution.

Inclosure 3 in No. 18.

To Her Majesty Queen Victoria I, Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and Protectress of the United States of the Ionian Islands.

Representation of the Ionian Assembly.

THE Ionian Assembly having decided in favour of the union of the Septinsular State with the Kingdom of Greece in one and indivisible State, and having taken into consideration the proposals of the Lord High Commissioner for the completion of such union, thought it right to propose that the question of the giving over of the forts and fortifications should be regulated by a Special Article, inasmuch as no mention was made of this in the proposals communicated to the Assembly.

His Excellency the Lord High Commissioner, by a Message of the 18th instant, announced to the Assembly that this question was beyond the limits of the competency of any Ionian authority.

Under the sorrowful impression produced by this communication, the Assembly thinks it an indispensable duty to represent respectfully the rights of the Ionian people on a question so strictly connected with their real national restoration, and the interests and rights of the new Greek Kingdom.

Not to call to recollection earlier political events, the Treaty of Paris, 5th November, 1815, though stipulated without the intervention of the Ionians, recognized the forts and fortifications as the property of the Ionian State, and by Articles V and VI their occupation was entrusted to the Protecting Power, for the sole object that it should keep a garrison in them for the defence of this State and the exercise of the rights of the Protectorate having relation thereto. A provision was made at the same time for the expense which the Ionian State should incur for the preservation of the existing forts and the payment of the British forces.

Besides the sums granted by the Ionian State for the payment of the army, and the preservation of the forts from the year 1818 to 1824, His Majesty the Protecting Sovereign called upon the Assembly to vote a certain sum for the repair and completion of the forts of Corfu, as well as of those of Vido, thus again recognizing the right of property in the Ionian State over its forts; and the Ionian Parliament, acceding to the Royal proposition, for the purpose of securing the forts from any sudden attack, passed an Act, dated the 19th March, 1825, granting the sum of 164,000*l.*, and subsequently, in consequence of a Message of his Excellency the Lord High Commissioner, dated 30th May, 1833, passed another Act, 1st June, 1833, granting another sum of 15,000*l.* for the same purpose.

Finally, by a Resolution of the 11th January, 1836, the expense for the preservation of these forts, jointly with the payment of the garrison, was fixed at 35,000*l.* yearly, and by another Resolution of the 18th December, 1849, at 25,000*l.*

Besides these sums, the Ionian State has granted indemnity, and continues to do so, for the property of Municipal Bodies and private individuals within and outside the forts, which have been either occupied or destroyed for the completion of the same.

From these facts it results indisputably, that not only the Ionian State has always retained the property in the forts and fortifications, but has readily paid every sum demanded for their preservation and completion.

There could, therefore, be no reason to deny the competence of the Ionian Assembly on a subject relating to the property of the Ionian State, especially at a moment when, owing to the cessation of the Protectorate, the occupation also by the Protecting Power of the forts, which were entrusted to it for the exclusive purpose of the Protectorate, is about to cease.

The Union having once been decided on, as with any other part of the Greek Kingdom so also with the Septinsular State which has been fused with it, the sovereign rights of this Kingdom over its territory cannot undergo the least diminution.

The forts of the Septinsular State, in days of great dangers, were the bulwark of Christianity and civilization—with the blood of the children of the Ionian State they were so often watered; and without these forts there is no security from foreign attacks, which the Ionians had in view to prevent since the year 1833, although the Septinsular State was then under the powerful British protection.

The Assembly, relying upon the rights of the Septinsular people, trusts that these rights will not be in any way misunderstood or impaired.

Europe, which has shown so much interest for the establishment of the new Greek Kingdom, and has respected its sovereign rights in every other particular, will not allow its own creation to be destroyed by the adoption of measures for which no other justification would be given than the position of the weak in the presence of the strong.

The Assembly, however, trusts that your Majesty, who has afforded such generous assistance to the national restoration of the Ionian people, will kindly look into the justice of this representation, and will impress on the hearts of the Ionians more lively sentiments of eternal gratitude.

Mr. Scarlett to Earl Russell.—(Received November 18.)

My Lord,

Athens, November 7, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to forward herewith to your Lordship copy of a note in which M. Calligas informs me officially that King George I has made his solemn entrance into Athens, and that he has taken possession of the Hellenic Throne.

I also inclose my reply to that document.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 1 in No. 19.

M. Calligas to Mr. Scarlett.

M. le Ministre,

Athènes, le $\frac{19}{31}$ Octobre, 1863.

LA Grèce, en traversant les crises qui ont eu pour conséquence la déchéance d'une dynastie, n'a point dévié du principe Monarchique Constitutionnel, comme offrant les garanties d'ordre, et lui assurant, en même temps, la place qu'elle s'est déjà acquise dans la famille des Etats Européens.

L'Assemblée Nationale, légalement convoquée et issue du suffrage universel, librement exercé, a, par son Décret du $\frac{18}{30}$ Mars, 1863, proclamé Son Altesse Royale le Prince Christian Guillaume Ferdinand Adolphe Georges, fils puiné de Son Altesse Royale le Prince Christian de Danemark, Roi Constitutionnel des Hellènes, sous le titre de Georges I, Roi des Hellènes.

A la suite de ce Décret, les Représentants des trois Puissances bienfaitrices, réunis en Conférence, à Londres, le 16 et 27 Mai, et le 5 Juin, 1863, ont donné l'adhésion de leurs Cours respectives aux actes en vertu desquels Son Altesse Royale a été, du consentement de Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemark, et de son père Son Altesse Royale le Prince Christian, appelé au Trône Hellénique, sous le titre de Georges I, Roi des Hellènes.

Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemark, par ses lettres patentes du 10 Juin de la même année, a accepté, au nom de Son Altesse Royale, la souveraineté héréditaire du Royaume de Grèce, à la condition de l'annexion des Iles Ioniennes, que l'Angleterre, qui en avait le protectorat, laissait, par un esprit de loyauté et de bienveillance à la fois, libres de se prononcer elles-mêmes si elles voulaient faire partie du Royaume Hellénique.

En partageant les mêmes sentiments, la France et la Russie, de concert avec l'Angleterre, ont converti les Protocoles en Traité définitif, conclu et signé, à Londres, le 13 Juillet, 1863, entre elles et Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemark, et dont les ratifications ont été échangées le 3 Août de la même année.

Dans l'intervalle l'Assemblée Nationale, par son Décret du $\frac{1}{2}\frac{5}{7}$ Juin, 1863, a déclaré le Roi majeur, à dater de ce même jour, et le Parlement Ionien, convoqué ad hoc, a exprimé ses vœux, dans la séance du ^{23 d Septembre}_{5 Octobre} de cette année, pour la réunion de cet Etat à la Grèce.

C'est à la suite de ces actes et de ce Traité que Sa Majesté le Roi mon auguste Souverain, appelé au Trône Hellénique par les vœux unanimes de la nation et par le concours bienveillant des trois Puissances bienfaitrices, la Grande Bretagne, la France, et la Russie, a fait hier son entrée solennelle à sa capitale, et a pris aujourd'hui possession de son Trône, après avoir prêté serment, conformément au Décret de l'Assemblée.

Ainsi, la Grèce, entrant dans la voie de l'ordre et du progrès, espère, sous un règne paisible et éclairé, développer ses ressources et consolider son avenir.

En portant à votre connaissance cette heureuse nouvelle, je ne doute pas, M. le Ministre, qu'elle ne soit accueillie par votre Gouvernement avec ces sentiments d'amitié et de bienveillance que Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande a constamment témoignés à la Grèce.

M. le Ministre, Athens, October $\frac{1}{3}\frac{1}{1}$, 1863.

GREECE, in passing through the crisis whose consequence has been the fall of a Dynasty, has not deviated from the principle of Constitutional Monarchy, as offering guarantees of order, and securing her, at the same time, the place she has already acquired in the family of European States.

The National Assembly, legally convoked, and the issue of the universal suffrage freely exercised, has by its Decree of the $\frac{1}{3}\frac{8}{10}$ th March, 1863, proclaimed His Royal Highness Prince Christian William Ferdinand Adolphus George, younger son of His Royal Highness the Prince Christian of Denmark, Constitutional King of the Hellenes, under the title of George I, King of the Hellenes.

In pursuance of this Decree, the Representatives of the three Protecting Powers, met in Conference in London the 16th and 27th of May, and the 5th of June, 1863, gave the adhesion of their respective Courts to the acts in virtue of which His Royal Highness has been, by the consent of His Majesty the King of Denmark, and of his father His Royal Highness Prince Christian, called to the Hellenic Throne under the title of George I, King of the Hellenes.

His Majesty the King of Denmark, by his Letters-Patent of the 10th June of the same year, has accepted, in the name of His Royal Highness, the hereditary sovereignty of the Kingdom of Greece, on condition of the annexation of the Ionian Islands, which England, who held the protectorate of them, in a spirit of loyalty and goodwill, left free to pronounce for themselves if they wished to become a part of the Hellenic Kingdom.

Partaking the same sentiments, France and Russia, in concert with England, have changed the Protocols into a definitive Treaty, concluded and signed in London on the 13th July 1863, between themselves and His Majesty the King of Denmark, the ratifications of which were exchanged on the 3rd of August of the same year.

In the interval the National Assembly, by its Decree of the $\frac{1}{2}\frac{5}{7}$ th June 1863, declared the King of age, to date from that day, and the Ionian Parliament, convoked for that purpose, expressed its wishes in the sitting of the ^{23 d September}_{5th October} of that year for the reunion of that State to Greece.

In consequence of these acts and of this Treaty, His Majesty the King my august Sovereign, called to the Hellenic Throne by the unanimous votes of the nation, and by the benevolent consent of the three Protecting Powers, Great Britain, France, and Russia, yesterday made his solemn entry into his capital, and to-day took possession of his Throne, after having taken the oath, conformably to the Decree of the Assembly.

Thus Greece, entering into the path of order and progress, hopes, under a peaceful and enlightened reign, to develop her resources, and strengthen her future.

In bringing to your knowledge this happy intelligence, I doubt not, M. le Ministre, that it will be welcomed by your Government with the same sentiments of friendship and goodwill which Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland has continually shown towards Greece.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge your note of October $\frac{19}{31}$, informing me officially of the acts which have led so happily to the establishment of His Majesty George I as King of the Hellenes.

I will not fail to transmit a copy of that communication to Earl Russell by the first opportunity, and whilst awaiting his Lordship's reply to my despatch inclosing it I will limit myself to the expression of my hope that the events which have lately occurred in Greece will make a very favourable impression, and be considered of good augury for its future prosperity not only in the country I have the honour to represent, but throughout the world.

Sir,

Athens, November 7, 1863.

THE arrival of King George in his new dominions, and the tranquillity happily prevailing at Athens, seem to me to render unnecessary the continued occupation of the National Bank at Athens by a foreign force.

If the King's Government is also of that opinion it is desirable that His Majesty's commands should be taken on that subject, and in concert with my colleagues of France and Russia I will, after obtaining His Majesty's permission, take the necessary steps for the withdrawal of that force.

M. le Ministre,

Athènes, le ^{27 Octobre}_{8 Novembre}, 1863.

JE me suis empressé de placer sous les yeux du Roi, et de communiquer aussi au Conseil des Ministres, l'office que vous m'avez fait l'honneur de m'adresser en date du 7 Novembre.

Le Gouvernement Royal partage entièrement l'opinion que vous y exprimez, et considère qu'en effet l'ordre étant maintenant consolidé à Athènes, après l'heureuse, arrivée en Grèce de Sa Majesté, la petite force armée des trois grandes Puissances bien-faitrices placée à la garde de la Banque Nationale à la suite des événements douloureux de Juin, devient aujourd'hui superflue.

Je viens, en conséquence, vous prier de vous entendre, à ce sujet, avec vos collègues de France et de Russie, afin que la force armée en question soit retirée.

Je crois devoir remplir, en même temps, M. le Ministre, un devoir, en vous exprimant les vifs remerciements du Gouvernement Royal pour l'empressement que vous et vos deux autres collègues avez mis à sauvegarder par cette mesure, dans des circonstances vraiment critiques, un si important établissement de la Grèce.

M. le Ministre,

Athens, ^{October 27}_{November 8}, 1863.

I HASTENED to lay before the King, and also to communicate to the Council of Ministers, the note which you did me the honour to address me under date of the 7th November.

The King's Government partakes entirely of the opinion which you express therein, and considers in fact that since order is now established at Athens, after the happy arrival in Greece of His Majesty, the small armed force of the three protecting Powers placed on guard at the National Bank in consequence of the painful events of June has now become superfluous.

I therefore beg you to come to an understanding on this subject with your French and Russian colleagues, in order that the armed force in question may be withdrawn.

I think it my duty at the same time, M. le Ministre, to express to you the sincere thanks of the Royal Government for the readiness which you and your two other colleagues have shown in preserving by this measure, under really critical circumstances, so important an establishment of Greece.

Accept, &c.

Mr. Scarlett to Vice-Admiral Smart.

Sir,

Athens, November 9, 1863.

THE peaceable accession of King George to the Throne of Greece and the entire tranquillity happily reigning at Athens appear both to my French and Russian colleagues and to myself to make it now desirable that there should be no further military occupation of the National Bank at Athens by the troops of England, France, or Russia.

I have taken the King's commands on the subject through Count Sponneck, and I have ascertained that His Majesty and the Hellenic Government are also desirous that this force should be withdrawn.

Under these circumstances I think it right to state that I do not deem it expedient that the British marines at the Bank should continue in the occupation of that establishment, and if you should concur with me in this opinion you will probably have no objection to re-embark them on board Her Majesty's ships at the Piræus as soon as ever you find it convenient to do so.

For your additional information I herewith inclose copies of the official correspondence I have had on this subject with M. Delyanni, the King's Minister of Foreign Affairs.

I have great pleasure in stating that the excellent conduct and high state of discipline of the British troops have been the theme of universal praise at Athens, and in their frequent relations with Her Majesty's Legation both officers and men have given me at all times entire satisfaction.

Sir, "Marlborough," Piræus of Athens, November 11, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt, this afternoon, of your despatch of the 9th instant, inclosing a copy of your letter of the 7th to the Minister of Foreign Affairs at Athens, together with his reply of the 8th instant, respecting the withdrawal from the National Bank at Athens of the armed force landed by the Protecting Powers of Greece for the security of that establishment.

The commands of His Majesty the King of the Hellenes as conveyed to you through Count Sponneck shall be obeyed, and the British marines will be withdrawn as soon as I have arranged with Rear-Admiral d'Aboville the simultaneous removal of the French force, which I propose should be carried into effect on Friday next the 13th instant at noon.

I have, &c.

Mr. Scarlett to M. Delyanni.

Sir, Athens, November 12, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that I have arranged with the Vice-Admiral in command of the British naval forces at the Piræus to withdraw, to-morrow at 12 A.M., the British marines from the National Bank at Athens for the purpose of re-embarking these troops in the vessels to which they belong.

I hasten to give you notice of this intention in order that a national force may be substituted at that time for the foreign protection which is happily no longer necessary at that establishment.

I will only in conclusion add my earnest hope that the unanimity and enthusiasm of loyal feeling so widely manifested in favour of the King of the Hellenes throughout Greece may tend to eradicate every germ of national discord, and that all parties may at length cordially unite in acts of patriotism and in support of the King's authority.

No. 22.

Mr. Hammond to Sir E. Lugard.

Sir, Foreign Office, January 6, 1864.

I AM directed by Earl Russell to communicate to you, for the information of Earl de Grey, the copy of the Treaty of the 14th of November in the shape in which it was ratified on the 2nd instant.

I am desired to point out to you that by the IIIrd Article the fortifications constructed on the Island of Corfu and its immediate Dependencies are to be demolished.

This demolition is to be effected before the withdrawal of the troops employed by Her Majesty in the occupation of the Islands. The demolition is to be made in the manner which Her Majesty shall judge sufficient for fulfilling the intentions of the High Contracting Parties.

Lord Russell considers that those intentions would be fulfilled if Corfu were deprived of the main works which constitute it a strong fortress, and which would enable any foreign Power or any revolutionary band to withstand a regular siege by the military forces of any of the Great Powers of Europe.

The intentions of the Powers who constructed the Treaty of November 14 would be misinterpreted and perverted if Corfu were wantonly to be deprived of any of those ancient fortifications which do not constitute the real strength of the place, but the demolition of which might not only destroy the chief ornament of the town, but endanger the dwellings of the inhabitants.

Lord Russell, judging from the information placed at his disposal by Earl de Grey, is inclined to think that the demolition of the fort of Vido and of Fort Abraham, and the dismantling of the citadel, Fort Neuf, and other fortifications, would answer the object in view, and fulfil the intentions of the High Contracting Parties.

Should Earl de Grey concur in this opinion, the dismantling of the fortresses and the removal of warlike stores should immediately commence, and preparations should be made for the demolition of the fort on the Island of Vido, and of Fort Abraham, before the expiration of three months from the ratification of the Treaty about to be made between the three Protecting Powers and the Kingdom of Greece.

I am, &c.
(Signed) E. HAMMOND.

No. 23.

Earl Russell to Mr. Scarlett.

Sir,

Foreign Office, January 28, 1864.

I HAVE the satisfaction to send you the draft of a Treaty between the three Protecting Powers and Greece, together with copies of Protocols A and B, signed at the Foreign Office on the 25th instant.

You must understand, and give the Greek Government to understand, that Austria only agrees to the modification of the Article of the Treaty of November 14, which regards neutrality, on condition that Articles III and VII, which respect commercial relations, are agreed to in their present shape.

The Greek Government will, I am sure, be struck with the care which the three Protecting Powers have shown in securing the interests of the Hellenic Monarchy, and in removing the obstacles to the union of the Ionian Islands with Greece. Her Majesty's Government, on their part, in making the voluntary surrender of the Protectorate of the Ionian Islands, have been animated by the hope that this valuable addition to Greek territory might prove the source of increased prosperity and confirmed tranquillity.

The union to Greece of a kindred people will, it is the fervent hope of Her Majesty's Government, tend to enlarge the commerce, and give fresh vigour to the energies of a free and happy State.

I am, &c.
(Signed) RUSSELL.

Inclosure 1 in No. 23.

Projet de Traité.

Préambule.

SA Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande a fait connaître à l'Assemblée Législative des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes qu'en vue de réunir éventuellement ces Iles au Royaume de Grèce, elle était prête, si le Parlement Ionien en exprimait le vœu, à faire abandon du Protectorat de ces Iles, confié à Sa Majesté par le Traité conclu à Paris le 5 Novembre, 1815, entre les Cours de la Grande Bretagne, d'Autriche, de Prusse, et de Russie. Ce vœu ayant été manifesté par un vote de la dite

Assemblée Législative, rendu à l'unanimité des voix le 7^o Octobre, 1863, Sa Majesté Britannique a consenti par l'Article I du Traité conclu le 14 Novembre, 1863, entre Sa Majesté l'Empereur d'Autriche, l'Empereur des Français, le Roi de Prusse, et l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, à renoncer au dit Protectorat, sous de certaines conditions spécifiées dans le Traité précité.

De leur côté, Leurs Majestés l'Empereur d'Autriche, l'Empereur des Français, le Roi de Prusse, et l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, ont consenti par le même Article et sous les mêmes conditions à accepter cette renonciation, et à reconnaître, conjointement avec Sa Majesté Britannique, l'union de ces Iles au Royaume de Grèce.

En vertu de l'Article V du Traité signé à Londres le 13 Juillet, 1863, il a été convenu, en outre, d'un commun accord, entre Sa Majesté Britannique et Leurs Majestés l'Empereur des Français et l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, que les Iles Ioniennes, lorsque leur réunion au Royaume de Grèce aurait été effectuée comme l'Article IV du même Traité l'a prévu, seraient comprises dans la garantie stipulée en faveur de la Grèce par les Cours de la Grande Bretagne, de France, et de Russie, en vertu de la Convention signée à Londres le 7 Mai, 1832.

En conséquence, d'accord avec les stipulations du Traité du 13 Juillet, 1863, et conformément aux termes de l'Article VI du Traité du 14 Novembre, 1863, par lequel les Cours de la Grande Bretagne, de France, et de Russie, en leur qualité de Puissances garantes du Royaume de Grèce, se sont réservé de conclure un Traité avec le Gouvernement Hellénique sur les arrangements que pourra nécessiter la réunion des Iles Ioniennes à la Grèce, Leurs dites Majestés ont résolu de procéder à négocier avec Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes un Traité, à l'effet de mettre à exécution les stipulations ci-dessus mentionnées.

Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes ayant donné son assentiment à la conclusion de ce Traité, Leurs dites Majestés ont nommé pour leurs Plénipotentiaires, savoir :—

Etc., etc.

ARTICLE I.

Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, désirant réaliser le vœu que l'Assemblée Législative des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes a exprimé de voir ces Iles réunies à la Grèce, a consenti, sous les conditions spécifiées ci-après, à renoncer au Protectorat des Iles de Corfou, Céphalonie, Zante, Sainte-Maure, Ithaque, Cerigo, et Paxo, avec leurs dépendances, lesquelles, en vertu du Traité signé à Paris le 5 Novembre, 1815, par les Plénipotentiaires de la Grande Bretagne, d'Autriche, de Prusse, et de Russie, ont été constituées en un seul Etat libre et indépendant sous la dénomination "d'Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes," placé sous la protection immédiate et exclusive de Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, ses héritiers et successeurs.

En conséquence, Sa Majesté Britannique, Sa Majesté l'Empereur des Français, et Sa Majesté l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, en leur qualité de signataires de la Convention du 7 Mai, 1832, reconnaissent cette union, et déclarent que la Grèce, dans les limites déterminées par l'arrangement conclu à Constantinople, entre les Cours de la Grande Bretagne, de France, et de Russie, avec la Porte Ottomane le 21 Juillet, 1832—y compris les Iles Ioniennes—formera un Etat Monarchique, indépendant, et constitutionnel, sous la Souveraineté de Sa Majesté le Roi George et sous la garantie des trois Cours.

ARTICLE II.

Les Cours de France, de la Grande Bretagne, et de Russie, en leur qualité de Puissances garantes de la Grèce, déclarent, avec l'assentiment des Cours d'Autriche et de Prusse, que les Iles de Corfou et de Paxo, ainsi que leurs dépendances, après leur réunion au Royaume Hellénique, jouiront des avantages d'une neutralité perpétuelle.

Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes s'engage, de son côté, à maintenir cette neutralité.

ARTICLE III.

La réunion des Iles Ioniennes au Royaume Hellénique n'apportera aucun changement aux avantages concédés au commerce et à la navigation étrangers, en vertu de Traités et de Conventions conclus par les Puissances étrangères avec Sa Majesté Britannique, en sa qualité de Protectrice des Iles Ioniennes.

Tous les engagements qui résultent des dites transactions, ainsi que des réglemens y relatifs, actuellement en vigueur, seront maintenus et strictement observés comme par le passé.

En conséquence il est expressément entendu que les bâtimens et le commerce étrangers dans les ports Ioniens, de même que la navigation entre les ports Ioniens et ceux de la Grèce, continueront à être soumis au même traitement et placés dans les mêmes conditions qu'avant la réunion des Iles Ioniennes à la Grèce, et cela jusqu'à la conclusion de nouvelles Conventions formelles ou d'arrangements destinés à régler entre les parties intéressées les questions de commerce, de navigation, ainsi que celles du service régulier des communications postales.

ARTICLE IV.

La réunion des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes au Royaume de Grèce n'invalidera en rien les principes établis par la législation existante de ces Iles, en matière de liberté du culte et de tolérance religieuse; conséquemment, les droits et immunités consacrés en matière de religion par les Chapitres I et V de la Charte Constitutionnelle des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes, et spécialement la reconnaissance de l'Eglise Grecque Orthodoxe comme religion dominante dans ces Iles, l'entière liberté du culte accordée à l'Eglise de l'Etat de la Puissance Protectrice, et la parfaite tolérance promise aux autres communions Chrétiennes, seront maintenus après l'union dans toute leur force et valeur.

La protection spéciale garantie à l'Eglise Catholique Romaine, ainsi que les avantages dont elle est présentement en possession, seront également maintenus; et les sujets appartenant à cette communion jouiront dans les Iles Ioniennes de la même liberté de culte qui leur a été reconnue en Grèce par le Protocole du 3 Février, 1830.

Le principe de l'entière égalité civile et politique entre les sujets appartenant aux divers rites, consacré en Grèce par le même Protocole, sera pareillement en vigueur dans les Iles Ioniennes.

ARTICLE V.

L'Assemblée Législative des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes ayant décrété par une résolution rendue le $\frac{7}{19}$ Octobre, 1863, que la somme de dix mille livres sterling par an serait affectée, en paiements mensuels, à augmenter la Liste Civile de Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes, de manière à constituer la première charge à prélever sur la recette des Iles Ioniennes, Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes s'engage à mettre ce décret dûment à exécution.

ARTICLE VI.

Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, Sa Majesté l'Empereur des Français, et Sa Majesté l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, sont convenues de faire abandon en faveur de Sa Majesté le Roi Georges I, chacune de quatre mille livres sterling par an, sur les sommes que le trésor Grec s'est engagé à payer annuellement à chacune d'elles, en vertu de l'arrangement conclu à Athènes par le Gouvernement Grec, avec le concours des Chambres Grecques, au mois de Juin 1860.

Il est expressément entendu que ces trois sommes, formant un total de douze mille livres sterling annuellement, seront destinées à constituer une dotation personnelle de Sa Majesté le Roi Georges I, en sus de la Liste Civile fixée par la loi de l'Etat. L'avènement de Sa Majesté au Trône Hellénique n'apportera d'ailleurs aucun changement aux engagements financiers que la Grèce a contractés par l'Article XII de la Convention du 7 Mai, 1832, envers les Puissances garantes de l'emprunt, ni à l'exécution de l'engagement pris par le Gouvernement Hellénique, au mois de Juin 1860, sur la représentation des trois Cours.

ARTICLE VII.

Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes s'engage à prendre à sa charge tous les engagements et contrats légalement conclus par le Gouvernement des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes, ou en leur nom par la Puissance protectrice de ces Iles, conformément à la Constitution des Iles Ioniennes, soit avec des Gouvernements étrangers, soit avec des Compagnies et Associations, soit avec des individus privés; et promet de remplir les dits engagements et contrats dans toute leur étendue, comme s'ils avaient été conclus par Sa Majesté ou par le Gouvernement Hellénique. Dans cette catégorie se trouvent spécialement compris: la dette publique des Iles Ioniennes; les privilèges concédés à la Banque Ionienne, à la Compagnie Maritime connue sous le nom de Lloyds Autrichien, conformément à la Convention Postale du 1 Décembre, 1853, et à la Compagnie de Gaz de Malte et de la Méditerranée.

ARTICLE VIII.

Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes promet de prendre à sa charge:—

1. Les pensions accordées à des sujets Britanniques par le Gouvernement Ionien, conformément aux règles établies aux Iles Ioniennes en matière de pensions.

2. Les indemnités dues à certains individus actuellement au service du Gouvernement Ionien, lesquels perdront leurs emplois par suite de l'union des Iles à la Grèce.

3. Les pensions dont plusieurs sujets Ioniens jouissent, en rémunération de services rendus au Gouvernement Ionien.

Une Convention spéciale, conclue entre Sa Majesté Britannique et Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes, déterminera le chiffre de ces différentes allocations, et règlera le mode de leur payement.

ARTICLE IX.

Les autorités civiles et les forces militaires de Sa Majesté Britannique seront retirées du territoire des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes dans l'espace de trois mois, ou plus tôt si faire se peut, après la ratification du présent Traité.

ARTICLE X.

Le présent Traité sera ratifié, et les ratifications en seront échangées à Londres dans le délai de six semaines, ou plus tôt si faire se peut.

En foi de quoi, &c.

Draft of Treaty.

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland made known to the Legislative Assembly of the United States of the Ionian Islands that, with a view to the eventual union of those Islands to the Kingdom of Greece, she was prepared, if the Ionian Parliament should express a wish to that effect, to abandon the Protectorate of those Islands, confided to Her Majesty by the Treaty concluded at Paris on the 5th of November, 1815, between the Courts of Great Britain, Austria, Prussia, and Russia. Such wish having been expressed by a vote of the said Legislative Assembly passed unanimously on the 7th October, 1863, Her Britannic Majesty consented, by Article I of the Treaty concluded on the 14th of November, 1863, between Her Majesty, the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of the French, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor of all the Russias, to renounce the said Protectorate under certain conditions specified in that Treaty.

On their part, their Majesties the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of the French, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor of all the Russias, consented by the same Article, and under the same conditions, to accept such renunciation, and to recognize, in conjunction with Her Britannic Majesty, the union of those Islands to the Kingdom of Greece.

In virtue of Article V of the Treaty signed at London on the 13th of July, 1863, it was moreover agreed by common consent between Her Britannic Majesty and their Majesties the Emperor of the French and the Emperor of all the Russias, that the Ionian Islands, when their union to the Kingdom of Greece should have been effected as contemplated by Article IV of the same Treaty, should be comprised in the guarantee stipulated in favour of Greece by the Courts of Great Britain, France, and Russia, in virtue of the Convention signed at London on the 7th of May, 1832.

In consequence, and in accordance with the stipulations of the Treaty of the 13th of July, 1863, and with the terms of Article VI of the Treaty of the 14th of November, 1863, whereby the Courts of Great Britain, France, and Russia, in their character of Guaranteeing Powers of the Kingdom of Greece, reserved to themselves to conclude a Treaty with the Hellenic Government as to the arrangements which might become necessary in consequence of the union of the Ionian Islands to Greece, Their said Majesties have resolved to proceed to negotiate with His Majesty the King of the Hellenes a Treaty for the purpose of carrying into execution the stipulations above mentioned.

His Majesty the King of the Hellenes having given his assent to the conclusion of such Treaty, Their said Majesties have named as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say :—
Etc., etc.

ARTICLE I.

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, desiring to realize the wish expressed by the Legislative Assembly of the United States of the Ionian Islands, that those Islands should be united to Greece, has consented, on the conditions hereinafter specified, to renounce the Protectorate over the Islands of Corfu, Cephalonia, Zante, Santa Maura, Ithaca, Cerigo, and Paxo, with their dependencies, which, in virtue of the Treaty signed at Paris on the 5th of November, 1815, by the Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain, Austria, Prussia, and Russia, were constituted a single free and independent State, under the denomination of "the United States of the Ionian Islands," placed under the immediate and exclusive protection of His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, his heirs and successors.

In consequence, Her Britannic Majesty, His Majesty the Emperor of the French, and His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, in their character of signing parties to the Convention of the 7th of May, 1832, recognize such union, and declare that Greece, within the limits determined by the arrangement concluded at Constantinople between the Courts of Great Britain, France, and Russia, and the Ottoman Porte, on the 21st of July, 1832,—including the Ionian Islands,—shall form a monarchical, independent, and constitutional State, under the Sovereignty of His Majesty King George and under the guarantee of the three Courts.

ARTICLE II.

The Courts of France, Great Britain, and Russia, in their character of guaranteeing Powers of Greece, declare, with the assent of the Courts of Austria and Prussia, that the Islands of Corfu and Paxo, as well as their dependencies, shall, after their union to the Hellenic Kingdom, enjoy the advantages of perpetual neutrality.

His Majesty the King of the Hellenes engages, on his part, to maintain such neutrality.

ARTICLE III.

The union of the Ionian Islands to the Hellenic Kingdom shall not involve any change as to the advantages conceded to foreign commerce and navigation in virtue of Treaties and Conventions concluded by foreign Powers with Her Britannic Majesty, in her character of Protector of the Ionian Islands.

All the engagements which result from the said transactions, as well as from the regulations actually in force in relation thereto, shall be maintained and strictly observed as hitherto.

In consequence, it is expressly understood that foreign vessels and commerce in Ionian ports, as well as the navigation between Ionian ports and the ports of Greece, shall continue to be subject to the same treatment, and placed under the same conditions, as before the union of the Ionian Islands to Greece, until the conclusion of new formal Conventions, or of arrangements destined to regulate between the parties concerned, questions of commerce and navigation, as well as questions relating to the regular service of communication by post.

ARTICLE IV.

The union of the United States of the Ionian Islands to the Kingdom of Greece shall in no wise invalidate the principles established by the existing legislation of those Islands with regard to freedom of worship and religious toleration; accordingly the rights and immunities established in matters of religion by Chapters I and V of the Constitutional Charter of the United States of the Ionian Islands, and specifically the recognition of the Orthodox Greek Church as the dominant religion in those Islands; the entire liberty of worship granted to the Established Church of the Protecting Power; and the perfect toleration promised to other Christian communions,—shall, after the union, be maintained in their full force and effect.

The special protection guaranteed to the Roman Catholic Church, as well as the advantages of which that Church is actually in possession, shall be equally maintained; and the subjects belonging to that communion shall enjoy in the Ionian Islands the same freedom of worship which is recognized in their favour by the Protocol of the 3rd of February, 1830.

The principle of entire civil and political equality between subjects belonging to different creeds, established in Greece by the same Protocol, shall be likewise in force in the Ionian Islands.

ARTICLE V.

The Legislative Assembly of the United States of the Ionian Islands having decreed by a resolution passed on the 17th of October, 1863, that the sum of ten thousand pounds sterling a year shall be appropriated, in monthly payments, to augment the Civil List of His Majesty the King of the Hellenes, so as to constitute the first charge upon the revenue of the Ionian Islands, His Majesty the King of the Hellenes engages to carry that Decree duly into execution.

ARTICLE VI.

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, His Majesty the Emperor of the French, and His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, agree to relinquish in favour of His Majesty King George I, each four thousand pounds sterling a year, out of the sums which the Greek Treasury has engaged to pay annually to each of them, in virtue of the arrangement concluded at Athens by the Greek Government, with the concurrence of the Greek Chambers, in the month of June 1860.

It is expressly understood that these three sums, forming a total of twelve thousand pounds sterling annually, shall be destined to constitute a personal dotation of His Majesty King George I, in addition to the Civil List fixed by the law of the State. The accession of His Majesty to the Hellenic Throne shall not otherwise involve any change in the financial engagements which Greece has contracted by Article XII of the Convention of May 7, 1832, towards the Powers guarantees of the Loan, nor in the execution of the engagement taken by the Hellenic Government in the month of June 1860, upon the representation of the three Courts.

ARTICLE VII.

His Majesty the King of the Hellenes engages to take upon himself all the engagements and contracts lawfully concluded by the Government of the United States of the Ionian Islands, or in their name by the Protecting Power of those Islands, conformably to the Constitution of the Ionian Islands, whether with foreign Governments, with Companies and Associations, or with private individuals; and promises to fulfil the said engagements and contracts fully and completely, as if they had been concluded by His Majesty or by the Hellenic Government. Under this head are specially included: the public debt of the Ionian Islands; the privileges conceded to the Ionian Bank, to the Navigation Company known under the name of the Austrian Lloyds, in conformity with the Postal Convention of the 1st of December, 1853, and to the Malta and Mediterranean Gas Company.

ARTICLE VIII.

His Majesty the King of the Hellenes promises to take upon himself,—

1. The pensions granted to British subjects by the Ionian Government, in conformity with the rules established in the Ionian Islands respecting pensions.

2. The compensation allowances due to certain individuals actually in the service of the Ionian Government, who will lose their employments in consequence of the union of the Islands to Greece.

3. The pensions which several Ionian subjects are in the enjoyment of, in remuneration of services rendered to the Ionian Government.

A special Convention to be concluded between Her Britannic Majesty and His Majesty the King of the Hellenes shall determine the amounts of these different heads, and shall regulate the mode of their payment.

ARTICLE IX.

The civil authorities and the military forces of Her Britannic Majesty shall be withdrawn from the territory of the United States of the Ionian Islands in three months, or sooner if possible, after the ratification of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE X.

The present Treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at London in six weeks, or sooner if possible.

In witness whereof, &c. &c.

1. Qu'il n'y a pas lieu d'insister sur la limitation des forces navales et militaires que la Grèce entretiendra dans les Iles Ioniennes, ainsi que le porte l'Article II du Traité du 14 Novembre.

2. Que les avantages de la neutralité établie par le même Article en faveur des Sept Iles devront s'appliquer seulement aux Iles de Corfou et de Paxo, ainsi qu'à leurs dépendances.

Afin de réaliser la pensée des Puissances signataires du Traité du 14 Novembre, le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat est d'avis qu'il suffit d'insérer dans le Traité à conclure avec la Grèce, un Article conçu dans les termes suivants:—

"Les Cours de France, de la Grande Bretagne, et de Russie, en leur qualité de Puissances garantes de la Grèce, déclarent, avec l'assentiment des Cours d'Autriche et de Prusse, que les Iles de Corfou et de Paxo, ainsi que leurs dépendances, après leur réunion au Royaume Hellénique, jouiront des avantages d'une neutralité perpétuelle.

"Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes s'engage, de son côté, à maintenir cette neutralité."

Protocol (A) of Conference held at the Foreign Office, January 25, 1864.

Present :

The Plenipotentiaries of Austria ;

France ;

Great Britain ;

Prussia ; and

Russia.

THE Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of Her Britannic Majesty having come to an understanding with the Plenipotentiaries of France and Russia, announced that the three Protecting Courts are unanimously of opinion—

1. That it is not necessary to insist upon the limitation prescribed by Article II of the Treaty of the 14th of November, as to the naval and military forces to be maintained by Greece in the Ionian Islands.

2. That the advantages of neutrality established by the same Article in favour of the Seven Islands shall apply only to the Islands of Corfu and Paxo and their dependencies.

In order to carry out the intention of the signing Powers of the Treaty of the 14th of November, the Principal Secretary of State was of opinion that it would be sufficient to insert in the Treaty to be concluded with Greece an Article in the following terms:—

"The Courts of Great Britain, France, and Russia, in their character of guaranteeing Powers of Greece, declare, with the assent of the Courts of Austria and Prussia, that the Islands of Corfu and Paxo, as well as their dependencies, shall, after their union to the Hellenic Kingdom, enjoy the advantages of perpetual neutrality.

"His Majesty the King of the Hellenes engages, on his part, to maintain such neutrality."

The Plenipotentiaries of Austria and Prussia gave their adhesion to the two modifications above mentioned, as well as to the wording of the Article as proposed by the Plenipotentiaries of the three Protecting Powers.

Protocole (B) de la Conférence tenue au Foreign Office, le 25 Janvier, 1864.

Présens :

Les Plénipotentiaires d'Autriche ;
de France ;
de la Grande Bretagne ;
de Russie.

LE Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique pour les Affaires Etrangères, en ouvrant la séance, a annoncé que les Plénipotentiaires des Cours de France, de la Grande Bretagne, et de Russie, conformément à la teneur de l'Article VI du Traité conclu à Londres le 14 Novembre, 1863, sont entrés déjà en communication avec le Gouvernement Hellénique, sur les arrangements que pourra nécessiter la réunion des Iles Ioniennes à la Grèce.

Afin de faciliter le succès de cette négociation, le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat a signalé l'opportunité de compléter, par un Protocole explicatif, les stipulations contenues dans l'Article IV, afin d'en préciser le sens de manière à prévenir toute fausse interprétation.

Dans ce but, il a constaté que les avantages acquis à la navigation et au commerce étrangers, en vertu des Traités conclus par le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique, en sa qualité de Protectrice de l'Etat Ionien, ne sont point permanents, mais limités dans leur durée. Par conséquent, ils ont besoin d'être renouvelés ou modifiés par de nouveaux arrangements, à l'époque où les Conventions en vertu desquelles ces avantages ont été concédés viendront à expirer, après les notifications d'usage.

Après cet exposé, le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat a invité les Plénipotentiaires, réunis en Conférence, à échanger leurs idées sur l'application des principes qu'il a cru devoir déférer à leur examen.

M. l'Ambassadeur d'Autriche a énoncé à ce sujet l'opinion de sa Cour dans les termes ci-après :—

Le Cabinet Impérial, en adhérant à la réunion des Iles Ioniennes au Royaume Hellénique, a cru devoir veiller, avec soin, à ce que ce changement, apporté à l'existence politique de l'Etat Septinsulaire, n'altérât en rien les avantages assurés aux sujets Autrichiens par les Traités et les Conventions conclus et actuellement en vigueur aux Iles Ioniennes, sous le régime du protectorat Anglais.

Le Traité de Commerce entre l'Autriche et la Grèce est loin de concéder les mêmes avantages à la navigation Autrichienne. Il s'en suit, que si, en fréquentant désormais les ports Ioniens, les bâtiments du Lloyd étaient soumis aux réglemens en vigueur en Grèce, ils éprouveraient un dommage réel. De plus, le cabotage étant réservé en Grèce à la navigation indigène, on pourrait, du moment où les ports Ioniens deviendraient Grecs, contester aux navires du Lloyd le droit de faire, comme à présent, leurs voyages réguliers entre les ports Ioniens et les ports Grecs.

Le Cabinet Impérial est en droit de réclamer l'application pleine et entière du paragraphe précité en faveur des bâteaux de la Compagnie du Lloyd : il consent cependant, à titre de concession, à ce que les dispositions de ce paragraphe ne restent en vigueur que jusqu'à la conclusion de nouvelles Conventions formelles ou d'arrangements destinés à régler entre les parties intéressées les questions de commerce, de navigation, ainsi que celles du service régulier des communications postales.

M. l'Ambassadeur d'Autriche a tenu à constater, d'ordre de sa Cour, que le fait de la réunion des Iles Ioniennes à la Grèce ne saurait porter préjudice aux droits acquis au commerce et à la navigation de l'Autriche, en vertu de Traités actuellement en vigueur, aussi longtemps que de nouveaux arrangements à ce sujet n'auront pas été conclus entre les parties intéressées. Il a cru pouvoir insister d'autant plus sur ce point, que son Gouvernement avait le droit incontestable de s'en tenir purement et simplement aux stipulations du Traité du 14 Novembre dernier.

M. l'Ambassadeur de Prusse a donné à la déclaration ci-dessus son complet assentiment; en constatant également, d'ordre de sa Cour, que le fait de la réunion des Iles Ioniennes à la Grèce ne saurait porter préjudice aux droits acquis au commerce et à la navigation de la Prusse et des autres États du Zollverein en vertu des Traités actuellement en vigueur.

Le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique, ainsi que les Ambassadeurs de France et de Russie, ont apprécié la justesse de ces explications, et exprimé l'intention d'en tenir compte dans la poursuite de la négociation confiée à leurs soins.

Protocol (B) of Conference held at the Foreign Office, January 25, 1864.

Present :

The Plenipotentiaries of Austria ;
France ;
Great Britain ;
Russia.

THE Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of Her Britannic Majesty announced at the commencement of the meeting that the Plenipotentiaries of the Courts of France, Great Britain, and Russia had, in conformity with the provisions of Article VI of the Treaty concluded at London on the 14th of November, 1863, already entered into communication with the Hellenic Government, with regard to the arrangements which would become necessary in consequence of the union of the Ionian Islands to Greece.

In order to facilitate the success of that negotiation the Principal Secretary of State suggested that it would be desirable to complete, by an explanatory Protocol, the stipulations contained in Article IV, so that the sense thereof might be defined in such a manner as to prevent any misinterpretation.

With this view he pointed out that the advantages acquired by foreign navigation and commerce, in virtue of Treaties concluded by the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, in the character of Protector of the Ionian States, are not permanent, but limited in their duration. Consequently it would be necessary that they should be renewed or modified by fresh arrangements, at the time when the Conventions in virtue of which such advantages have been conceded should expire after the customary notices.

At the end of such term the Hellenic Government will be at liberty to come to an understanding with foreign Powers with regard to the arrangements to be made by mutual agreement for the purpose of regulating questions of commerce, customs, navigation, communication by post, &c., in a spirit favourable to the development of the relations between the respective countries.

After this statement the Principal Secretary of State invited the Plenipotentiaries assembled in Conference to communicate to each other their ideas as to the application of the principles which he had thought it desirable to submit to their consideration.

The Ambassador of Austria expressed in the following terms the opinion of his Court upon the subject :—

The Imperial Cabinet, in acceding to the union of the Ionian Islands with the Hellenic Kingdom, has felt itself bound to take care that this change in the political existence of the Septinsular State shall in no way impair the advantages secured to Austrian subjects, by Treaties and Conventions concluded and actually in force in the Ionian Islands, under the system of British Protectorate.

With this view, the Imperial Cabinet has attached essential importance to the maintenance of the privileges lawfully conceded to the Company of the Austrian Lloyds. Those privileges refer chiefly to the facilities granted to the Lloyd's vessels, and especially comprise the libera pratica, and the exemption from port dues which that Company enjoys in the Ionian Islands, in virtue of the Postal Convention concluded on the 1st of December, 1853.

The Treaty of Commerce between Austria and Greece is far from conceding the same advantages to Austrian navigation. It therefore follows, that if the vessels of the Lloyd's, in henceforward visiting Ionian ports, were to be subjected to the regulations in force in Greece, they would sustain a real injury. Moreover, the coasting trade being reserved in Greece to national vessels, the right of the Lloyd's vessels to make, as at present, their regular voyages between Ionian ports and Greek ports, might, from the moment when Ionian ports become Greek ports, be disputed.

The object of the third paragraph of Article IV of the Treaty of the 14th of November was to obviate this inconvenience.

The Imperial Cabinet has the right to claim the full and entire application of the above-mentioned paragraph in favour of the vessels of the Lloyd's Company; but nevertheless it consents, by way of concession, that the arrangements of that paragraph shall remain in force only until the conclusion of new formal Conventions or of arrangements for the purpose of regulating between the parties concerned, questions of commerce and navigation, as well as questions relating to the regular service of communication by post.

The Imperial Cabinet moreover recognizes that the Hellenic Government possesses the right inherent in every independent State to raise or lower its Tariff of Customs by measures of internal legislation.

The Ambassador of Austria particularly insisted, by order of his Court, that the fact of the union of the Ionian Islands to Greece cannot prejudice the rights acquired by Austrian commerce and navigation in virtue of Treaties actually in force, so long as fresh arrangements on the subject shall not have been concluded between the respective parties. He claimed to insist the more strongly upon this point, because his Government had the incontestable right to abide purely and simply by the stipulations of the Treaty of the 14th of November last.

The Ambassador of Prussia gave his complete assent to the preceding declaration, and insisted likewise, by order of his Court, that the fact of the union of the Ionian Islands to Greece cannot prejudice the rights acquired by the commerce and navigation of Prussia and the other States of the Zollverein in virtue of Treaties actually in force.

The Principal Secretary of State of Her Britannic Majesty, as well as the Ambassadors of France and Russia, appreciated the justice of these explanations, and expressed the intention of giving them due weight in the prosecution of the negotiations entrusted to their care.

With this view the Principal Secretary of State of Her Britannic Majesty undertook, in the name of the Conference, to bring the present explanatory Protocol before the Cabinet of Athens.

N^o. 24.

Earl Russell to Mr. Scarlett.

Foreign Office, January 28, 1864.

FROM the time when the design of giving up the Ionian Islands to Greece was first entertained, it has always been held that Great Britain could not liberate herself from the Protectorate which was undertaken by her in consequence of solemn international engagements, except through a Treaty with the other Powers by whom that Protectorate was assigned to her. It was also admitted that those Powers who, on special grounds, had conferred the Protectorate on Great Britain, had a right to require that the special interests which it was the object of the Treaty of 1815 to provide for, should not be overlooked in the new arrangement.

The Power most likely to be affected by a change in the state of possession in the Adriatic was Austria ; and in her interest Prussia and Russia both combined to obtain an arrangement which might secure her from the dangers which she apprehended from the transfer of those Islands to Greece.

Austria was very much averse to a change in the existing state of things on several grounds ; she apprehended danger to herself politically from the transfer of those Islands to another State, which she looked upon with a certain degree of suspicion as likely, if not itself influenced by a spirit of political propagandism, to be nevertheless too weak to resist such a spirit ; she dreaded, therefore, the cession to Greece of a stronghold situated at the very threshold of the Austrian maritime frontier. Austria conceived that Corfu, strongly fortified, might become the basis of military operations directed against herself, or against the neighbouring Turkish Provinces, whose tranquillity she desired to secure. She feared to see these Islands transferred to a State too weak to hold them against a strong Power in the event of an European war. She further apprehended that her commercial interests would be prejudiced by the annexation to the Greek Kingdom of the Ionian Islands, in which her navigation enjoyed special privileges, and which being, as regards Greece, an independent territory, admitted of general trade being carried on by Austrian vessels in the ports of the respective States as between foreign countries generally ; whereas, when the Islands were incorporated with the Greek Kingdom, such a trade might be held subject to the restrictions usually imposed on coasting trade.

These were the principal grounds upon which the conduct of Austria in the negotiations which preceded the Treaty of the 14th of November appears to have been influenced, and upon which she was enabled to secure the assistance of Russia and Prussia in obtaining the arrangement which she desired, and which she demanded as the condition of her accession to the Treaty. I have stated in my despatch to Her Majesty's Ambassadors at Paris, Vienna, Berlin, and St. Petersburg of the 11th of November, of which a copy was transmitted to you, that Her Majesty's Government, bearing in mind the welfare of the Ionian Islands and the security of Europe, were ready to accept the conditions of neutrality and demolition of the fortifications of Corfu proposed by Austria.

Accordingly that Treaty could only be concluded at all on the special conditions inserted in it, viz. :—

1. For the destruction of the fortifications in the Ionian Islands.
2. For the neutrality of those islands, to be sanctioned by the Contracting Powers undertaking to observe that neutrality as far as they were themselves concerned, and secured by imposing limitations on Greece in regard to the naval and military force to be maintained therein after their incorporation with the Kingdom ; and
3. For rendering permanent the special commercial privileges enjoyed by Austrian commerce in the Islands.

The British Government had to choose between agreeing to those conditions, not unreasonable in themselves, or postponing, for perhaps a long period, the plan of giving up the protectorate of the Ionian Islands for the purpose of strengthening the Greek Kingdom ; and, however onerous the conditions apparently were, there seemed no doubt that practically they would inflict no great burden or hardship on Greece, none certainly which would not be more than compensated by the great advantage which the kingdom would derive from the augmentation of its territory and resources which would result from the union with the Ionian States.

The British Government, however, being anxious to meet the wishes of the Greek Government to obtain some relaxation of the conditions imposed on the cession of the Islands by the Treaty of November 14, have, since the conclusion of that Treaty, exerted themselves to induce the Austrian Government to consent to some modification of its provisions in the points understood to be the most objected to by the Government of Greece.

It was useless to attempt to prevail on the Austrian Government to agree to the maintenance of the entire fortifications at Corfu. The demolition of those works, as it was insisted upon from the very beginning of the negotiations, and as it was provided for by the Treaty of November 14, was made by Austria a sine quâ non condition of her assent to any modification whatever in the other arrangements of that Treaty ; and in this Austria was supported by the Governments of Prussia and Russia.

But this, in her view, material point being secured, Austria was less indisposed to admit of certain modifications in regard to the other two points which she had insisted upon in the negotiations of the Treaty of November.

Accordingly, after much negotiation, Austria has been induced to be content with a stipulation that, instead of the whole of the Ionian Islands being comprised in the neutral zone, the Islands of Corfu and Paxo, with their several dependencies, should alone be declared neutral ; and she has waived altogether the limitation, contained in the Treaty of November, as to the amount of naval and military force to be hereafter maintained in the Islands.

Considering the territorial position of Austria in regard to the Ionian Islands, and the importance of her interests in the Adriatic, these are great concessions on her part in favour of the wishes of the Greek Government, and it is hopeless to expect that Austria will be brought to agree to any further concession.

Austria has, moreover, consented so to modify the arrangements of November 14th, as to remove any objection which might be urged against them as limiting the future action of the Greek Government, after the expiration of the engagements under which Austrian commerce with the Ionian Islands has been specially favoured.

It may be argued that Great Britain ought to have disregarded the demands of Austria, and dispensed with her accession of the Treaty. But it is scarcely necessary to point out the injury to Greece and the danger to European peace, if Austria had protested against the cession of the Islands, and had declared that she did not consider herself bound by any arrangement, and did not recognize the possession by Greece of the Islands.

With this full information as to the course which has been necessarily followed in the negotiations for the surrender of the British Protectorate of the Ionian Islands, you will, no doubt, be able to satisfy the Greek Government that the British Government has done all that under the circumstances they could do to meet the wishes of Greece in this matter, and to render the union of the Islands as advantageous as possible to the Kingdom of Greece ; and that it is out of the question to expect that any further modification of the arrangements of the Treaty of November, to which Austria could be induced to consent, can now be suggested.

You will be able to show that as Great Britain could not act alone in this matter, but was necessarily bound by her pre-existing engagements with other Powers, the only alternative was to accept the conditions to which those other Powers could be brought to agree, or to renounce for a long time to come the plan for incorporating the Ionian States with the Kingdom of Greece.

The British Government would have shown no real interest in the welfare of the Greek Kingdom, or regard for the wishes of the Ionian States as expressed in the Ionian Assembly, if it had renounced its desire that the Ionian States should be incorporated with the Greek Kingdom, because it could not effect that object without deferring in some respects to the wishes and apprehensions of other Powers, whose consent was indispensable to the attainment of it ; and you will express the confident expectation of Her Majesty's Government that any feelings of disappointment which the Greek Government may at first experience on account of the conditions with which the incorporation with Greece of the Ionian State must be accompanied, will, on calm reflection, give way to the conviction that the benefit which Greece will derive from the addition to the Greek Kingdom of the valuable and important territory and resources which she will now obtain, much more than compensates for any apparent severity in the conditions to which it is made subject.

You will remark also that with regard to the fortifications Great Britain reserved to herself the sole power of judging how far the demolition should be carried into effect. The care which Her Majesty's Government have always shown to protect and defend the interests of the Ionian Islands would always have secured the inhabitants of Corfu from any destruction of the walls, and of the citadel, which might have injured the houses of the inhabitants. The fears expressed by the Greek Government on that head were entirely visionary.

Sir,

Received from the Earl of Russell Foreign Office, March 8, 1864.

I UNDERSTAND from Baron Brunnow that he is instructed to require that on the signature of the Treaty between the three Powers and Greece, the Greek Plenipotentiary should make a declaration that King George abides by the condition that his successor shall profess the Greek religion.

Moreover, the honour of Her Majesty's Government is concerned in the immediate signature of the Separate Convention between England and Greece relative to the pensions and compensations to be provided for persons formerly in the employment of the Government of the Ionian Islands.

I have to instruct you to press M. Boulgaris to send immediately authority to M. Tricoupi to comply with these conditions, which alone require to be settled in order that both the Treaty and Convention may be signed.

The other points which have been under discussion have been favourably settled with a view to Greek interests, and it is of the utmost importance for Greece that no delay should occur in the formal conclusion of the several instruments.

No. 31.

*Earl Russell to Sir A. Buchanan.

Sir,

Foreign Office, April 26, 1864.

I TRANSMIT to your Excellency a copy of the Treaty for the union of the Ionian Islands to the Kingdom of Greece, which was signed at London on the 29th ultimo, between Her Majesty, the Emperor of the French, and the Emperor of Russia, on the one part, and the King of the Hellenes, on the other part, and the ratifications of which were exchanged at this office yesterday.

* A similar despatch was addressed to Lord Bloomfield.

I have to instruct your Excellency to communicate this Treaty to the Prussian Minister for Foreign Affairs, in fulfilment of the engagement contained in Article VII of the Treaty of the 14th of November last. In so doing, you will express the earnest hope of Her Majesty's Government that the Court of Prussia will recognize the King of the Hellenes, and furnish their Representative at Athens with credentials to King George.

I am, &c.
(Signed) RUSSELL.

No. 32.

*Earl Russell to Count Apponyi.

Foreign Office, April 26, 1864.

IN fulfilment of the engagement contained in the VIIth Article of the Treaty concluded on the 14th of November last, between the Courts of Great Britain, Austria, France, Prussia, and Russia, the Undersigned, &c., has the honour, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, to communicate to his Excellency the Count Apponyi, &c., a copy of the Treaty concluded at London on the 29th of March, 1864, between Her Britannic Majesty, His Majesty the Emperor of the French, and His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, on the one part; and His Majesty the King of the Hellenes, on the other part, as to the arrangements rendered necessary in consequence of the union of the Ionian Islands to Greece.

In requesting that the Count Apponyi will have the goodness to transmit to his Court the document in question, the Undersigned takes the opportunity of expressing the earnest hope of Her Majesty's Government that the Court of Austria will recognize the King of the Hellenes, and furnish their Representative at Athens with credentials to King George.

The Undersigned, &c. (Signed) RUSSELL.

No. 33.

Earl Russell to Mr. Scarlett.

Sir,

Foreign Office, April 28, 1864.

THE Treaty for the union of the Ionian Islands with Greece was ratified on the 25th instant.

In congratulating the Greek Government on this event, you will state to the Minister of Foreign Affairs that Her Majesty's Government, in making this voluntary cession of a Protectorate which has been considered by many statesmen of great eminence as a source of strength and power to Great Britain, and which conferred upon her the possession of a commanding fortified position, have had in view the contentment of the people of the Ionian Islands, and the means of giving increased strength and prosperity to the Hellenic Kingdom.

It is the earnest hope of Her Majesty's Government that the sacrifice they have thus spontaneously made may be conducive to those ends.

I am, &c.
(Signed) RUSSELL.

No. 34.

Mr. Murray to Mr. Elliot.

Sir,

Foreign Office, April 28, 1864.

I AM directed by Earl Russell to request that you will state to Mr. Secretary Cardwell that the civil and military authority of Great Britain in the Ionian Islands is to be surrendered to the Greek Government on the 2nd of June, and that the visit of the King of the Hellenes will not take place until after that date.

I am to inclose, for the information of Mr. Cardwell, a copy of a letter to the Admiralty relative to the naval arrangements which Lord Russell thinks desirable to be made with regard to the departure of Sir H. Storks and to the visit of King George.

I am, &c.
(Signed) JAMES MURRAY.

* A similar letter was addressed to Count Bernstorff.

Mr. Murray to the Secretary to the Admiralty.

Sir,

Foreign Office, April 28, 1864.

I AM directed by Earl Russell to request that you will state to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty that it has been arranged that the Ionian Islands should be evacuated by the British forces on the 2nd of June, and that it will be desirable that Admiral Smart should at that time proceed to Corfu for the purpose of conveying Sir H. Storks in the flag-ship to Malta, and that Sir H. Storks should be sent by a ship of war from that Island to Marseilles, or to such other port as he may prefer, on his way to England.

I am to add that the King of the Hellenes intends to visit the Ionian Islands shortly after the cession has taken place, and that Lord Russell would suggest that Rear-Admiral Yelverton should be instructed to escort His Majesty to Corfu.

I am, &c.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

FOR

THE SETTLEMENT OF THE CLAIMS OF THE AGRICULTURAL COMPANIES.

Signed at Washington, July 1, 1863.

Treaty between Her Majesty and the United States of America, for the Settlement of the Claims of the Hudson's Bay and Puget's Sound Agricultural Companies:

[Ratifications exchanged at Washington, March 3, 1864.]

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the United States of America, being desirous to provide for the final settlement of the claims of the Hudson's Bay and Puget's Sound Agricultural Companies, specified in Articles III and IV of the Treaty concluded between Great Britain and the United States of America on the 15th of June, 1846, have resolved to conclude a Treaty for this purpose, and have named as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say :—

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Right Honourable Richard Bickerton Pemell, Lord Lyons, a Peer of Her United Kingdom, a Knight Grand Cross of Her Most Honourable Order of the Bath, and Her Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States of America ;

And the President of the United States of America, William H. Seward, Secretary of State ;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded the following Articles :—

ARTICLE I.

Whereas by the IIIrd and IVth Articles of the Treaty concluded at Washington, on the 15th day of June, 1846, between Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the United States of America, it was stipulated and agreed that in the future appropriation of the territory south of the 49th parallel of north latitude, as provided in the first Article of the said Treaty, the possessory rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, and of all British subjects who may be already in the occupation of land or other property lawfully acquired within the said territory, should be respected ; and that the farms, lands, and other property of every description belonging to the Puget's Sound Agricultural Company, on the north side of the Columbia River, should be confirmed to the said Company ; but that in case the situation of those farms and lands should be considered by the United States to be of public and political importance, and the United States' Government should signify a desire to obtain possession of the whole or of any part thereof, the property so required should be transferred to the said Government at a proper valuation, to be agreed upon between the parties :

And whereas it is desirable that all questions between the United States' authorities on the one hand, and the Hudson's Bay and Puget's Sound Agricultural Companies on the other, with respect to the possessory rights and claims of those Companies and of any other British subjects in Oregon and Washington territory, should be settled by the transfer of those rights and claims to the Government of the United States for an adequate money consideration :

It is hereby agreed that Her Britannic Majesty and the United States of America shall, within twelve months after the exchange of the ratifications of the present Treaty, appoint each a Commissioner for the purpose of examining and deciding upon all claims arising out of the provisions of the above quoted Articles of the Treaty of June 15, 1846.

ARTICLE II.

The Commissioners mentioned in the preceding Article shall, at the earliest convenient period after they shall have been respectively named, meet at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and shall, before proceeding to any business, make and subscribe a solemn declaration that they will impartially and carefully examine and decide, to the best of their judgment, and according to justice and equity, without fear, favour, or affection to their own country, all the matters referred to them for their decision; and such declaration shall be entered on the record of their proceedings.

The Commissioners shall then proceed to name an arbitrator or umpire to decide upon any case or cases on which they may differ in opinion. And if they cannot agree in the selection, the said arbitrator or umpire shall be appointed by the King of Italy, whom the two High Contracting Parties shall invite to make such appointment, and whose selection shall be conclusive on both parties. The person so to be chosen shall, before proceeding to act, make and subscribe a solemn declaration, in a form similar to that which shall already have been made and subscribed by the Commissioners, which declaration shall also be entered on the record of the proceedings. In the event of the death, absence, or incapacity of such person, or of his omitting, or declining, or ceasing to act as such arbitrator or umpire, another person shall be named in the manner aforesaid to act in his place or stead, and shall make and subscribe such declaration as aforesaid.

Her Britannic Majesty and the United States of America engage to consider the decision of the two Commissioners conjointly, or of the arbitrator or umpire, as the case may be, as final and conclusive on the matters to be referred to their decision, and forthwith to give full effect to the same.

ARTICLE III.

The Commissioners and the arbitrator or umpire shall keep accurate records and correct minutes or notes of all their proceedings, with the dates thereof, and shall appoint and employ such clerk or clerks, or other persons, as they shall find necessary to assist them in the transaction of the business which may come before them.

The salaries of the Commissioners and of the clerk or clerks shall be paid by their respective Governments. The salary of the arbitrator or umpire, and the contingent expenses, shall be defrayed in equal moieties by the two Governments.

ARTICLE IV.

All sums of money which may be awarded by the Commissioners, or by the arbitrator or umpire, on account of any claim, shall be paid by the one Government to the other in two equal annual instalments, whereof the first shall be paid within twelve months after the date of the award, and the second within twenty-four months after the date of the award, without interest, and without any deduction whatever.

ARTICLE V.

The present Treaty shall be ratified, and the mutual exchange of ratifications shall take place in Washington, in twelve months from the date hereof, or earlier if possible.

In faith whereof, we, the respective Plenipotentiaries, have signed this Treaty, and have hereunto affixed our seals.

Done in duplicate at Washington, the 1st day of July, Anno Domini 1863.

RETURN relative to the OCCUPATION of the IONIAN ISLANDS by the BRITISH FORCES.

— No. 1. —

EXTRACT of a LETTER from Lieutenant-General Sir John Stuart, K.B., to the Right Honourable Viscount Castlereagh, dated Milazzo, August 2, 1809.

THE service recommended by Lord Collingwood against Zante and Cephalonia, I shall be ready to concur in with his lordship whenever my nearer objects will allow me to spare troops for the purpose.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-General Sir John Stuart, K.B., to the Right Honourable Viscount Castlereagh, dated Messina, September 26, 1809.

My Lord,

I HAD the honour to inform your lordship, in my communication of former date, that an expedition had been suggested to me by Lord Collingwood for the object of dispossessing the French of the Islands of Cephalonia and Zante, where the inhabitants were said to be extremely desirous of our assistance.

This enterprise was suspended by me for a moment in consequence of the existing armistice, which, in the final result of peace between France and Austria, might lead to a different call for the application of the force under my orders.

Lord Collingwood, however, having continued in his correspondence still to recommend the measure, I have felt a satisfaction in co-operating therein to the utmost of my power, and have accordingly detached about 1,700 men, under the command of Brigadier General Oswald, to execute the projected service.

The above allotment exceeds by one-half the force which Lord Collingwood suggested to me as necessary for the concerted object, but I was anxious that no failure should occur from the disproportion of means on my part for the meditated purpose.

The naval force co-operating in this service consists of a line-of-battle ship, a frigate, and a sloop of war, under the conduct of Captain Spranger, of Her Majesty's ship the "Warrior."

As soon as the above expedition was decided upon, I wrote to Mr. Foresti (His Majesty's late Minister at the Government of the Seven Islands, who had been for some time past at Malta) to inform him of its destination; and I have since heard from Sir Alexander Ball that he was preparing to sail immediately in the "Spartan" frigate to meet it.

The local knowledge as well as political experience of this gentleman in the above islands, must render him capable of being extremely useful to the military and naval commanders employed on this service.

In acquainting your lordship with the above detachment of force from this army, I hope I shall not be considered out of place in venturing to call your attention to the proportionate reduction which it operates upon the means in my hands for other applications of service; the total force, including every arm and description now remaining under my command in Sicily (in which sick and many other non-effectives are comprehended), are something more on the returns than 14,000 rank and file.

I have, &c.

COPY of a LETTER from Lieutenant General Sir John Stuart, K.B., to the Right Honourable Lord Castlereagh, dated Messina, 20 October 1809.

My Lord,

A DESPATCH which I had the honour to address to your lordship on the 26th ulto., apprised you of the representations that had been made to Vice Admiral Lord Collingwood and to myself of the solicitude of the inhabitants of Zante, Cephalonia, and other dependencies of the Ionian Government, to receive the assistance of a British force.

The consequent equipment of an expedition under Brigadier General Oswald to act co-operatively with a squadron under Captain Spranger, of His Majesty's ship "Warrior," was at the same time detailed to your lordship, and stated to have sailed in the prosecution of this object on the 23d of last month from Messina.

The reports with which Captain Oswald of the 35th Regiment yesterday arrived from Zante, and which I have now the satisfaction of transmitting to your lordship, will mark the able manner in which this service has been carried into effect by the officers by whom it was conducted. * * *

I have, &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 3.

COPY of a LETTER from Brigadier General Oswald to Lieutenant General Sir John Stuart, K.B., dated Bay of Zante, 3 October 1809.

Sir,

IN consequence of your Excellency's communication to Rear-Admiral Sir Alexander Ball at Malta, we were fortunate enough to find the "Spartan" frigate off the islands, having on board Mr. Foresti, His Majesty's Minister to the Septinsular Republic. Considerations arising from the advance in the season, and the precarious state of the weather, induced Captain Spranger to point out Zante as the primary object of attack.

Having from Mr. Foresti obtained the most ample and correct information respecting that island, the expedition stood in and came to an anchor in its roadstead towards the close of the day on the 1st of October. Captain Spranger and myself were equally desirous to avoid involving the inhabitants in the misfortunes which a direct attack upon the town must have occasioned.

It was therefore determined that early on the day following, the troops should be landed at a convenient bay three miles distant, protected by the frigates and gun-boats.

The first division of the troops (as per margin) under the immediate order of Lieutenant Colonel Lowe, effected a most regular debarkation at the point proposed, and in two columns proceeded immediately towards a position turning the defences of the town, and cutting off its communication with the castle.

Lieutenant Colonel Lowe led his column to the left, clearing an eminence upon which the enemy was said to be posted, and by this movement a detached battery was turned, some prisoners made, and a more direct intercourse with the shipping established.

The corps which I accompanied marched by a valley till it ascended the height contiguous to the castle, which the light troops pushed forward to invest.

Upon our approach the enemy had quitted the town, retreating upon the naturally strong, but most unaccountably neglected fortress, endeavouring to carry with him two six-inch howitzers which the rapid advance of our flankers forced him to abandon.

The accompanying terms were then proffered, and after some hesitation on the part of the French commandant, by him agreed to that evening. * * *

Enclosure 2, in No. 3.

Article 1. The French garrison will march out with the honours of war, and be considered as prisoners of war, to be exchanged whenever circumstances will permit.

Article 2.

COPY of a LETTER from Brigadier General J. Oswald to Lieutenant General
Sir J. Stuart, K. B., dated Cephalonia, 5 October 1809.

Sir,

IN my letter to your Excellency of the 3d instant, I had the honour to report that the expedition was preparing immediately to proceed for Cephalonia; and I have now the pleasure to acquaint you with the islands being actually in our possession.

The disposition made by Captain Spranger of the formidable force under his orders, rendered vain the feeble efforts of the enemy to oppose our entrance into its capacious and secure harbour. Before the ships came to an anchor, a flag announced the submission of the town of Argostoli, and the retreat of the garrison to the Castle of St. George, about six miles distant from thence.

A division of troops under Lieutenant-Colonel Lowe landed to preserve tranquillity, and an officer proceeded to summon the castle, which capitulated upon the accompanying terms.

* * * * *

Until your Excellency's pleasure is made known, I have nominated Lieutenant-Colonel Lowe to the important duty of commanding this island, certain that so delicate a trust could not be reposed in more able hands.

As soon as the necessary arrangements are completed, and the submission of the dependent island of Ithaca received, Captain Spranger and myself intend proceeding to superintend the operations carrying on against Cerigo, a station from whence of late the enemy's privateers have caused considerable injury to our commerce.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 6, in No. 3.

ARTICLES of Capitulation agreed upon between Major C. W. Clarke, on the part of Brigadier General J. Oswald and Captain J. W. Spranger, commanding the Land and Sea Forces employed in the liberation of the Ionian Islands, and Monsieur Lorenzo Pieri, Chef de Battalion, and commanding the French troops in the Island of Cephalonia, for the surrender of the Castle of St. Giorgio. 5 October 1809.

Article 1. Monsieur Lorenzo Pieri, on the part of the garrison of the Castle of St. Giorgio, demands that the officers of the staff, those of the line, and the garrison be permitted to retire from the castle as soon as the term of the capitulation shall be agreed upon, and shall be conveyed with arms and baggage to Corfu.

Answer.—Refused.

The garrison will be permitted to march out of the castle with the honours of war, and remain prisoners until an opportunity offers of exchanging them.

2. Their property, strictly private, should be respected. All property belonging to Government, whether stores, plans, charts, or of any other description, are to be delivered up to the British, and the French Commandant will appoint officers particularly to render an account of the same, whether in the castle, town, or on board the shipping.

3. The sick of the garrison shall be taken care of, the French leaving medical assistance in charge of them.

4. The castle will be occupied by British troops as soon as the foregoing articles are agreed to, and the garrison will march out at such time as the British commanders shall appoint, depositing their arms previous to the embarkation. The officers are permitted to retain their arms.

COPY of a LETTER from Brigadier-General J. Oswald to Lieutenant-General
Sir J. Stuart, K.B., dated Cephalonia, H. M. S. "Warrior," 12 October 1809.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Excellency the accompanying report upon the capture of the island of Ithaca.

The enterprise was entrusted to Captain Crawley, of H. M. S. "Philomel," and to Captain Church, with detachments from the 35th and Royal Corsican Rangers. The manner it has been effected will, I have no doubt, appear to your Excellency creditable to those officers, and to the forces under their orders.

COPY of a REPORT from Captain R. Church to Brigadier-General J. Oswald, dated Vathi, capital of the Island of Ithaca, 8 October 1809.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to inform you that the island of Ithaca was this day surrendered to the detachment of British troops under my command, and in concert with H. M. S. "Philomel."

Finding the enemy's batteries commanded the harbour in such a manner as to render ineffectual the fire from the ship, I immediately landed the troops and marines, accompanied by a division of seamen under the direction of Captain Crawley; I marched without loss of time to the enemy's principal fort (situated on an eminence), with the determination to take it by assault. Our intention was, however, frustrated by the unconditional surrender of the French commandant and his garrison.

During our march, the enemy was held in check by the fire of a gun-boat detached by Captain Crawley for that purpose.

The garrison, consisting of near eighty men, have been made prisoners of war, with the exception of a few Albanians, who escaped to the mountains, but who must inevitably fall into our hands.

It is impossible that I can express the obligations that I am under to Captain Crawley for the very handsome manner in which he gave every assistance in his power to insure the success of the enterprise. To Mr. Foresti, H. M.'s Minister to the Seven Islands, I beg also to offer my sincere acknowledgments for the great services he rendered to me on this occasion, and I feel it my duty to report the uniform good conduct of the officers and men of the 35th Regiment, Royal Corsican Rangers, and Royal Marines composing the detachment I had the honour to command.

COPY of a LETTER from Brigadier-General J. Oswald to Lieutenant-General Sir J. Stuart, K.B., dated Zante, on board H. M. S. "Warrior," 16 October 1809.

Sir,

THE "Spartan" frigate, having on board a detachment of Royal Artillery with light guns, and two companies of the 35th Regiment, under the orders of Major Clarke of that corps, sailed from Cephalonia on the 6th inst., instructed to proceed off Cerigo, block up its port, and, if circumstances warranted, to make an immediate attack upon the island. It was Captain Spranger's intention and my own to have followed with considerable reinforcements, but a continuance of adverse gales prevented our getting further than this bay, where a tender from Captain Brenton has just reached us, conveying despatches, of which which the accompanying are copies, announcing the surrender of Cerigo to the previously detached force. Major Clarke goes fully into the details of the military operations; they characterise an ardent spirit of enterprise, and he seems to have been perfectly seconded by the officers and men under his orders, surmounting difficulties greater than I apprehended he had the means of overcoming.

The enterprise which your Excellency confided to me being thus happily accomplished, it only remains for me to testify my fullest approbation of the conduct of the troops: a discipline has been maintained that did honour to the soldier, and reflected the utmost credit upon the commanding and subordinate officers.

I am under the greatest obligations to the officers of the staff of my command; they have been most assiduous in the discharge of their respective duties.

I must recur in the warmest terms of acknowledgment to the never-ceasing aid received from Captain Spranger; it was my good fortune to act with an officer, who, while our views and objects were the same, cordially united in the means of attaining them. A similar harmony and good correspondence has reigned through every branch of the two services.

Our success was accelerated, and our subsequent political arrangements facilitated, by the personal exertions and judicious counsels of Mr. Foresti, His Majesty's Minister to the Septinsular Republic, and we greatly profited in being accompanied by a gentleman so loved and esteemed by the inhabitants of these isles. Mr. Foresti's distinguished merits have received the commendations of the most illustrious of our countrymen;—to add my humble tribute would be presumptuous, were it not called for by feelings of gratitude and respect towards so worthy a servant of our Sovereign.

I will now proceed to place the islands in a posture of defence sufficient to afford probable security, and I am led to believe it may be accomplished without causing any expense to His Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.

COPY of ARTICLES of CAPITULATION concluded between Jahleel Brenton, Esq., Captain of His Majesty's ship "Spartan," Major William Clarke, of His Majesty's 35th Regiment, Commanders of the English Land and Sea Forces on the Island of Cerigo, and Mr. Martin Mitrano Lisco, Commanding the Castle of Cerigo.

1. The garrison will march out with the honours of war, and deposit their arms at the gate, remaining prisoners of war till an opportunity offers for exchanging them. Officers are permitted to retain their swords, and the troops their private baggage.

2. All personal property will be respected.

3. All property belonging to the French Government, whether in the castle or in any other part of the island, shall be delivered up to the English.

As soon as the foregoing Articles shall have been signed on both sides, the castle shall be occupied by the British troops.

COPY of a LETTER from Lord Liverpool to Lieutenant General Sir John Stuart, K.B., dated Downing-street, 29 November 1809.

Sir,

YOUR letters to Lord Viscount Castlereagh have been received and laid before the King, in which you inform his Lordship that, in consequence of the suggestions of Lord Collingwood, you had detached a force of 1,700 men, under the command of Brigadier-General Oswald, for the purpose of dispossessing the French of the islands of Cephalonia and Zante.

If the permanent or temporary occupation of those or of any other of the islands in that part of the Mediterranean would tend materially to the security of Sicily, without the necessity of increasing the British military force at this time in that sea, the expedition might, upon that ground, be judged expedient. But when it is considered how large a part of the disposable force of the British Army is already in the Mediterranean; that, besides the garrison of Malta, the number of men actually under your command (including this detachment) consists of more than 16,000 rank and file, although His Majesty is only bound by the engagements subsisting between him and the King of Sicily to keep a force of 10,000 men in that island; as the exigencies of His Majesty's service in other quarters may render it therefore more probable that it may be necessary that the force now in Sicily should be reduced than that it should be augmented, I cannot too strongly recommend to you, in any suggestions that may occur respecting offensive operations of the description stated in your Despatch, not to calculate upon any augmentation of force from home, but to govern yourself chiefly by the consideration in what way the force already under your command can be best appropriated for the security of Sicily; whether this object can be most effectually attained by concentrating the whole of the British force, or whether it may be more advantageous, with a view to the security of Sicily, in some degree to reduce the force in that island for the purpose of occupying other stations which may operate as advanced posts with regard to it, and may render thereby any attack upon it less likely to prove successful.

In addition to what I have already said, and as a further reason why the force under your command should only be directed to objects of essential importance, I think it necessary to remind you of the discretion which was given to you in Lord Castlereagh's despatches of the 14th October and 1st and 4th November 1808, respecting a diversion on the coast of Spain, in the event of circumstances rendering such a diversion expedient, and it being possible to undertake it consistently with the security of Sicily.

EXTRACT from a DESPATCH of the Earl of Liverpool to Lieutenant General Sir John Stuart, K.B., dated Downing-street, 30 December 1809.

I HAVE much satisfaction in conveying to you His Majesty's most gracious approbation of the ability with which Brigadier-General Oswald appears to have executed the service intrusted to him by the rapid reduction of the enemy's posts in Zante, Cephalonia, Cerigo, and Ithaca. His Majesty has also derived pleasure from the Brigadier-General's report of the good conduct of the officers and men employed under his command, as well as of the cordiality that subsisted between his military and naval forces.

My Despatch of the 29th ultimo will have conveyed to you the sentiments of His Majesty's Government upon the general question of expeditions from Sicily, with a view to the permanent occupation of other points in the Mediterranean, and will have pointed out to you the necessity of being economical in the appropriation of the forces placed under your command, as under the present circumstances of the war, it is improbable that further reinforcements could be afforded from home to the Mediterranean army.

Yourself and the Commander in Chief of His Majesty's Naval Forces in those seas will be best able from your local knowledge, and from your observation of circumstances as they may arise, to appreciate justly the relative importance of the islands of which possession has been taken as to the force necessary for their preservation, and how far the state of affairs may enable you to spare such a force from the army in Sicily; and you will not fail to bear in mind the superior importance of the latter island, and in all arrangements and appropriation of your troops, consider the security of Sicily and Malta as the primary objects.

COPY of a LETTER from Lieutenant General Sir J. Stuart, K.B., to the Right Honourable the Earl of Liverpool, dated Messina, 24 April 1810.

My Lord,

I SOME time since received an intimation from Brigadier-General Oswald, commanding in the Ionian Islands, that for the greater security of the points already occupied, as well as with a view to ulterior objects in that quarter, he was meditating, in concert with the senior officer of His Majesty's Naval Forces on that station, an enterprise upon the island of Santa Maura, a post of considerable strength, and which from its contiguity to and relations with the adjacent continent of Greece rendered the dislodgement of the enemy an object of political import.

A subsequent communication from the Brigadier-General, received on the 30th ultimo, advised me of his having already commenced the service proposed, by a landing upon the island with about 2,000 men under his orders; of his having carried the advanced works of the enemy by assault, and driven the French General with his entire force into the fortress—the unexpected strength of which, however, appeared to him to afford such means of protracted resistance as urged him to solicit from me reinforcements both of men and stores to enable him to press his object.

Although many reasons presented themselves to disincline me to the further reduction of the British force stationed in Sicily, yet under my full confidence in the judgment as well as zeal which has prompted General Oswald to the enterprise which he had undertaken, I did not hesitate to comply with his request; and in the course of the following day six flank companies of the foreign regiments belonging to this army, together with a detachment of artillery and a supply of ordnance stores (as detailed in the margin), were embarked, and sailed for his support, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Fisher, of Watteville's, and I have the satisfaction of learning that on the 7th instant they reached their destination.

I am now fortunately enabled to transmit to your Lordship a more detailed report, which I have received from Brigadier General Oswald, of his proceedings up to the 24th ultimo; and I hope the circumstances which he has stated—the happy union which marks the co-operation of the two services, and the gallantry which has already characterised the progress of the enterprise—will be graciously received by His Majesty as an augur of its successful issue.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 6.

COPY of a LETTER from Brigadier General J. Oswald, Commanding Troops, Ionian Islands, to Lieutenant General Sir John Stuart, dated Head Quarters, Camp before St Maura, 24 March 1810.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report to your Excellency that the troops, with the naval forces under the order of Captain Eyre, His Majesty's ship "Magnificent," as per margin,* sailed from Zante on the morning of the 21st, and reached the island of St. Maura the same evening. Early the next day the army disembarked to the southward of the town, the enemy retiring from the batteries on the approach of His Majesty's sloop "Imogene" and gunboats. The troops immediately moved forward, Lieutenant Colonel Lowe commanding the advance, a portion of which (Greek light infantry), under Major Church, was kept upon the flank, and drove a party of Albanians from the adjacent heights. The town was found to be evacuated, General Camus having, with his whole forces (amounting to above 1,000 men), retired into the fortress and strong fieldworks contiguous thereto, at the same time acquainting the civil administration with his inability any longer to protect them.

* Magnificent, F. Poule, Imogene.

The fortress of St. Maura is situated upon a narrow sandy isthmus, of three miles in length, which joins it to the island, and it has besides a direct communication with the town by a singularly narrow causeway, nearly a mile in length. The neck of land is defended by two strong redoubts, and an intrenchment regularly constructed, and capable of such a resistance as led the enemy to declare they would arrest our progress for a month at least.

Lieutenant Colonel Lowe being left to watch the enemy's movements from the town, supported by Colonel Wilder and two battalions, I proceeded with a portion of light infantry to reconnoitre the isthmus. Major Church I found had already, with four companies of the Greek light infantry, gallantly carried the first redoubt, the enemy retiring upon his next entrenchment, where he remained in force assiduously employed in completing its defences. It was obvious that no time ought to be lost in carrying this work; accordingly the battalion of detachments under Major Clarke, 35th Regiment, was called from the town to support the attack, which previous success and the best apparent disposition induced me to confide to the Greek light infantry. Captain Eyre, who did me the honour to land with the troops, directed His Majesty's ship "Leonidas" to be placed so as to favour the assault. Captain Brisbane, Royal Navy, who was also on shore, conveyed this order and our intentions to Captain Griffiths. The line to be attacked extended from sea to sea, mounted with four pieces of cannon, well flanked—had a wet ditch and abattis in front, manned by about 500 infantry, and was so defended from the sea as to render it almost secure from the fire of shipping. His Majesty's ship "Leonidas" came to anchor as close as the water would admit of; meanwhile the troops formed in columns approached, and were to a certain distance covered by the ground. On opening the front of the work they became exposed to a heavy and well-directed fire of grape and musketry. The Greeks resorted to their accustomed and, in many situations, appropriate mode of fighting; nor could the most gallant efforts of Major Church, Captain Tuffin (inspectors), and others of their officers, make them advance with that celerity which on similar occasions usually commands both safety and success. I am unequal to do justice to the exertions of my staff, to the officers of Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers who accompanied me upon this trying occasion.

Captain Eyre and Stephens, of the Royal Navy, were amongst the most animated in the combat, and were both wounded in the display of professional characteristic valour.

Upon finding the head of the column could not be brought to the assault, I immediately directed Major Clarke to bring up the battalion of detachments, consisting of two companies of the Royal Marines under Captains Snow and Stuart, two companies of De Rolls' under Major De Bosset, and two companies of Calabrian Free Corps, under Major Oswald.

The Royal Marines, led by Major Clarke, headed by their officers, broke through the abattis, and charged into the entrenchments; they were nobly supported by De Rolls' under Major Bosset, and no delicacy can prevent me from noticing the gallant exertion of Major Oswald in bringing forward his corps. The contest was not of long duration; the enemy fled at all points, pursued with the bayonet from work to work, and such was his precipitation that he not only abandoned the camp and cannons of the attacked line, but left his remaining strong position, followed by Major Clarke's command even to the gates of the fortress. His flight was accelerated by a previously concerted and extremely well executed movement of Lieutenant-Colonel Lowe, with the Rifles of his corps, supported by a company of the 35th and two companies of the Royal Corsican Rangers. The party, headed by the lieutenant-colonel, pushed along the narrow and perfectly exposed causeway which connects the town with the fortress; this unexpected advance led upon the enemy's rear, and contributed to his so quickly abandoning the strong redoubts, which a front attack alone could with difficulty effect. The lieutenant-colonel in his report speaks highly of the good conduct of the officers and men, and states that Lieutenant Boccicampi singularly distinguished himself by remaining after receiving a severe wound to cover the retreat of a party of the riflemen whom the enemy's fire compelled to retire, some of whom, driven from the dyke into the water, were missing. Thus concluded successfully operations of the highest import to our future progress in the island, and I trust that the conduct of the troops in storming the works will be deemed worthy of your Excellency's approbation. These advantages have not been cheaply obtained, for I have been deprived of the aid of some of the most distinguished amongst us: Captain Wynyard, Assistant Adjutant General; Major Church, Assistant Quartermaster General, Superintendent of the Greek light infantry; Major Oswald, of the Calabrese division; Captain Vincenzo, of the same corps, and Captain Parker, of the Royal Engineers, all most meritorious and valuable officers, are amongst the wounded. With heartfelt pleasure, I state their wounds to be of a nature to give hopes that they will soon return to their respective stations. Upon the whole, excepting Captain Vincenzo, with whose merits your Excellency is well acquainted, our wounded of all ranks promise speedy recovery, and no permanent injury. The anxiety of Mr. Gunning, surgeon to the forces, to lend his immediate aid, placed him in the situation to become himself a sufferer, fortunately not so much so as to prevent him from performing the functions he so diligently and ably discharges.

It would exceed the bounds of a despatch to enumerate the merits of individuals; but I am bound to notice the promptness with which, at the most critical moment, my orders were conveyed to Major Clarke by Lieutenant Hartzembughter, of the Royal Corsican Rangers, my aide-de-camp, an old and deserving officer, and who afforded the Major an immediate opportunity of greatly contributing to the success of the day.

M. Foresti gave me essential aid during the march, and in the attack was one of the foremost in manifesting the zeal and courage with which His Majesty's service upon all occasions in-pires him.

The enemy is now pent up within his walls, and one of the posts we gained from him is favourably placed for commencing our approaches, which however the narrowness of the ground renders difficult and laborious.

Herewith I transmit to your Excellency returns of our killed, wounded, and missing, together with lists of the captured ordnance.

I have, &c.

COPY of a LETTER from Lieutenant General Sir John Stuart, K.B., Count of Maida, to the Right Honourable the Earl of Liverpool, dated Messina, 26 April 1810.

My Lord,

SINCE my Despatch to your Lordship of the 24th instant, I have received from Brigadier General Oswald the satisfactory account which I have the honour to transmit herewith, of the complete reduction of the island and fortress of St. Maura, and of the surrender of the French force by which they are garrisoned to His Majesty's arms.

The reinforcements which were despatched from hence to the support of the Brigadier General on the 31st ultimo, I am pleased to state, are on their return again to Sicily.

On the service so successfully accomplished by Brigadier General Oswald, it only remains with me to express my sanguine hope that the consequences will be as beneficial as the achievement has been brilliant, and that himself and the gallant troops who have been the companions of his enterprise will receive their best recompense in their Sovereign's most gracious approbation.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 7.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Brigadier General Oswald to Lieutenant General Sir John Stuart.

Sir,

Camp of St. Maura, 17 April 1810.

I HAVE extreme satisfaction in announcing to your Excellency that the fortress of St. Maura surrendered to His Majesty's arms on the 16th instant, nine days after batteries consisting of two 32-prs., nine 18-prs., four howitzers, and six mortars were opened against it; a portion of this artillery, however, had only been three days in action.

The place was perfectly provided with casemates, and I am free to confess, its situation and defences offered greater obstacles than I apprehended we should have had to contend with.

The sketch I had the honour to forward with my last Despatch will show to your Excellency the narrow and exposed front we had to work upon, and likewise that a due consideration for the inhabitants compelled me to construct the batteries of support at rather too great a distance from the work.

The ample supplies which your Excellency promptly despatched, enabled us to support so heavy a cannonade and bombardment as to render it unnecessary to resort to a breaching battery, a measure in contemplation which the skill and resources at all times displayed by Captain Thackeray would, I doubt not, have happily accomplished. The enemy's artillery and interior of the fortress have greatly suffered, but its walls remain unimpaired.

The troops have performed the hazardous and arduous labours of the siege with characteristic intrepidity and perseverance.

During the operations, one or two night attacks upon the enemy's outpost afforded a display of that high degree of discipline and gallantry which such efforts demand.

Upon the evening of the 15th, Captain Thackeray desiring to reconnoitre the approach and ground for the breaching battery then in agitation, it became necessary to drive the enemy from an intrenchment he held within 300 paces of his rampart; this service was intrusted to Lieutenant Colonel Moore of the 35th, who led the Grenadiers of that regiment, Light Company of Roll's, and subaltern's detachments of the Corsican Rifles and Royal Marines. This corps, pushing undauntedly through a heavy fire of grape and musketry, carried the enemy's line at the point of the bayonet. Upon the Lieutenant Colonel and Captain Thackeray reporting to me that it was practicable to establish our troops there, the detachment was directed to stand fast, and by incessant and judicious labour during the night the intrenchment was converted into a second parallel, from whence the fire of the enemy, however severe, could not dislodge it. Our sharpshooters and infantry from thence greatly distressed the opposing artillery, and I am convinced hastened the enemy's decision to surrender. In the course of these operations, it has afforded me infinite satisfaction to observe that the skill of our officers and the courage of our men have uniformly converted the labours of the enemy into works of security for ourselves. I am happy to say, upon the whole, our loss has been inconsiderable; remarkably so, when the circumstances of the siege are taken into consideration.

The skill and attention of Mr. Gunning, surgeon to the forces (of whom I cannot speak too highly, or too strongly recommend to your Excellency), and that of the other medical officers will, I trust, be the means of preserving the valuable lives of our wounded officers and men. I am deeply concerned to say that, since my last report, a chance cannon shot has deprived the army of Major Clarke, an officer whose early exploits and distinguished qualities promised to render him one of its brightest ornaments.

Captain Eyre's misfortune did not admit of his being on shore; but the "Magnificent" was brought near to the scene of action, and I constantly profited from his advice and assistance.

The squadron has given the most powerful aid; it furnished ammunition and cannon for the batteries, with intelligent officers and brave seamen to fight them; their fire was most destructive. Captains Mowbray, Brisbane, and Griffiths, of the Royal Navy, were zealous in their co-operation; the two latter officers resumed their station off Corfu, whilst Captain Mowbray, by his unceasing exertions, facilitated our operations and supplied our numerous wants.

The gallantry and good conduct of the Royal Marines was noticed to your Excellency in my last report, and I can only assure you that it has been conspicuous throughout the service.

Colonel Wilder superintended the duties of the line to my perfect satisfaction.

Lieutenant Colonel Lowe commanded in the town, and was unwearied in calling forth the resources of the island, and in planning and forwarding a mode of attack by the lake, had the obstinacy of the enemy forced us to recur to such a measure.

The arrangements of Captain Williamson commanding the Royal Artillery were most excellent; the officers and men of the corps displayed their accustomed science and intrepidity.

The labours of Captain Thackery, commanding engineer, were incessant; his objects judicious, and his batteries admirably constructed. The officers of that department had severe duty, and acquitted themselves in a manner the most praiseworthy.

The army has been abundantly supplied through the exertions of the Commissariat, directed by Acting Assistant Commissary Forbes, a gentleman who has discharged his extensive and complicated duties entirely to my approbation.

Since Captain Wynyard's confinement the office of Adjutant General has been performed by Brigade Major Cust, a deserving officer long attached to my command.

Captain A'Court, who volunteered from Sicily, arrived in time to render me most essential service in the department of the Quartermaster General.

The limits of a report admit not of my noticing further the merits of individuals, but I can most conscientiously assure your Excellency, that every person belonging to this army has faithfully done his duty and deserves the commendation and support of his superiors.

The motives which induced me to propose this enterprise to your Excellency have acquired strength as I become more acquainted with the local position and the military and political relations of the island.

The enemy upon our landing had 1,600 regular and irregular troops; a force he could augment at pleasure, and easily bring to act against the adjacent and least protected of the liberated isles.

* * * * *

During the whole of the service on this island, Mr. Foresti has remained in the field, sharing with me the toils of the campaign.

Herewith I enclose the articles of capitulation, returns of killed and wounded, as also a return of prisoners and captured stores. This Despatch will be presented by Lieutenant Hartzenbughter, my aide-de-camp, whom I again recommend to your Excellency's notice and protection.

I have, &c.

P. S.—In my last letter I omitted to mention that Lieutenant Charters, with the Royal Marines of the "Belle Poule," formed a portion of the party which assaulted the enemy's lines. I now beg leave to supply the deficiency, and to bear testimony to their gallant conduct upon that occasion.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lord Liverpool to Lieutenant General Sir John Stuart, K.B., dated Downing-street, 23 February 1811.

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter of the 29th December last, enclosing various communications from Brigadier General Oswald respecting the Ionian Islands, containing his opinion on the means of blockading the canal of Corfu, I have the honour to acquaint you that, on the 17th of August last, instructions were sent from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to Admiral Sir Charles Cotton directing him to establish and maintain a vigorous blockade of the canal of that island.

COPY of a LETTER from Lieutenant-General Sir J. Stuart, K. B., to the Right Honourable the Earl of Liverpool, dated Messina, 2 March 1811.

My Lord.

BRIGADIER GENERAL OSWALD having signified to me his resolution to proceed to England by the packet, I am happy in the opportunity which will thus offer to your Lordship of referring to that officer himself for the more extensive details of the command which he has recently quitted, and in which his able and judicious conduct in all the political relations which have occurred, as well as military circumstances by which he has been distinguished, in conciliating the inhabitants of the islands, and in developing our national character to the adjacent continent, have established a most important basis to the prosecution of any future views that may be contemplated by His Majesty's Government in respect to that interesting quarter.

The state of organization in which the Brigadier General has left the islands in general, and the economy with which his establishments have been effected, will be considerations gratifying to your Lordship; and I trust my impressions of his merits in these military services which were committed to his execution will admit my venturing to your Lordship the hope that General Oswald may be deemed worthy of some mark of his Sovereign's most gracious approbation.

COPY of a LETTER from Lord Bathurst to Viscount Castlereagh, dated Downing-street, 9 October 1812.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's letter of the _____, conveying to me the representations of Mr. Foscardi of the inconvenience hitherto occasioned by the frequent changes which necessarily take place in the military commanders at the Ionian Islands, and the want of a permanent Governor; and I am to acquaint you, that in consequence of the above communication, I shall take measures for receiving the pleasure of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent with regard to the person whom His Royal Highness will be pleased to appoint to execute the civil as the military power of the island.

EXTRACT from a DESPATCH of Earl Bathurst to Lieutenant-General Lord W. Bentinck, dated Downing-street, 14 October 1812.

YOUR Lordship's Despatch, No. 40, respecting the want of a Mediterranean pass, which is felt by the vessels of the Ionian Islands, has been communicated to the Admiralty, and I have the honour of enclosing a copy of the answer which has been received from that department on the subject.

I have the honour of enclosing for your Lordship's information the copy of a letter from the Foreign Office respecting the establishment of a permanent form of Government for these islands, and a copy of the answer given to it by my desire. This may probably lead to the removal of the obstacles which now prevent the Lords of the Admiralty from furnishing their vessels with the Mediterranean pass.

COPY of a LETTER from J. Barrow, Esq., to Henry Goulburn, Esq., dated Admiralty, 7 October 1812.

Sir,

HAVING laid before my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty your letter of the 6th instant, transmitting copy of one with its enclosure from Lieutenant-General Lord William Bentinck, representing the nugatory effect of His Majesty's gracious permission to the inhabitants of the Ionian Isles to navigate under the British flag unless their vessels are furnished with the Mediterranean pass, I am commanded to acquaint you, for the information of Earl Bathurst, that their Lordships are not authorised to issue Mediterranean passes to any persons not being subjects of His Majesty.

22 October 1812.

Sir,

I AM directed by Viscount Castlereagh to transmit to you, for Earl Bathurst's information, the copy of a letter which, by command of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, Lord Castlereagh has addressed to Count Foscardi, the Deputy in this country from the Ionian Islands, in reply to the representations the Count had been accredited to make to His Majesty's Government upon the administration of those islands.

I am, &c.

Enclosure 3, in No. 11.

COPY of a LETTER from Viscount Castlereagh to Count Foscardi, dated Foreign Office, 22 October 1812.

Sir,

I AM to acquaint you, by the commands of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, that the representations you have been accredited to make by the civil authorities in the Ionian Islands, which are at present under the protection of Great Britain, have been taken into the fullest consideration.

His Royal Highness justly appreciates the sincerity of their wishes to become permanently united to Great Britain; and His Royal Highness has no doubt that he should find them attached and loyal subjects, not less eager to participate than zealous to preserve those blessings which naturally flow from the principles of the British Government, so calculated to combine the benefits of liberty and protection.

His Royal Highness, however, trusts that the authorities in the Ionian Islands will feel that under existing circumstances it is not possible to come to a final settlement of their interests and requests.

At the same time His Royal Highness is not the less solicitous to make such an alteration in the arrangement hitherto provided for the administration of the islands as may best conduce to their prosperity and happiness, by giving that arrangement a character of greater consistency and stability.

His Royal Highness has already extended to the Ionian Islands the benefits of the English flag for the protection of their commerce.

Understanding that the changes which have taken place in the military commandants who have been sent thither under British authority, have been the cause of much inconvenience, His Royal Highness has determined to send a Governor or Civil Commissioner to the islands, who shall be entrusted with the civil and military authority, in the same manner as has been practised in Malta, and who will not be liable to be changed, except by the immediate authority of His Royal Highness.

I am, &c.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-General Lord W. C. Bentinck to the Right Honourable Earl Bathurst, dated Palermo, 23 January 1813.

My Lord,

In consequence of instructions from His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, received in the month of September last, I directed Major Oswald, 35th Regiment, to proceed to Cephalonia, with a view to the formation of a second battalion to the Greek Light Infantry regiment from such of the officers and men of the Ionian Greek corps as might be willing to transfer their services.

I do

I do myself the honour of enclosing Major Oswald's report on the subject, by which it appears that there are but few volunteers for the proposed transfer, and many individuals amongst the Ionian Greeks who are ill calculated for any but garrison service. In the meantime, I have allowed such as have come forward to be received into the Greek Light Infantry regiment, and I propose further to augment its strength by allowing the enlistment of the disbanded soldiers of His Sicilian Majesty's late Albanian corps, if they have not been already sent back to their own country.

With respect to the description of force furnished from the Ionian Isles or from the neighbouring coast, it appears to me certainly preferable that the men should be for general instead of limited service; but in either case, in a military point of view, I do not conceive that an augmentation of such force would be attended with any benefit to the British Government, and viewing the untractable disposition of the greater part both of officers and men, it may possibly be placed in a situation to become inconvenient and dangerous.

Enclosure 1, in No. 12.

A.

COPY of a LETTER from Major Oswald, 35th Regiment, to His Excellency Lieutenant General Lord William Bentinck, dated Palermo, 3 January 1813.

My Lord,

I HAVE already had the honour of representing to your Lordship that the proposal made to the Ionian Greeks to transfer their services has not been attended with the success equal to my expectations, nor to those apparently entertained by His Royal Highness the Commander in Chief.

The result of my proposal to the corps has been, that the native officers assured me of their desire to accept the offer made to them; that the only difficulty arose from the men having been so recently engaged as the 28th of October last on the original limited capitulation to serve in the Ionian Islands only, to which they are now more attached from the late augmentation of their pay.

During the few days that I was at Cephalonia about 50 men came forward and were sworn in; these men were mostly brought by Captain Callogero, who was particularly zealous in promoting the service; the other captains having requested that time might be allowed them to overcome the prejudices of their men in favour of their limited capitulation; at their request I suspended any further proceedings and returned to Zante, for the purpose of obtaining further instructions from General Airey relative to those men who might not ultimately volunteer their services.

It is necessary to mention that there are in this corps many individuals who are by no means desirable subjects for a corps to be employed for general service; these are men with families, others past that period of life at which men easily adopt new habits, and consequently less susceptible of the discipline necessary in a corps subject to all the varieties of service.

From what I have had the honour to state, I trust your Lordship will be of opinion that no advantage is to be derived from the acquisition of the whole of this corps, and that by setting aside the present capitulation few or none of the men who are best adapted for general service would refuse the offer made them, and the companies might soon be completed with other men.

Perhaps your Lordship may not be inclined at this moment to permit even a temporary augmentation of the force in the Ionian Islands by the discharge of the individuals alluded to.

I would beg therefore to submit for your Lordship's consideration, that such inconvenience may be easily avoided by granting me permission to form three companies of the second battalion from such men as can be procured from the late Albanian corps of his Sicilian Majesty and those men already enlisted in Zante. In the event of not succeeding in raising a sufficient number of men from the late corps above mentioned, there will be no difficulty in immediately forming two companies from the numerous candidates for service, both in Sparta and Albania, as will appear from the accompanying proposal.

My object, my Lord, is to form the proposed battalions on good principles; abundance of men are easily to be obtained, most anxious and willing to enter the service according to the capitulation of the corps.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 2, in No. 12.

COPY of a DESPATCH from the Military Secretary to Lieut.-General Lord W. Bentinck to Major Oswald, 35th Regiment, dated Palermo, 8 January 1813.

Sir,

THE Commander of the Forces directs me to reply to your letter of the 3d instant, and to state to you that, as by the instructions from the Commander-in-Chief, the formation of the 2d battalion Greek Light Infantry is made to depend on the transfer of service of the Ionian Greeks, who seem generally unwilling to accede to such transfer, his Lordship does not feel authorised to permit the formation of the 2d battalion on any but the terms prescribed. He desires me, however, to notify to you his intention of referring the business to the ultimate decision of the Commander-in-Chief.

In the meantime his Lordship authorises such of the Ionian Greeks as have already volunteered to transfer their services, being received into the Greek Light Infantry; he sanctions also the enlistment into the same corps of the Albanians lately in His Sicilian Majesty's service.

These are to be enlisted for the Greek Light Infantry generally, and if it be your wish to take charge of them until the decision of the Commander-in-Chief is known, his Lordship has no objection to your so doing.

The Commander of the Forces has no authority for setting aside the present capitulation of the Ionian Greeks.

I have, &c.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to report to your Lordship, that I have judged it expedient to make a still further deduction from the force in the Ionian Isles, and have accordingly directed Lieutenant-General Macfarlane to make the necessary arrangements for removing to Sicily five companies of the 35th Regiment. The various garrisons in the Ionian Isles will then amount to about 2,000 men; that of Lissa will remain as heretofore.

COPY of a LETTER from the Right Honourable Lord William Bentinck to the Right Honourable the Earl Bathurst, dated Leghorn, 6 April 1814.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship the copy of a letter I have received from Lieutenant-General Campbell, reporting the occupation of the island of Paxo by a small detachment of troops under the orders of Lieutenant Colonel Church, of the 2d Greek Light Infantry, whose communication on the subject is also enclosed for your Lordship's information.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 14.

COPY of a LETTER from Lieutenant-General James Campbell to His Excellency the Commander of the Forces at Sicily, dated Zante, 12 March 1814.

My Lord,

REFERRING to my letter of date the 13th February last, I have now to report to your Lordship the occupation of the island of Paxo by a small detachment of His Majesty's forces on the 14th ultimo. Such has been the tempestuous state of the weather, and the consequent stoppage of our communications, that I did not receive Lieutenant-Colonel Church's letter, herewith enclosed, detailing this little enterprise, until yesterday morning.

I have appointed Major the Honourable Sir Charles Gordon, of the Greek Light Infantry to the civil and military command at Paxo.

It will in great measure, depend upon the sentiments of the naval officer commanding the blockading squadron off Corfu, whether or not it may be expedient also to possess ourselves of the small and nearly insulated rock of Parga, on the main land, abreast of Paxo, together with its anchorage, as a further means of straitening the enemy's garrison of Corfu, and cutting off his supplies.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 2, in No. 14.

COPY of a LETTER from Lieutenant-Colonel Church, commanding at Paxo, to Lieutenant-General Campbell, dated Paxo, 15 February 1814.

Sir,

IN obedience to your Excellency's orders, I proceeded with a detachment of His Majesty's troops to act in concert with Captain Taylor, commanding the blockade of Corfu, for the reduction of the island of Paxo. The judicious arrangements of that officer enabled me to land yesterday morning at the back of the island, from whence we marched rapidly across the country, and arrived near the enemy's fort situated on an island in the harbour, almost as soon as the information of our descent, and succeeded in preventing the junction of the enemy's troops in the town and the fortress. A summons to surrender was immediately despatched to the French commander, and taken to him by Brigade-Major Arata, to which we received the annexed menacing refusal. I had made my dispositions to cross the harbour and escalate the fort, of which the enemy was not aware. Brigade-Major Arata having communicated to me by signal the result of his conference, we crossed over in boats to the advanced guard, and succeeded in surprising the gate of the fortress open, the enemy still conceiving we were on the other side of the water, and thus became masters of the fort.

The taking of this island, which was an outpost of Corfu, having been effected by surprise, has happily prevented bloodshed, but it is not the less incumbent on me to express to your Excellency the obligations I have to Captain Taylor, who, together with Captain Noel and Mr. Ullock, of the Royal Navy, and a detachment of seamen and Royal Marines, accompanied the troops throughout. The zeal and anxiety of Captain Taylor to serve us, was also conspicuous in every officer and seaman under his orders. I had also the pleasure of being joined by Captain Black of His Majesty's ship "Havannah."

To Brigade Major Arata's address in having communicated to me the state of the enemy, we are much indebted for our success in surprising the enemy's fort; this, added to his other zealous services, entitles him to my warmest recommendation; and I beg also to assure your Excellency that my orders were promptly executed by Captain Garland and Lieutenant Gaffori, of the Royal Corsican Rangers, Captain Colocotroni of the Guides, Lieutenant J. Hill of the Royal Artillery, Lieutenant Stenton, 35th Regiment, and Lieutenant Campbell, Royal Marines, and the officers, non-commissioned, and soldiers of the detachment of Royal Marines, 35th Regiment, Royal Corsican Rangers, of the 2d Regiment, Duke of York's Greek Light Infantry. The latter were soon joined by their countrymen in the French service, not one of whom fired a shot against us.

I have, &c.

Le Capitaine Roy, Commandant à Paxo, à MM. le Commodore Taylor, et le Colonel Church, Commandant les Forces de Sa Majesté Britannique.

Messieurs,

JE commande le fort S. Nicolo par les ordres qui m'ont été donnés pour y défendre et maintenir les droits de mon Souverain. Ne voulant pas tromper sa confiance, je vous déclare que je repousserai la force par la force.

COPY of a LETTER from Viscount Castlereagh to Lieut.-General Campbell, dated Paris, 27 April 1814.

Sir,

IN consequence of the convention lately concluded between the Allies and France, extracts of which I have the honour to enclose, it has become necessary to make an arrangement by which the island of Corfu may, under the stipulations of article third, be given up by the French commander, and commissioners are to be respectively appointed by the Allies and France, in order to regulate this cession. General Boulnoy has accordingly been directed by the French Government to act in that capacity on their part, and I am to acquaint you that his Royal Highness the Prince Regent has been graciously pleased, with the consent of the Allies, to select you on their part. This instruction will be delivered to you by the above-named General, and you will concert with him the necessary measures for the occupation of the island.

You will, however, take possession of it in the name of the Allies generally, and not specially of Great Britain. You will employ for this purpose such portion of the troops under your command as you may judge expedient, and you will take inventories of all such articles as under the stipulations of the treaty are to be given up by the French commander.

With regard to the civil government of the island, you will use your own discretion, and I have the fullest reliance upon your judgment and experience in the execution of that trust.

I shall furnish Admiral Sir John Gore with a duplicate of this Despatch, and request him to give you the utmost assistance in his power, either in the removal of the French garrison to such port as may be agreed upon in common with the French commissary, or in the transport of the British troops who still occupy the island.

I have herewith forwarded the proclamation by me put in circulation immediately after the day and manner of the cession was arranged.

Au nom de la très Sainte et Indivisible Trinité.

SA Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande ayant fait connaître à Leurs Majestés l'Empereur d'Autriche, l'Empereur des Français, le Roi de Prusse, et l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, que l'Assemblée Législative des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes, dûment informée de l'intention de Sa Majesté de consentir à l'union de ces Iles au Royaume de Grèce, s'est prononcée unanimement en faveur de cette union; et la condition établie par la dernière clause du Protocole signé par les Plénipotentiaires des Cinq Puissances le 1^r Août dernier se trouvant ainsi remplie, Leurs dites Majestés, savoir, la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, l'Empereur d'Autriche, l'Empereur des Français, le Roi de Prusse, et l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, ont résolu de constater par un Traité solennel l'assentiment qu'elles ont donné à cette union, en stipulant les conditions sous lesquelles elle s'effectuera.

A cet effet leurs dites Majestés ont nommé pour leurs Plénipotentiaires, savoir :—

Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, le Très Honorable Jean Comte Russell, Vicomte Amberley de Amberley et Ardsalla, Pair du Royaume Uni, Chevalier du Très Noble Ordre de la Jarretière, Conseiller de Sa Majesté Britannique en Son Conseil Privé, Son Principal Secrétaire d'Etat pour les Affaires Etrangères;

Sa Majesté l'Empereur d'Autriche, Roi de Hongrie et de Bohême, le Comte Felix de Wimpffen, Son Chambellan actuel et Chargé d'Affaires auprès du Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique;

Sa Majesté l'Empereur des Français, le Sieur Camille de Nompère de Champagny, Marquis de Cadore, Son Chambellan et Chargé d'Affaires auprès du Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique;

Sa Majesté le Roi de Prusse, le Sieur Albert, Comte de Bernstorff-Stintenburg, Son Ministre d'Etat et Chambellan, Grand-Croix de Son Ordre de l'Aigle Rouge avec des feuilles de chêne, et Grand Commandeur de Son Ordre de la Maison Royale de Hohenzollern en diamants, Grand-Croix de l'Ordre Ducal de la Branche Ernestine de la Maison de Saxe, et de l'Ordre Impérial de la Légion d'Honneur de France, Chevalier de l'Ordre Impérial de St. Stanislas de Russie de première classe, Grand-Croix de l'Ordre Royal du Mérite Civil de la Couronne de Bavière, de l'Ordre Impérial du Lion et du Soleil de Perse avec le Grand Cordon vert, de l'Ordre Royal et Militaire du Christ de Portugal, Chevalier de l'Ordre Royal de St. Janvier, &c., Son Ambassadeur Extraordinaire et Plénipotentiaire près Sa Majesté Britannique;

Sa Majesté l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, le Sieur Philippe Baron de Brunnow, Son Conseiller Privé Actuel, Ambassadeur Extraordinaire et Plénipotentiaire près Sa Majesté Britannique, Chevalier des Ordres de Russie, Grand-Croix de l'Ordre Impérial de la Légion d'Honneur, de l'Aigle Rouge de Prusse de première classe, et Commandeur de l'Ordre de St. Etienne d'Autriche, &c., &c., &c.:

Lesquels, après avoir échangé leurs pleins pouvoirs, trouvés en bonne et due forme, ont arrêté et signé les Articles suivants :—

ARTICLE I.

Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande renonce, sous les conditions ci-dessous spécifiées, au Protectorat des Iles de Corfou, Cephalonie, Zante, Sainte Maure, Ithaque, Cerigo, et Paxo, avec leurs Dépendances, que le Traité signé à Paris le 5 Novembre, 1815, par les Plénipotentiaires de la Grande Bretagne, d'Autriche, de Prusse, et de Russie, a constitué en un seul Etat libre et indépendant, sous la dénomination d'Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes, placé sous la protection immédiate et exclusive de Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, ses héritiers et successeurs.

Leurs Majestés l'Empereur d'Autriche, l'Empereur des Français, le Roi de Prusse, et l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, acceptent, sous les conditions ci-dessous spécifiées, l'abandon que Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande fait du Protectorat des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes; et reconnaissent, conjointement avec Sa Majesté, l'union des dits Etats au Royaume Hellénique.

ARTICLE II.

Les Iles Ioniennes, après leur union au Royaume de Grèce, jouiront des avantages d'une neutralité perpétuelle; et en conséquence, aucune force armée, navale ou militaire, ne pourra jamais être réunie ou stationnée sur le territoire ou dans les eaux de ces Iles, au delà du nombre strictement nécessaire pour maintenir l'ordre public, et pour assurer la perception des revenus de l'Etat.

Les Hautes Parties Contractantes s'engagent à respecter le principe de neutralité stipulé par le présent Article.

ARTICLE III.

Comme conséquence nécessaire de la neutralité dont les Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes sont appelés ainsi à jouir, les fortifications construites dans l'Ile de Corfou et dans ses dépendances immédiates, étant désormais sans objet, devront être démolies, et leur démolition s'effectuera avant la retraite des troupes employées par la Grande Bretagne à occuper ces Iles en sa qualité de Puissance Protectrice. Cette démolition se fera de la manière que Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande jugera suffisante pour remplir les intentions des Hautes Parties Contractantes.

ARTICLE IV.

La réunion des Iles Ioniennes au Royaume Hellénique n'apportera aucun changement aux avantages acquis à la navigation et au commerce étrangers en vertu de Traités et de Conventions conclus par les Puissances étrangères avec le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique, en sa qualité de Protectrice des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes.

Tous les engagements qui résultent des dites transactions, ainsi que des réglemens actuellement en vigueur, seront maintenus et strictement observés comme par le passé.

ARTICLE V.

La réunion des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes au Royaume de Grèce n'invalidera en rien les principes établis par la législation existante de ces Iles, en matière de liberté du culte et de tolérance religieuse; conséquemment, les droits et immunités consacrés en matière de religion par les Chapitres I et V de la Charte Constitutionnelle des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes, et spécialement la reconnaissance de l'Eglise Grecque Orthodoxe comme religion dominante dans ces Iles; l'entière liberté du culte accordée à l'Eglise de l'Etat de la Puissance Protectrice; et la parfaite tolérance promise aux autres communions Chrétiennes,—seront maintenus après l'union dans toute leur force et valeur.

La protection spéciale garantie à l'Eglise Catholique Romaine, ainsi que les avantages dont elle est présentement en possession, seront également maintenus; et les sujets appartenant à cette communion jouiront dans les Iles Ioniennes de la même liberté de culte qui leur a été reconnue en Grèce par le Protocole du 3 Février, 1830.

Le principe de l'entière égalité civile et politique entre les sujets appartenant aux divers rites, consacré en Grèce par le même Protocole, sera pareillement en vigueur dans les Iles Ioniennes.

ARTICLE VI.

Les Cours de France, de la Grande Bretagne, et de Russie, en leur qualité de Puissances Garantes du Royaume de Grèce, se réservent de conclure un Traité avec le Gouvernement Hellénique sur les arrangements que pourra nécessiter la réunion des Iles Ioniennes à la Grèce.

Les forces militaires de Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande seront retirées du territoire des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes dans l'espace de trois mois, ou plus tôt si faire se peut, après la ratification du susdit Traité.

ARTICLE VII.

Les Cours de France, de la Grande Bretagne, et de Russie, s'engagent à communiquer aux Cours d'Autriche et de Prusse le Traité qu'elles auront conclu avec le Gouvernement Hellénique conformément à l'Article précédent.

ARTICLE VIII.

Les Hautes Parties Contractantes conviennent entr'elles, qu'après la mise à exécution des arrangements compris dans le présent Traité, les stipulations du Traité du 5 Novembre, 1815, conclu entre les Cours de la Grande Bretagne, d'Autriche, de Prusse, et de Russie, relatif aux Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes, cesseront d'être en vigueur, à l'exception de la clause par laquelle les Cours d'Autriche, de Prusse, et de Russie ont renoncé à tout droit ou prétention particulière qu'elles pourraient avoir sur toutes ou sur quelques unes des Iles ou de leurs dépendances, reconnues par le Traité du 5 Novembre, 1815, comme formant un seul Etat libre et indépendant, sous la dénomination des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes. Par le présent Traité Leurs Majestés la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, l'Empereur d'Autriche, l'Empereur des Français, le Roi de Prusse, et l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, renouvellent et confirment la dite renonciation en leur nom, pour leurs héritiers et leurs successeurs.

ARTICLE IX.

Le présent Traité sera ratifié, et les ratifications en seront échangées à Londres dans le délai de six semaines, ou plus tôt si faire se peut.

En foi de quoi les Plénipotentiaires respectifs l'ont signé, et y ont apposé le cachet de leurs armes.

LE Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique pour les Affaires Etrangères a exposé les raisons qui déterminent le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté à s'entendre avec les Cours d'Autriche, de France, de Prusse, et de Russie sur la révision du Traité du 5 Novembre, 1815, en vertu duquel les Iles Ioniennes ont été placées sous la protection immédiate et exclusive de la Grande Bretagne.

Animé du désir de consolider par de nouveaux arrangements le bien-être des populations confiées jusqu'ici à sa sollicitude, le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique considérerait la réunion des Iles Ioniennes au Royaume Hellénique comme la solution la plus conforme aux intérêts mutuels des deux pays, liés entr'eux par une communauté d'origine et de croyance religieuse.

Les Représentants d'Autriche, de France, de Prusse, et de Russie ont déclaré :—

Que leurs Cours reconnaissent unanimement au Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique le droit de renoncer à l'exercice du Protectorat exclusif établi par le Traité du 5 Novembre, 1815 :

Qu'elles sont disposées à accorder leur assentiment et à prêter leur concours à la réunion des Iles Ioniennes au Royaume Hellénique, si les vœux du Parlement Ionien se prononcent en faveur de ce plan :

Qu'elles réservent au Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique de consulter à ce sujet les Représentants de l'Etat Septinsulaire :

Qu'après avoir acquis la certitude de l'adhésion de cette Assemblée, les Cours d'Autriche, de France, de Prusse, et de Russie se déclareront prêtes à se concerter avec le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique sur la rédaction définitive du Traité destiné à placer l'arrangement proposé sous la sanction d'un acte Européen.

In the name of the Most Holy and Indivisible Trinity.

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland having made known to their Majesties the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of the French, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor of all the Russias, that the Legislative Assembly of the United States of the Ionian Islands, having been duly informed of the intention of Her Majesty to consent to the union of those Islands to the Kingdom of Greece, has unanimously pronounced in favour of that union; and the condition prescribed by the last clause of the Protocol signed by the Plenipotentiaries of the Five Powers on the 1st of August last being thus fulfilled; their said Majesties, that is to say, the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of the French, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor of all the Russias, have resolved to record in a solemn Treaty the assent which they have given to that union, stipulating at the same time the conditions under which it shall be effected.

For this purpose their said Majesties have named as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say :—

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Right Honourable John Earl Russell, Viscount Amberley of Amberley and Arsalla, a Peer of the United Kingdom, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, a Member of Her Britannic Majesty's Privy Council, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs ;

His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, King of Hungary and Bohemia, the Count Felix de Wimpffen, His actual Chamberlain, and Chargé d'Affaires to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty ;

His Majesty the Emperor of the French, the Sieur Camille de Nompère de Champagny, Marquis de Cadore, His Chamberlain, and Chargé d'Affaires to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty ;

His Majesty the King of Prussia, the Sieur Albert Count de Bernstorff-Stintenburg, His Minister of State and Chamberlain, Grand Cross of His Order of the Red Eagle with oak leaves, and Grand Commander of His Order of the Royal House of Hohenzollern in diamonds, Grand Cross of the Ducal Order of the Ernestine Branch of the House of Saxony, and of the Imperial Order of the Legion of Honour of France, Knight of the Imperial Order of St. Stanislaus of Russia of the first class, Grand Cross of the Royal Order of Civil Merit of the Crown of Bavaria, of the Imperial Order of the Lion and Sun of Persia with the Green Grand Cordon, of the Royal and Military Order of Christ of Portugal, Knight of the Royal Order of St. Januarius, &c., His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Her Britannic Majesty;

His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, the Sieur Philip Baron de Brunnow, His actual Privy Councillor, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Her Britannic Majesty, Knight of the Orders of Russia, Grand Cross of the Imperial Order of the Legion of Honour, of the Red Eagle of Prussia of the first class, and Commander of the Order of St. Stephen of Austria, &c.;

Who, after having exchanged their full powers, found in good and due form, have concluded and signed the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland renounces, on the conditions hereinafter specified, the Protectorate over the Islands of Corfu, Cephalonia, Zante, Santa Maura, Ithaca, Cerigo, and Paxo, with their dependencies, which, by the Treaty signed at Paris on the 5th of November, 1815, by the Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain, Austria, Prussia, and Russia, were constituted a single free and independent State, under the denomination of the United States of the Ionian Islands, placed under the immediate and exclusive protection of His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, his heirs and successors.

Their Majesties the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of the French, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor of all the Russias, accept, on the conditions hereinafter specified, the renunciation by Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland of the Protectorate of the Ionian Islands; and, in conjunction with Her Majesty, recognize the union of the said States with the Hellenic Kingdom.

ARTICLE II.

The Ionian Islands, after their union to the Kingdom of Greece, shall enjoy the advantages of a perpetual neutrality; consequently no armed force, either naval or military, shall at any time be assembled or stationed upon the territory or in the waters of those Islands, beyond the number that may be strictly necessary for the maintenance of public order, and to secure the collection of the public revenue.

The High Contracting Parties engage to respect the principle of neutrality stipulated by the present Article.

ARTICLE III.

As as a necessary consequence of the neutrality to be thus enjoyed by the United States of the Ionian Islands, the fortifications constructed in the Island of Corfu and its immediate dependencies, having no longer any object, shall be demolished, and the demolition thereof shall be effected previously to the withdrawal of the troops employed by Great Britain for the occupation of those Islands in her character as Protecting Power. This demolition shall take place in such manner as Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain shall deem sufficient to fulfil the intentions of the High Contracting Parties.

ARTICLE IV.

The union of the Ionian Islands to the Hellenic Kingdom shall not involve any change as to the advantages conceded to foreign commerce and navigation in virtue of Treaties and Conventions concluded by foreign Powers with the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, in her character of Protector of the United States of the Ionian Islands.

All the engagements which result from the said transactions, as well as from the regulations actually in force, shall be maintained and strictly observed as hitherto.

In consequence, it is expressly understood that foreign vessels and commerce in Ionian ports, and, reciprocally, Ionian vessels and commerce in foreign ports, as well as the navigation between Ionian ports and the ports of Greece, shall continue to be subject to the same treatment, and placed under the same conditions, as before the union of the Ionian Islands to Greece.

ARTICLE V.

The union of the United States of the Ionian Islands to the Kingdom of Greece shall in no wise invalidate the principles established by the existing legislation of those Islands with regard to freedom of worship and religious toleration; accordingly the rights and immunities established in matters of religion by Chapters 1 and 5 of the Constitutional

Charter of the United States of the Ionian Islands, and specifically the recognition of the Orthodox Greek Church as the dominant religion in those Islands; the entire liberty of worship granted to the Established Church of the Protecting Power; and the perfect toleration promised to other Christian communions,—shall, after the union, be maintained in their full force and effect.

The special protection guaranteed to the Roman Catholic Church, as well as the advantages of which that Church is actually in possession, shall be equally maintained; and the subjects belonging to that communion shall enjoy in the Ionian Islands the same freedom of worship which is recognized in their favour by the Protocol of the 3rd of February, 1830.

The principle of entire civil and political equality between subjects belonging to different creeds, established in Greece by the same Protocol, shall be likewise in force in the Ionian Islands.

ARTICLE VI.

The Courts of France, Great Britain, and Russia, in their character of Guaranteeing Powers of the Kingdom of Greece, reserve to themselves to conclude a Treaty with the Hellenic Government with regard to the arrangements which may be rendered necessary by the union of the Ionian Islands to Greece.

The military forces of Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland shall be withdrawn from the territory of the United States of the Ionian Islands in three months, or sooner if possible, after the ratification of the said Treaty.

ARTICLE VII.

The Courts of France, Great Britain, and Russia engage to communicate to the Courts of Austria and Prussia the Treaty which they shall have concluded with the Hellenic Government in conformity with the preceding Article.

ARTICLE VIII.

The High Contracting Parties agree that from and after the coming into operation of the arrangements comprised in the present Treaty, the stipulations of the Treaty of the 5th of November, 1815, concluded between the Courts of Great Britain, Austria, Prussia, and Russia, relative to the United States of the Ionian Islands, shall cease to be in force, with the exception of the clause whereby the Courts of Austria, Prussia, and Russia renounced every right or particular pretension which they might have formed in respect to all or any of those Islands or their dependencies, recognized by the Treaty of the 5th of November, 1815, as forming a single free and independent State under the denomination of the United States of the Ionian Islands. By the present Treaty their Majesties the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of the French, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor of all the Russias, renew and confirm the said renunciation in their name, for their heirs and successors.

ARTICLE IX.

The present Treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at London in six weeks, or sooner if possible.

In witness whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seals of their arms.

Done at London, the fourteenth day of November, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three.

Protocol of the Conference held at the Foreign Office, August 1, 1863.

Present:

The Plenipotentiaries of Austria ;
 France ;
 Great Britain ;
 Prussia ; and Russia.

THE Principal Secretary of State of Her Britannic Majesty explained the reasons which induce the Government of Her Majesty to come to an understanding with the Courts of Austria, France, Prussia, and Russia as to the revision of the Treaty of the 5th of November, 1815, in virtue of which the Ionian Islands were placed under the immediate and exclusive protection of Great Britain.

Animated by the desire to consolidate by new arrangements the welfare of the people hitherto confided to its care, the Government of Her Britannic Majesty would consider the union of the Ionian Islands to the Hellenic Kingdom as the solution most conformable to the mutual interests of the two countries, connected with each other by community of origin and of religious belief.

The Representatives of Austria, France, Prussia, and Russia declared :—

That their Courts unanimously acknowledge the right of the Government of Her Britannic Majesty to renounce the exercise of the exclusive Protectorate established by the Treaty of the 5th of November, 1815 :

That they are disposed to grant their assent and to lend their support to the union of the Ionian Islands to the Hellenic Kingdom, if the wish of the Ionian Parliament should be pronounced in favour of that plan :

That they reserve to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty to consult the Representatives of the Septinsular State on this subject :

That after having obtained certain knowledge of the assent of that Assembly, the Courts of Austria, France, Prussia, and Russia will declare themselves ready to come to an agreement with the Government of Her Britannic Majesty with regard to the definitive terms of the Treaty destined to place the proposed arrangement under the sanction of a European Act.

CONVENTION between Her Majesty and the King of the Hellenes, respecting the Claims of British Subjects and others for Services in the Ionian Islands.

Signed at London, March 29, 1864.

[Ratifications exchanged at London, April 25, 1864.]

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and His Majesty the King of the Hellenes, being desirous to make arrangements with regard to the claims of British subjects and other individuals in respect of services rendered to the Government of the United States of the Ionian Islands while those States were under the Protection of Her Britannic Majesty, have agreed to conclude a Convention for that purpose, and have named as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say :

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Right Honourable John Earl Russell, Viscount Amberley of Amberley and Ardsalla, a Peer of the United Kingdom, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, a Member of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, Her Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs :

And His Majesty the King of the Hellenes, the Sieur Charilaüs S. Tricoupi, a Member of the National Assembly of the Hellenes ;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded the following Articles :—

ARTICLE I.

Whereas pensions have been granted at various times to British subjects by the Ionian Government, or are at the present moment about to be granted, in pursuance of the established rules in force in the Ionian Islands on the subject of pensions ; and whereas the amount of such pensions is seven thousand four hundred and three pounds eight shillings and four pence sterling a-year, as by the Schedule A hereto annexed, His Majesty the King of the Hellenes agrees that, after provision shall have been

Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, et Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes, désirant faire des arrangements relatifs aux prétentions de sujets Britanniques et autres individus à raison de services rendus au Gouvernement des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes pendant que ces Etats se trouvaient sous la protection de Sa Majesté Britannique, ont résolu de conclure une Convention à cet effet, et ont nommé pour leurs Plénipotentiaires, savoir :

Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, le Très Honorable Jean Comte Russell, Vicomte Amberley de Amberley et Ardsalla, Pair du Royaume Uni, Chevalier du Très Noble Ordre de la Jarretière, Conseiller de Sa Majesté Britannique en Son Conseil Privé, Son Principal Secrétaire d'Etat pour les Affaires Etrangères ;

Et Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes, le Sieur Charilaüs S. Tricoupi, Représentant à l'Assemblée Nationale des Hellènes ;

Lesquels, après s'être communiqué leurs pleins pouvoirs respectifs, trouvés en bonne et due forme, ont arrêté et conclu les Articles suivants :—

ARTICLE I.

Considérant qu'à différentes époques des pensions ont été accordées à des sujets Britanniques par le Gouvernement Ionien, ou qu'elles vont être accordées actuellement, en conformité aux règles établies aux Iles Ioniennes en matière de pensions ; allocations dont le total s'élève à la somme de sept mille quatre cent trois livres, huit schellings, et quatre pence sterling par an, d'après la Liste A ci-annexée, Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes promet, qu'après avoir pourvu au paiement de la somme de dix made for the sum of ten thousand pounds sterling a-year, mentioned in Article V of the Treaty signed on this day between Their Majesties the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Emperor of the French, and the Emperor of all the Russias on the one part, and His Majesty the King of the Hellenes on the other part, the said amount shall form the next charge upon the Customs revenue of Corfu and of the other Ionian Islands, and shall be paid by half-yearly instalments to Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Corfu, for the purpose of being paid in detail to the several persons entitled to the said pensions.

And whereas it has become necessary to grant compensation allowances to certain other persons now in the service of the Ionian Government, who will lose their respective employments in consequence of the union of the Ionian Islands with Greece; and whereas such allowances amount to three thousand two hundred and seventy-two pounds twelve shillings sterling a-year, as by the Schedule B hereto annexed; His Majesty the King of the Hellenes agrees that the said amount shall form a charge upon the revenues of the Kingdom of Greece, and shall be paid by half-yearly instalments to Her Britannic Majesty's Minister at Athens, for the purpose of being paid in detail to the several persons entitled to the said compensation allowances.

These several pensions and allowances shall become chargeable to and payable by the Government of Greece from and after the cessation of British authority in the Ionian Islands; and accordingly the first payments shall be made to Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Corfu and to Her Britannic Majesty's Minister at Athens ten days before the 31st of March, 30th of June, 30th of September, or 31st of December, which may next follow the day of the cessation of British authority in the Ionian Islands; and afterwards the payments shall be made ten days before the expiration of every subsequent half-year.

And whereas certain Ionian subjects are in the enjoyment of pensions granted to them for services under the Ionian Government, His Majesty the King of the Hellenes undertakes that their rights to such pensions shall be respected, and that they shall duly continue to receive the same. The British Minister at Athens, after receiving a list of such pensions from the Lord High Commissioner of Her Britannic Majesty, shall deliver the same to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Greece, and no Ionian subject shall have a claim upon His Hellenic Majesty on account of being at present in the mille livres sterling par an, mentionnée à l'Article V du Traité signé aujourd'hui entre Leurs Majestés la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, l'Empereur des Français, et l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, d'une part, et Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes de l'autre part, la susdite allocation constituera la seconde charge à prélever sur les revenus de la douane de Corfou et des autres Iles Ioniennes, payable par semestre au Consul de Sa Majesté Britannique à Corfou, pour être répartie parmi les individus appelés à jouir de ces pensions.

Prenant également en considération la nécessité d'accorder des indemnités à certains autres individus actuellement au service du Gouvernement Ionien, lesquels perdront leurs emplois respectifs par suite de l'union des Iles Ioniennes à la Grèce; allocation dont le total s'élève à trois mille deux cent soixante-douze livres, douze schellings sterling par an, d'après la Liste B ci-annexée; Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes promet que la dite somme sera prise à la charge des revenus du Royaume de Grèce, et qu'elle sera versée, par semestre, entre les mains du Ministre de Sa Majesté Britannique à Athènes, pour être répartie parmi les individus appelés à participer à ces indemnités.

Les dites pensions et indemnités seront payables à la charge du Gouvernement Hellénique, après la cessation de l'autorité Britannique aux Iles Ioniennes. En conséquence les premiers paiements dûs au Consul de Sa Majesté Britannique à Corfou, et au Ministre de Sa Majesté Britannique à Athènes, devront être effectués dix jours avant la date du 31 Mars, du 30 Juin, du 30 Septembre, ou du 31 Décembre, date qui viendra à échoir après le jour où cessera l'autorité Britannique aux Iles Ioniennes. Subséquemment ces paiements se feront dix jours avant l'échéance de chaque semestre.

Considérant enfin que plusieurs sujets Ioniens jouissent de pensions qui leur ont été accordées en rémunération de services rendus au Gouvernement Ionien, Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes s'engage à faire respecter le droit des titulaires, de manière à ce qu'ils continuent à toucher dûment ces pensions. Le Ministre Britannique à Athènes, après avoir reçu du Lord Haut Commissaire de Sa Majesté Britannique la liste de ces pensions, la remettra au Ministre des Affaires Etrangères de Grèce. Aucun sujet Ionien n'aura à réclamer de Sa Majesté Hellénique une pension, en préenjoyment of any pension, unless the same be included in such list.

ARTICLE II.

Dans le mois de Janvier de chaque année le Ministre de Sa Majesté Britannique à Athènes remettra au Ministre des Affaires Etrangères de Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes une liste des ayants-droit à des pensions et à des indemnités en vertu de l'Article précédent. En préparant cette liste on retranchera de celle de l'année précédente les noms des personnes qui seront décédées, et aussi de celles qui auront accepté de la Couronne Britannique des emplois dont la rétribution atteigne le montant entier de la pension ou de l'indemnité à laquelle ils ont droit. En outre, le montant de la pension ou de l'indemnité des personnes dont les noms seront conservés sur la liste sera réduit du montant des salaires qui seraient dûs à ces personnes pour des emplois auxquels ils auraient été nommés, et dont la rétribution serait moindre que le montant entier des allocations qui leur sont dues.

ARTICLE III.

La présente Convention sera ratifiée, et les ratifications en seront échangées à Londres en même temps que les ratifications du Traité de ce jour.

En foi de quoi les Plénipotentiaires respectifs l'ont signée, et y ont apposé le cachet de leurs armes.

Fait à Londres, le vingt-neuf Mars, de l'an de grâce mil huit cent soixante-quatre.

TREATY between Her Majesty, the Emperor of the French, and the Emperor of Russia, on the one part, and the King of the Hellenes on the other part, respecting the Union of the Ionian Islands to the Kingdom of Greece.

Signed at London, March 29, 1864.

Au Nom de la très Sainte et Indivisible Trinité.

SA Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande a fait connaître à l'Assemblée Législative des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes, qu'en vue de réunir éventuellement ces Iles au Royaume de Grèce, Elle était prête, si le Parlement Ionien en exprimait le vœu, à faire abandon du Protectorat de ces Iles, confié à Sa Majesté par le Traité conclu à Paris le 5 Novembre, 1815, entre les Cours de la Grande Bretagne, d'Autriche, de Prusse, et de Russie. Ce vœu ayant été manifesté par un vote de la dite Assemblée Législative, rendu à l'unanimité des voix le 17^e Octobre, 1863, Sa Majesté Britannique a consenti, par l'Article I du Traité conclu le 14 Novembre, 1863, entre Sa Majesté, l'Empereur d'Autriche, l'Empereur des Français, le Roi de Prusse, et l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, à renoncer au dit Protectorat, sous de certaines conditions spécifiées dans le Traité précité, et définies depuis lors par les Protocoles subséquents.

En vertu de l'Article V du Traité signé à Londres le 13 Juillet, 1863, il a été convenu en outre, d'un commun accord, entre Sa Majesté Britannique et Leurs Majestés l'Empereur des Français et l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, que les Iles Ioniennes, lorsque leur réunion au Royaume de Grèce aurait été effectuée, comme l'Article IV du même Traité l'a prévu, seraient comprises dans la garantie stipulée en faveur de la Grèce par les Cours de la Grande Bretagne, de France, et de Russie, en vertu de la Convention signée à Londres, le 7 Mai, 1832.

Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes ayant donné son assentiment à la conclusion de ce Traité, Leurs dites Majestés ont nommé pour leurs Plénipotentiaires, savoir :—

Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, le Très Honorable Jean Comte Russell, Vicomte Amberley de Amberley et Ardsalla, Pair du Royaume Uni, Chevalier du Très Noble Ordre de la Jarretière, Conseiller de Sa Majesté Britannique en Son Conseil Privé, Son Principal Secrétaire d'Etat pour les Affaires Etrangères ;

Sa Majesté l'Empereur des Français, le Sieur Godefroy, Bernard, Henry, Alphonse, Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne Lauraguais, Ambassadeur Extraordinaire et Plénipotentiaire près Sa Majesté Britannique, Grand Officier de l'Ordre Impérial de la Légion d'Honneur,

Grand-Croix de l'Ordre de l'Aigle Rouge de Prusse, Grand-Croix de l'Ordre des Saints Maurice et Lazare, &c., &c., &c. ;

Et Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes, le Sieur Charilaüs S. Tricoupi, Représentant à l'Assemblée Nationale des Hellènes ;

Lesquels, après avoir échangé leurs pleins pouvoirs, trouvés en bonne et due forme, ont arrêté et signé les Articles suivants :—

ARTICLE I.

Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, désirant réaliser le vœu que l'Assemblée Législative des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes a exprimé de voir ces Iles réunies à la Grèce, a consenti, sous les conditions spécifiées ci-après, à renoncer au Protectorat des Iles de Corfou, Céphalonie, Zante, Sainte Maure, Ithaque, Cerigo, et Paxo, avec leurs dépendances, lesquelles, en vertu du Traité signé à Paris le 5 Novembre, 1815, par les Plénipotentiaires de la Grande Bretagne, d'Autriche, de Prusse, et de Russie, ont été constituées en un seul Etat libre et indépendant sous la dénomination "d'Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes," placé sous la protection immédiate et exclusive de Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, ses héritiers et successeurs.

En conséquence, Sa Majesté Britannique, Sa Majesté l'Empereur des Français, et Sa Majesté l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, en leur qualité de signataires de la Convention du 7 Mai, 1832, reconnaissent cette union, et déclarent que la Grèce, dans les limites déterminées par l'arrangement conclu à Constantinople entre les Cours de la Grande Bretagne, de France, et de Russie, avec la Porte Ottomane le 21 Juillet, 1832—y compris les Iles Ioniennes—formera un Etat Monarchique, indépendant, et constitutionnel, sous la Souveraineté de Sa Majesté le Roi George, et sous la garantie des trois Cours.

ARTICLE II.

Les Cours de la Grande Bretagne, de France, et de Russie, en leur qualité de Puissances garantes de la Grèce, déclarent, avec l'assentiment des Cours d'Autriche et de Prusse, que les Iles de Corfou et de Paxo, ainsi que leurs dépendances, après leur réunion au Royaume Hellénique, jouiront des avantages d'une neutralité perpétuelle.

Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes s'engage, de son côté, à maintenir cette neutralité.

ARTICLE III.

La réunion des Iles Ioniennes au Royaume Hellénique n'apportera aucun changement aux avantages concédés au commerce et à la navigation étrangers, en vertu de Traités et de Conventions conclus par les Puissances étrangères avec Sa Majesté Britannique, en sa qualité de Protectrice des Iles Ioniennes.

Tous les engagements qui résultent des dites transactions, ainsi que des réglemens y relatifs, actuellement en vigueur, seront maintenus et strictement observés comme par le passé.

En conséquence il est expressément entendu que les bâtimens et le commerce étrangers dans les ports Ioniens, de même que la navigation entre les ports Ioniens et ceux de la Grèce, continueront à être soumis au même traitement et placés dans les mêmes conditions qu'avant la réunion des Iles Ioniennes à la Grèce; et cela jusqu'à la conclusion de nouvelles Conventions formelles ou d'arrangements destinés à régler entre les parties intéressées les questions de commerce, de navigation, ainsi que celles du service régulier des communications postales.

Ces nouvelles Conventions seront conclues dans le délai de quinze ans, ou plus tôt si faire se peut.

ARTICLE IV.

La réunion des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes au Royaume de Grèce n'invalidera en rien les principes établis par la législation existante de ces Iles, en matière de liberté du culte et de tolérance religieuse; conséquemment, les droits et immunités consacrés en matière de religion par les Chapitres I et V de la Charte Constitutionnelle des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes, et spécialement la reconnaissance de l'Eglise Grecque Orthodoxe comme religion dominante dans ces Iles ; l'entière liberté du culte accordée à l'Eglise de l'Etat de la Puissance protectrice ; et la parfaite tolérance promise aux autres communions Chrétiennes,—seront maintenus après l'union dans toute leur force et valeur.

La protection spéciale garantie à l'Eglise Catholique Romaine, ainsi que les avantages dont elle est présentement en possession, seront également maintenus ; et les sujets appartenant à cette communion jouiront dans les Iles Ioniennes de la même liberté de culte qui leur a été reconnue en Grèce par le Protocole du 3 Février, 1830.

Le principe de l'entière égalité civile et politique entre les sujets appartenant aux divers rites, consacré en Grèce par le même Protocole, sera pareillement en vigueur dans les Iles Ioniennes.

ARTICLE V.

L'Assemblée Législative des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes a décrété par une Résolution rendue le $\frac{17}{9}$ Octobre, 1863, que la somme de dix mille livres sterling par an serait affectée, en paiements mensuels, à l'augmentation de la Liste Civile de Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes, de manière à constituer la première charge à prélever sur la recette des Iles Ioniennes, à moins qu'il ne soit pourvu à ce paiement, suivant les formes constitutionnelles, sur les revenus du Royaume de Grèce.

En conséquence, Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes s'engage à mettre ce Décret duement à exécution.

ARTICLE VI.

Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, Sa Majesté l'Empereur des Français, et Sa Majesté l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, sont convenues de faire abandon, en faveur de Sa Majesté le Roi George I, chacune de quatre mille livres sterling par an, sur les sommes que le Trésor Grec s'est engagé à payer annuellement à chacune d'elles, en vertu de l'arrangement conclu à Athènes par le Gouvernement Grec, avec le concours des Chambres Grecques, au mois de Juin 1860.

Il est expressément entendu que ces trois sommes, formant un total de douze mille livres sterling annuellement, seront destinées à constituer une dotation personnelle de Sa Majesté le Roi George I, en sus de la Liste Civile fixée par la loi de l'Etat. L'avènement de Sa Majesté au Trône Hellénique n'apportera d'ailleurs aucun changement aux engagements financiers que la Grèce a contractés par l'Article XII de la Convention du 7 Mai, 1832, envers les Puissances garantes de l'emprunt, ni à l'exécution de l'engagement pris par le Gouvernement Hellénique, au mois de Juin 1860, sur la représentation des trois Cours.

ARTICLE VII.

Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes s'engage à prendre à sa charge tous les engagements et contrats légalement conclus par le Gouvernement des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes, ou en leur nom par la Puissance protectrice de ces Iles, conformément à la Constitution des Iles Ioniennes, soit avec des Gouvernements étrangers, soit avec des Compagnies et Associations, soit avec des individus privés ; et promet de remplir les dits engagements et contrats dans toute leur étendue, comme s'ils avaient été conclus par Sa Majesté ou par le Gouvernement Hellénique. Dans cette catégorie se trouvent spécialement compris : la dette publique des Iles Ioniennes ; les privilèges concédés à la Banque Ionienne, à la Compagnie Maritime connue sous le nom de Lloyds Autrichien, conformément à la Convention Postale du 1 Décembre, 1853, et à la Compagnie de Gaz de Malte et de la Méditerranée.

ARTICLE VIII.

Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes promet de prendre à sa charge :—

1. Les pensions accordées à des sujets Britanniques par le Gouvernement Ionien, conformément aux règles établies aux Iles Ioniennes en matière de pensions.

2. Les indemnités dues à certains individus actuellement au service du Gouvernement Ionien, lesquels perdront leurs emplois par suite de l'union des Iles à la Grèce.

3. Les pensions dont plusieurs sujets Ioniens jouissent, en rémunération de services rendus au Gouvernement Ionien.

Une Convention spéciale, conclue entre Sa Majesté Britannique et Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes, déterminera le chiffre de ces différentes allocations, et règlera le mode de leur paiement.

ARTICLE IX.

Les autorités civiles et les forces militaires de Sa Majesté Britannique seront retirées du territoire des Etats Unis des Iles Ioniennes dans l'espace de trois mois, ou plus tôt si faire se peut, après la ratification du présent Traité.

ARTICLE X.

Le présent Traité sera ratifié, et les ratifications en seront échangées à Londres dans le délai de six semaines, ou plus tôt si faire se peut.

En foi de quoi, les Plénipotentiaires respectifs l'ont signé, et y ont apposé le cachet de leurs armes.

Fait à Londres, le vingt-neuf Mars, l'an de grâce mil huit cent soixante-quatre.

In the name of the Most Holy and Indivisible Trinity.

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland made known to the Legislative Assembly of the United States of the Ionian Islands that, with a view to the eventual union of those Islands to the Kingdom of Greece, she was prepared, if the Ionian Parliament should express a wish to that effect, to abandon the Protectorate of those Islands, confided to Her Majesty by the Treaty concluded at Paris on the 5th of November, 1815, between the Courts of Great Britain, Austria, Prussia, and Russia. Such wish having been expressed by a vote of the said Legislative Assembly passed unanimously on the 17th October, 1863, Her Britannic Majesty consented, by Article I of the Treaty concluded on the 14th of November, 1863, between Her Majesty, the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of the French, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor of all the Russias, to renounce the said Protectorate under certain conditions specified in that Treaty, and since defined by subsequent Protocols.

On their part, their Majesties the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of the French, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor of all the Russias, consented by the same Article, and under the same conditions, to accept such renunciation, and to recognize, in conjunction with Her Britannic Majesty, the union of those Islands to the Kingdom of Greece.

In virtue of Article V of the Treaty signed at London on the 13th of July, 1863, it was moreover agreed by common consent between Her Britannic Majesty and their Majesties the Emperor of the French and the Emperor of all the Russias, that the Ionian Islands, when their union to the Kingdom of Greece should have been effected, as contemplated by Article IV of the same Treaty, should be comprised in the guarantee stipulated in favour of Greece by the Courts of Great Britain, France, and Russia, in virtue of the Convention signed at London on the 7th of May, 1832.

In consequence, and in accordance with the stipulations of the Treaty of the 13th of July, 1863, and with the terms of Article VI of the Treaty of the 14th of November, 1863, whereby the Courts of Great Britain, France, and Russia, in their character of Guaranteeing Powers of the Kingdom of Greece, reserved to themselves to conclude a Treaty with the Hellenic Government as to the arrangements which might become necessary in consequence of the union of the Ionian Islands to Greece, their said Majesties have resolved to proceed to negotiate with His Majesty the King of the Hellenes a Treaty for the purpose of carrying into execution the stipulations above mentioned.

His Majesty the King of the Hellenes having given his assent to the conclusion of such Treaty, their said Majesties have named as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say :

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Right Honourable John Earl Russell, Viscount Amberley of Amberley and Ardsalla, a Peer of the United Kingdom, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, a Member of Her Britannic Majesty's Privy Council, Her Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs ;

His Majesty the Emperor of the French, the Sieur Godefroy Bernard Henry Alphonse, Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne Lauraguais, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Her Britannic Majesty, Grand Officer of the Imperial Order of the Legion of Honour, Grand Cross of the Order of the Red Eagle of Prussia, Grand Cross of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus, &c., &c., &c. ;

His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, the Sieur Philip Baron de Brunnow, His Actual Privy Councillor, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Her Britannic Majesty, Knight of the Orders of Russia, Grand Cross of the Imperial Order of the Legion of Honour, and Grand Cross of the Order of the Redeemer of Greece, &c., &c., &c. ;

And His Majesty the King of the Hellenes, the Sieur Charilaüs S. Tricoupi, a Representative in the National Assembly of the Hellenes ;

Who, after having exchanged their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon and signed the following Articles :—

ARTICLE I.

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, desiring to realize the wish expressed by the Legislative Assembly of the United States of the Ionian Islands, that those Islands should be united to Greece, has consented, on the conditions hereinafter specified, to renounce the Protectorate over the Islands of Corfu, Cephalonia, Zante, Santa Maura, Ithaca, Cerigo, and Paxo, with their dependencies, which, in virtue of the Treaty signed at Paris on the 5th of November, 1815, by the Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain, Austria, Prussia, and Russia, were constituted a single free and independent State, under the denomination of “the United States of the Ionian Islands,” placed under the immediate and exclusive protection of His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, his heirs and successors.

In consequence, Her Britannic Majesty, His Majesty the Emperor of the French, and His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, in their character of signing parties to the Convention of the 7th of May, 1832, recognize such union, and declare that Greece, within the limits determined by the arrangement concluded at Constantinople between the Courts of Great Britain, France, and Russia, and the Ottoman Porte on the 21st of July, 1832,—including the Ionian Islands,—shall form a monarchical, independent, and constitutional State, under the Sovereignty of His Majesty King George and under the guarantee of the three Courts.

ARTICLE II.

The Courts of Great Britain, France, and Russia, in their character of guaranteeing Powers of Greece, declare, with the assent of the Courts of Austria and Prussia, that the Islands of Corfu and Paxo, as well as their dependencies, shall, after their union to the Hellenic Kingdom, enjoy the advantages of perpetual neutrality.

His Majesty the King of the Hellenes engages, on his part, to maintain such neutrality.

ARTICLE III.

The union of the Ionian Islands to the Hellenic Kingdom shall not involve any change as to the advantages conceded to foreign commerce and navigation in virtue of Treaties and Conventions concluded by foreign Powers with Her Britannic Majesty, in her character of Protector of the Ionian Islands.

All the engagements which result from the said transactions, as well as from the regulations actually in force in relation thereto, shall be maintained and strictly observed as hitherto.

In consequence, it is expressly understood that foreign vessels and commerce in Ionian ports, as well as the navigation between Ionian ports and the ports of Greece, shall continue to be subject to the same treatment, and placed under the same conditions, as before the union of the Ionian Islands to Greece, until the conclusion of new formal Conventions, or of arrangements destined to regulate between the parties concerned, questions of commerce and navigation, as well as questions relating to the regular service of communication by post.

Such new Conventions shall be concluded in fifteen years, or sooner if possible.

ARTICLE IV.

The union of the United States of the Ionian Islands to the Kingdom of Greece shall in no wise invalidate the principles established by the existing legislation of those Islands with regard to freedom of worship and religious toleration ; accordingly the rights and immunities established in matters of religion by Chapters I and V of the Constitutional Charter of the United States of the Ionian Islands, and specifically the recognition of the Orthodox Greek Church as the dominant religion in those Islands ; the entire liberty of worship granted to the Established Church of the Protecting Power ; and the perfect toleration promised to other Christian communions,—shall, after the union, be maintained in their full force and effect.

The special protection guaranteed to the Roman Catholic Church, as well as the advantages of which that Church is actually in possession, shall be equally maintained ; and the subjects belonging to that communion shall enjoy in the Ionian Islands the same freedom of worship which is recognized in their favour by the Protocol of the 3rd of February, 1830.

The principle of entire civil and political equality between subjects belonging to different creeds, established in Greece by the same Protocol, shall be likewise in force in the Ionian Islands.

ARTICLE V.

The Legislative Assembly of the United States of the Ionian Islands has decreed by a resolution passed on the 17th of October, 1863, that the sum of ten thousand pounds sterling a year shall be appropriated, in monthly payments, to the augmentation of the Civil List of His Majesty the King of the Hellenes, so as to constitute the first charge upon the revenue of the Ionian Islands, unless provision be made for such payment, according to the Constitutional forms, out of the revenues of the Kingdom of Greece.

In consequence, His Majesty the King of the Hellenes engages to carry that Decree duly into execution.

ARTICLE VI.

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, His Majesty the Emperor of the French, and His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, agree to relinquish in favour of His Majesty King George I, each four thousand pounds sterling a year, out of the sums which the Greek Treasury has engaged to pay annually to each of them, in virtue of the arrangement concluded at Athens by the Greek Government, with the concurrence of the Greek Chambers, in the month of June 1860.

It is expressly understood that these three sums, forming a total of twelve thousand pounds sterling annually, shall be destined to constitute a personal dotation of His Majesty King George I, in addition to the Civil List fixed by the law of the State. The accession of His Majesty to the Hellenic Throne shall not otherwise involve any change in the financial engagements which Greece has contracted by Article XII of the Convention of May 7, 1832, towards the Powers guarantees of the loan, nor in the execution of the engagement taken by the Hellenic Government in the month of June 1860, upon the representation of the three Courts.

ARTICLE VII.

His Majesty the King of the Hellenes engages to take upon himself all the engagements and contracts lawfully concluded by the Government of the United States of the Ionian Islands, or in their name by the Protecting Power of those Islands, conformably to the Constitution of the Ionian Islands, whether with foreign Governments, with Companies and Associations, or with private individuals; and promises to fulfil the said engagements and contracts fully and completely, as if they had been concluded by His Majesty or by the Hellenic Government. Under this head are specially included: the public debt of the Ionian Islands; the privileges conceded to the Ionian Bank, to the Navigation Company known under the name of the Austrian Lloyds, in conformity with the Postal Convention of the 1st of December, 1853, and to the Malta and Mediterranean Gas Company.

ARTICLE VIII.

His Majesty the King of the Hellenes promises to take upon himself,—

1. The pensions granted to British subjects by the Ionian Government, in conformity with the rules established in the Ionian Islands respecting pensions.
2. The compensation allowances due to certain individuals actually in the service of the Ionian Government, who will lose their employments in consequence of the union of the Islands to Greece.
3. The pensions which several Ionian subjects are in the enjoyment of, in remuneration of services rendered to the Ionian Government.

A special Convention to be concluded between Her Britannic Majesty and His Majesty the King of the Hellenes shall determine the amounts of these different heads, and shall regulate the mode of their payment.

ARTICLE IX.

The civil authorities and the military forces of Her Britannic Majesty shall be withdrawn from the territory of the United States of the Ionian Islands in three months, or sooner if possible, after the ratification of the present Treaty.

ARTICLE X.

The present Treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at London in six weeks, or sooner if possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Done at London, the twenty-ninth of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-four.

Correspondence respecting the Cessation of the British Protectorate over the Ionian Islands.

No. 1.

Sir H. Storks to Mr. Cardwell.—(Received May 27.)

Sir,

Corfu, May 20, 1864.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you, that M. Zaimis, Commissioner Extraordinary of the King of the Hellenes, arrived in Corfu yesterday, on board a Greek gun-boat. M. Zaimis is charged with a special mission to arrange with me as to the form and manner in which the Ionian States are to be ceded to Greece, and on the surrender of the British Protectorate on the 2nd of June, he is to assume the administration and direction of the Islands, as the King's Commissioner. When the elections of the Representatives to the Greek National Assembly have taken place, the administration of the Ionian Islands will be placed under the control and direction of the responsible Ministers, as in other parts of the Kingdom.

I inclose a translation of the Royal Decree appointing M. Zaimis.

M. Zaimis touched at Zante and Cephalonia on his way to Corfu. He was very warmly welcomed by a large crowd of persons, with Greek flags and the Philharmonic band.

I received him with the honours due to his rank, including a salute and guard of honour.

I am to see him to-day at 11 o'clock, and shall report to you the arrangements we have come to.

Although a large crowd of people was collected yesterday the most perfect order was preserved.

I have, &c.

George I, King of the Greeks.

IN virtue of the Treaty, $\frac{17}{29}$ March o.s., signed in London, and ratified legally by the Law, dated 27th of March, o.s., on the basis of the Decree of the 7th October, 1863, of the thirteenth Ionian Parliament, and in compliance with the Law dated 14th April, respecting the election of the Ionian Representatives;

Wishing to accelerate the Union of the Ionian States with the Greek Kingdom, on the proposal of our Council of Ministers;

We enact—

Art. 2. The Extraordinary Envoy of the Greek Government will repair at once to Corfu, and will agree with the Lord High Commissioner as to the manner of the cession of the Ionian Islands to the Greek Government, and the landing of our military force for their occupation, and will sign the Protocols to be drawn up for the occasion.

Art. 3. So soon as the Ionian Islands shall have been occupied by our military force, the Extraordinary Envoy shall assume, on the basis of the existing laws in the Ionian Islands, their administrative direction. The Extraordinary Envoy shall submit to the Government the proposal for issuing Royal Decrees for the appointment of the "personnel" required for the administrative service.

Art. 4. For the maintenance of public order, as well as for the application of every measure of security, our military force shall afford every assistance to the Envoy of the Greek Government by executing his orders.

Art. 5. To the Extraordinary Envoy is intrusted everything connected with the administrative jurisdiction for carrying out the election of the Representatives of the Ionian Islands.

Sir H. Storks to Mr. Cardwell.—(Received June 4.)

Sir,

Corfu, May 25, 1864.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you that I held a levée yesterday in celebration of Her Majesty's birthday.

It was most numerously attended by men of all parties and opinions, including the Archbishop and a great number of his clergy; the President and Members of the Legislative Assembly present in Corfu, the Municipality, and a large number of private citizens.

After the levée I reviewed the troops on the Esplanade, where a vast crowd was assembled to witness the last grand parade of a British garrison in Corfu. Both on my way to the ground and on my return I was received with more than the ordinary marks of respect and consideration.

The good conduct of the people of Corfu under trying and somewhat irritating circumstances has been remarkable, notwithstanding the endeavours of the ill-disposed, the discontented, and the professional demagogues to excite them to acts of tumult and disorder.

Sir,

Corfu, May 27, 1864.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you that Vice-Admiral Smart arrived at Corfu in Her Majesty's ship "Marlborough" on the 25th instant.

The "Tamar" and "Himalaya" troop-ships have since reached the island, and the preparations for the embarkation of troops are progressing rapidly.

The arrangements which have been made are as follows:—

The Lord High Commissioner, with his suite, will embark in Her Majesty's ship

"Marlborough," and proceed to the rendezvous to be appointed by the King of the Hellenes. The place has not yet been settled, as His Majesty has been obliged to abandon his intention of visiting Patras in consequence of the small-pox which is prevailing there to a great extent.

The Major-General commanding the troops and his staff will be conveyed in Her Majesty's ship "Meeanee" to Malta with the troops. The "Himalaya" and "Tamar" will embark the troops at Corfu, and if sufficient accommodation be not provided in those vessels Her Majesty's ship "Meeanee" will convey the remainder.

Her Majesty's ship "Magicienne" will proceed to Santa Maura, and embark the detachment which garrisons that island, and then go on the same day to Ithaca for the detachment there.

Her Majesty's ship "Orlando" will remove the troops from Cephalonia; Her Majesty's ship "Liffey" those from Zante; Her Majesty's ship "Cossack" is to carry the small party stationed at Cerigo. All will go to Malta, and from thence proceed to their final destinations.

The arrangements seem to have been very well combined, and there is every reason to expect that the evacuation will be completed on the 2nd of June in a soldierlike and satisfactory manner.

I have, &c.

P.S.—Since writing the above Her Majesty's ship "Galatea" has arrived, to convey the Company of Royal Engineers to England.

No. 5.

Sir H. Storks to Mr. Cardwell.—(Received June 6.)

Sir,

Corfu, May 31, 1864.

I HAVE the honour to transmit copies of the "Ionian Gazette" containing the Protocol signed by M. Zaimis and myself, as to the mode and manner in which the transfer of the Ionian Islands to Greece is to be carried out.

You will also find in it my Proclamation, and the Address I made to those present at the reception held at the Palace of St. Michael and St. George on the 28th instant.

I hope the arrangements agreed upon will meet with your approval.

Her Majesty's troops will be all embarked by mid-day on the 2nd of June, and I trust that soon afterwards all the ships will have left Corfu.

I proceed in Her Majesty's ship "Marlborough" to Catacolo, to have an interview with the King of the Hellenes, and from there direct to Marseilles in the "Psyche."

The Greek troops will arrive in Corfu on the 1st instant, and will not disembark, except those required to relieve the Guards, until Her Majesty's troops have sailed.

It was at first intended that the Greek troops should arrive two or three days before the cessation of the British Protectorate ; but as the Commissioner Extraordinary asked for permission to hoist a Greek flag on Fort Neuf (the barracks assigned for the troops), a proceeding to which I would not consent, the original intention was abandoned, and the arrival of the troops delayed.

It was impossible for me to consent to a Greek flag being hoisted on any fort which we hold under a European Treaty, and are bound to occupy until the British Protectorate legally ceases. I therefore informed M. Zaimis that I could not accede to his request, and the troops were counterordered.

The only inconvenience attending this change is, that the Southern Islands will be left without military detachments for twenty-four hours after the embarkation of the British garrisons, as the whole force intended for the Ionian Islands is to be assembled in the first instance at Corfu, and from this place detachments are to be sent to the different Islands.

Corfu, May 28, 1864.

A RECEPTION was held at 3 o'clock P.M. this day at the Palace of St. Michael and St. George, at which the Most Illustrious the Senate and the principal functionaries of the Ionian State were present, together with the principal naval and military officers of Her Majesty, to witness the signature of the following Protocol by his Excellency the Lord High Commissioner and M. Zaimis, Commissioner Extraordinary of the Government of His Majesty the King of the Hellenes:—

"Protocol."

"Whereas a Treaty was signed in London on the $\frac{17}{25}$ th of March, 1864, between their Majesties the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Emperor of the French, and the Emperor of all the Russias, on the one part, and His Majesty the King of the Hellenes on the other part, respecting the Union of the Ionian Islands to the Kingdom of Greece; and whereas his Excellency the Lord High Commissioner of Her Britannic Majesty has received instructions to carry out the stipulations contained in Article IX of the said Treaty; and whereas M. Thrasybulus Zaïmis, Extraordinary Commissioner of the Government of His Majesty the King of the Hellenes, has been empowered by his Government to concert measures with his Excellency the Lord High Commissioner as to the manner and form in which such stipulations shall be carried out, it is hereby stipulated by them as follows:—

"Article 1. At 12 o'clock on the morning of the ^{21st May}/_{2nd June} next, the Civil Authorities and military forces of Her Britannic Majesty shall be withdrawn from the territories of the United States of the Ionian Islands.

"Art. 2. The form and manner of the said withdrawal shall be as follows:—

"On the ^{21st May}/_{2nd June} next, the troops of Her Britannic Majesty having been embarked, except the guards, at half-past 11 o'clock his Excellency the Lord High Commissioner will receive at the Palace of St. Michael and St. George the Commissioner Extraordinary of the Government of His Majesty the King of the Hellenes, and will then take leave of such persons as may present themselves.

"The Lord High Commissioner, accompanied by M. Zaïmis, will then proceed to the Ditch of the Citadel, where a guard of honour composed of a Company of Infantry of Her Majesty the Queen and another guard of honour composed of a Company of Infantry of His Hellenic Majesty, will be in waiting to receive the Lord High Commissioner. His Excellency the Lord High Commissioner will then take leave of the Commissioner Extraordinary, and will embark in his barge, and proceed to Her Britannic Majesty's ship 'Marlborough,' carrying the flag of Vice-Admiral Smart, K.H., Commander-in-chief of Her Majesty's naval forces in the Mediterranean, the usual salutes being fired by the naval and military forces of Her Britannic Majesty.

"After the embarkation of the Lord High Commissioner, the guards of Her Britannic Majesty's troops in the fortresses will be relieved by guards from the troops of His Hellenic Majesty, and the flag of Her Britannic Majesty will be lowered on the Citadel, Fort Neuf, and Vido, and marched off under an escort of honour.

"Such Greek guards shall be disembarked at the same time as the guard of honour, and shall march to the Citadel, to Fort Neuf, and Vido, so as to arrive at those posts simultaneously with the departure of the British guards.

"On the lowering of the British flag, a Greek flag will be hoisted on the Citadel. At the same time a British ensign will be hoisted at the main on board Her Britannic Majesty's ship 'Marlborough,' and will be saluted from the Citadel by a detachment of artillery of His Hellenic Majesty with a salute of twenty-one guns. This detachment will be disembarked at the same time as the guard of honour.

"The Greek flag will then be hoisted at the main on board Her Britannic Majesty's ship 'Marlborough' and saluted with twenty-one guns from that vessel.

"In the Islands of Cephalonia, Zante, Santa Maura, Ithaca, Cerigo, and Paxo, the civil and military authorities will conform as closely to the above ceremonial as circumstances will permit. The British and Greek flags will be saluted respectively on being lowered and hoisted in all the Islands, where the means of saluting are at hand.

"Art. 3. Whereas it is necessary that certain lists and inventories be drawn up relative to the delivery, on the part of his Excellency the Lord High Commissioner to the Commissioner Extraordinary of the Hellenic Government, of the fortifications, archives, and other objects of which mention is made hereafter in the present Protocol, they have respectively named for this purpose Sir Peter Braila, K.C M.G., and M. George Zinopoulos, Director of the Cabinet of the Commissioner Extraordinary, to give and receive the archives of the Most Illustrious the Senate, including the originals of the Ionian Constitution, and also the archives of the Legislative Assembly;

"Mr. Barr, C.M.G., Assistant Secretary to his Excellency the Lord High Commissioner, and M. John Peroglous, Secretary of the first class in the Greek Foreign Office, to give and receive the inventory of the furniture left in the Palace of St. Michael and St. George ;

"M. Rodostamos, Aide-de-camp to His Highness the President of the Senate, and M. Andrew Psyllas, Attaché to the Greek Foreign Office, to give and receive the inventories of the Palace of His Highness, and Assistant Commissary-General De Fonblanque, and Major Meason, Barrack Master, and Messrs. Michael Georgantas, Commissary-General, and Nicolas Manos, Major of the Staff, to draw up the inventories and reports of the delivery of the fortresses and barracks of Corfu.

"And whereas it is necessary that similar measures be adopted for the other Islands, the Local Directors of the respective Islands, on the part of his Excellency the Lord High Commissioner, and the Regents, on the part of the Commissioner Extraordinary of the Hellenic Government, have been selected to draw up and sign the necessary documents.

"Such inventories shall be made in duplicate, and exchanged by the said officers within two days after the withdrawal of the civil authorities and military forces of Her Britannic Majesty.

"Art. 4. The performance of the forms and ceremonies, as stated in Article 2, shall be considered as a conclusive and final discharge of the stipulations contained in Article IX of the Treaty aforesaid on the part of Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, without any further Protocol, Agreement, or Instrument whatever.

"His Excellency the Lord High Commissioner and the Commissioner Extraordinary shall, however, report to their respective Governments the due performance of the stipulations herein laid down.

"His Excellency the Lord High Commissioner and the Commissioner Extraordinary have signed the present Agreement in duplicate in English and Greek, and have affixed thereto the seals of their arms.

"Done at the Palace of St. Michael and St. George, Corfu, on the $\frac{28}{16}$ th day of May, in the year of our Lord, 1864.

After the Protocol had been read and signed, his Excellency made public the following Proclamation:—

"Proclamation.

"On the part of His Excellency Sir Henry Knight Storks, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George, Knight Commander of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath, a Major-General in Her Majesty's Army, and Her Majesty's Lord High Commissioner in and for the United States of the Ionian Islands, &c., &c. &c.

"Whereas by a Treaty signed in London on the 29th day of March, 1864, between Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, His Majesty the Emperor of the French, His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, and His Majesty the King of the Hellenes, it was declared that Her Britannic Majesty has consented, under the conditions then mentioned, to relinquish the Protectorate of the United States of the Ionian Islands, and that Greece should, within the limits then referred to, including the Ionian Islands, form an independent and Constitutional Monarchical State.

"And it was also declared that the civil authorities and military forces of Her Britannic Majesty should be withdrawn from the territory of the said United States within three months, or sooner if possible, after the ratification of the said Treaty.

"And whereas the civil authorities and military forces now remaining in the said territory will, on the 2nd day of June next, be withdrawn therefrom.

"Now, therefore, in the name and on behalf of Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Lord High Commissioner doth hereby proclaim and declare that on the 2nd day of June, in the year of our Lord 1864, the Protectorate of Her said Britannic Majesty over these Islands will finally be relinquished, cease, and determine, and that the said Islands will become and be absolutely part of the independent and Constitutional Monarchy of Greece under the sovereignty of His Majesty King George I.

"Given at the Palace of St. Michael and St. George, Corfu, this 28th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1864.

"By his Excellency's command,

(Signed)

"H. DRUMMOND WOLFF,

"Secretary to the Lord High Commissioner."

His Excellency the Lord High Commissioner, having then proceeded to the steps of the Throne, delivered the following address to the high functionaries present :—

"Gentlemen,

"I have now performed almost my last act as Her Majesty's Lord High Commissioner.

"It is not without sincere regret that I take leave of a people with whom I have for more than five years been closely connected, and in whose welfare I shall always entertain the warmest interest.

"To the Senates of the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth Parliaments I must tender my hearty thanks for the assistance they have rendered me in the discharge of my public duties—thanks which I beg also to offer to all others discharging public functions and employments in these States.

"Notwithstanding the difficulties that have occasionally arisen, I can testify to the kindly disposition of the Ionian people, to their love of order and to the many qualities which endear them to those with whom they are brought in contact.

"Her Majesty the Queen, my august Sovereign, in retiring, of her own free will, from the responsible and arduous charge confided to her by the Great Powers of Europe, and in promoting the union of these Islands with Greece, has been solely actuated by the desire to give effect to a wish so often expressed by the Ionian Legislative Assembly, and the realization of which is considered by the people both of these Islands and of Continental Greece as conducive to national happiness.

"It is unnecessary to recur to the circumstances which established the peculiar relations which have existed, for nearly half a century, between the British Government and the Ionian States. During the whole period I can conscientiously say that the desire of the British Government, of my predecessors, and myself, has been to forward, by every possible means, the interests of the Ionian people.

"I can look back with satisfaction on the endeavours repeatedly made by the British Government to extend to the Ionian States those free institutions which have created the welfare of England, on the material prosperity of these Islands, which is far in advance of any neighbouring country, on the institutions which have been founded, on the roads, bridges, harbours, lighthouses, and other public works which have been established and maintained, on the order which has almost invariably been preserved in times of general agitation, on a flourishing commerce effectively protected both at home and abroad, on the comparatively small amount of the public debt, and on a light taxation.

"Mistakes may have been committed; but these are inseparable from human institutions, and especially in a political condition so anomalous as that which has existed in this country.

"It is the fervent desire of the Queen that the future of the Greek nation shall be prosperous, and whatever lies in the power of Her Majesty's Government to contribute to this end will not be wanting. I need not say that the greatness of a nation depends on the self-denial and loyalty of the people, as much as on the exertions of their Governors. It will be for your King and his advisers to inaugurate a new state of things on a basis of sound economy and Constitutional freedom, by the enactment of wise laws, and the development of national resources. It will be for you to prove yourselves worthy of the mission, in which even the most insignificant must bear his part, by laying aside, for the public interest, all personal differences and the remembrances of former dissensions, by strict obedience to the law, by all necessary self-sacrifice, by a cultivation of all religious and moral virtues, by fidelity to your Sovereign and confidence in his judgment.

"I once more bid you farewell."

After which the Most Illustrious the Vice-President of the Senate replied to his Excellency as follows :—

"Excellency,

"I am certainly expressing the sentiments of all in warmly thanking your Excellency for the courteous and kind expressions which you have been pleased to make use of in taking leave of us.

"I am convinced that in a short time there will be but one voice to attest to the justice, the firmness, and the really liberal spirit which have so eminently distinguished the administration of your Excellency.

"By a magnanimous determination of Her Majesty the Most Gracious Protecting Sovereign, to whom Ionians owe eternal gratitude, these Islands, after long ages, regain their national independence, and the heart of every Greek will be rejoiced by the assurance that whatever lies in the power of Her Majesty's Government to contribute to the prosperity of the Greek nation will not be wanting.

"We request your Excellency to be pleased to place at the foot of the glorious Throne of Her Majesty the expressions of these our sentiments, and to receive, together with our sincere thanks, our fervent wishes that every happiness may attend you."

His Excellency having acknowledged the remarks of the Vice-President, the proceedings terminated.

No. 7.

Consul-General Saunders to Earl Russell.—(Received June 10.)

My Lord,

Corfu, June 2, 1864.

THE cessation of the British Protectorate in the Ionian States and the evacuation of the forts in this Island by Her Majesty's forces were accomplished this day at noon with the utmost tranquillity, and the Hellenic flag was forthwith hoisted in the place of the British ensign with the formalities agreed upon between the Lord High Commissioner and M. Zaimis, Commissioner Extraordinary of the Government of His Majesty the King of the Hellenes, as by the inclosed printed copy of the Protocol drawn up to this effect.

Before proceeding to embark on board Her Majesty's ship "Marlborough," Sir Henry Storks took leave of the principal authorities and others at the Palace of St. Michael and St. George, and was accompanied to the pier amid the enthusiastic acclamations of an immense multitude which thronged every available space in the vicinity, and behaved with the utmost propriety.

The Hellenic troops, which reached Corfu the previous evening, exhibited the best feelings on the occasion, and after the prescribed salutes had been reciprocally interchanged from the flag-ship and batteries, Major-General Sir R. Garrett, with the guard of honour, conveyed the flags from the respective forts on board Her Majesty's ship "Meeanee," and the whole squadron, consisting of Her Majesty's ships "Marlborough," bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Robert Smart, "Meeanee," "Galatea," "Himalaya," "Tamar," and "Psyche," put to sea immediately, leaving Her Majesty's steam gun-vessel "Wanderer" on station here.

Municipal Council of this Island to the British garrison, together with copy of the Major-General's reply thereto.

I accompanied Sir Henry Storks from the Palace to the flag-ship, where I took leave of his Excellency on his departure.

To the English Garrison.

Valiant Sons of England,

BY a generous decision of your august Queen the wishes of this Hellenic land have been granted, and you are about to leave this spot, where you have resided with us for half a century, and nobly have you behaved towards us.

The Municipal Council of this Island, under the influence of the unspeakable joy which it experiences in this memorable change in its destiny at the moment of its entering a new career of national existence, cannot without emotion witness your departure, and leave unexpressed the sentiments of sympathy that it entertains for you and for the great nation to which you belong.

As free citizens of a free country you will not be incensed at the exuberant joy of a people passing from foreign protection to national liberty, nor will you consider it in any way connected with your departure, which affects us exceedingly, and causes us to express from our hearts the warmest wishes for your welfare, and for that of your illustrious country, to which, as Greeks, we feel bound by ties of gratitude and hopes.

Farewell, brave sons of England! Forget as we do whatever may tend to mar our mutual love. Love us as we love you, and desire that we may imitate your national virtues.

Answer to the Municipal Council of Corfu from Major-General Sir R. Garrett, K.C.B.

ON the eve of departure with the troops under my command, whose duty of garrisoning the Ionian Islands will this day cease, I hasten to thank you for the spirit in which the Address which you transmitted to me yesterday, for the English garrison, has been framed, and for the expression of your warmest wishes for ourselves individually, and for that of our country. On behalf of the garrison I beg most cordially to reciprocate our earnest wishes for the welfare of yourselves, and for that of your country.

To the President and Members of the Municipal Council, a very large portion of the inhabitants of this island no doubt look for countenance and support, and so long as they receive encouragement from yourselves to cherish feelings of loyalty to your King, to practise obedience to the constituted authorities, to exert energy and industry in following agriculture and commerce, and at the same time living in friendship and harmony with each other, they can hardly fail to attain, under Providence, that welfare which our country has mainly attained by adopting and observing these principles.

In the name of the private soldiers whom I have the honour to command, I request you will be pleased to make known to the inhabitants of the country round Corfu, and to those of the town itself, how fully they have appreciated the kindly feelings which they have unremittingly evinced towards them.

Again repeating the assurances of our very best wishes for the welfare of you all, I now, in the name of the British garrison, bid you most heartily farewell!

Vice-Admiral Smart to the Secretary to the Admiralty.—(Received June 13.)

Sir,

"Marborough," at Corfu, June 2, 1864.

I HAVE the honour to report, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, that the whole of the troops, except the guards at the different posts and gateways, and a guard of honour in the ditch, having been embarked on board Her Majesty's ships "Galatea," "Tamar," and "Himalaya," his Excellency Sir H. Storks, Lord High Commissioner, embarked at 11 A.M. this morning, under a salute from the garrison, for my flag-ship, where he was received with yards manned and a second salute of seventeen guns.

2. Soon after noon the guards of Her Majesty's troops having been relieved by guards of the troops of His Hellenic Majesty which had arrived the previous evening from Athens, the British flag was struck on the citadel, Fort Neuf, and Vido, under a Royal salute from the troops of His Hellenic Majesty, and marched off under a guard of honour to the boats. The Greek flag was immediately hoisted, and saluted in its turn by my flag-ship.

3. At 1 P.M. Major-General Sir Robert Garrett embarked in the "Meeanee," which ship had been appropriated to receive him and convey him to Malta, and was saluted by that ship.

4. Soon afterwards the whole of the ships "Marlborough," "Meeanee," "Galatea," "Tamar," and "Psyche" got away; the "Marlborough" and "Psyche" for Katakolo, where Sir Henry Storks wished to meet the King, and the others for Malta, where it will be necessary to make some changes in the arrangement of the troops.

5. Corresponding ceremonies have, as far as practicable, been ordered to take place at the other Islands, the British flag being saluted in each case on being struck, and the Greek flag on being hoisted, and where the following ships have been sent to embark the different garrisons, the "Orlando" and "Trident" to Argostoli, "Liffey" to Zante, the "Magicienne" to Santa Maura and Ithaca, and the "Cossack" to Cerigo, the whole of them have been ordered to leave on the 2nd June and rendezvous at Malta.

No. 10.

Sir H. Storks to Mr. Cardwell.—(Received June 10.)

Sir,

"Marlborough," at Sea, June 2, 1864.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you that the Greek troops destined for the Ionian Islands arrived in Corfu yesterday afternoon about 5 o'clock, under the command of Lieutenant-General Pissa. They were conveyed in one steamer, and amounted to 830 rank and file, composed of Artillery, Gendarmerie, and the first Regiment of Infantry.

A large crowd was assembled to welcome the troops, who were cheered loudly as they steamed past the walls to the anchorage.

The band played "God save the Queen" when the steamer entered the port, and all passed off quietly.

This morning early preparations were made for the embarkation of Her Majesty's troops, and for my departure from Corfu. The 9th Regiment with the women, children, and baggage of the regiments composing the garrison of Corfu had been embarked the day before. The 2nd Battalion, 4th Regiment, went on board at 10 A.M., and by 11 o'clock all the arrangements required to carry out the programme agreed between the Commissioner of the Government of His Hellenic Majesty and myself were completed.

Vast crowds had assembled on the esplanade and lined the walls, occupying every spot, whence a view of the proceedings could be obtained.

At 11.30. A.M. I entered the Throne-room, which was crowded by the high functionaries of the Ionian States, and others who had assembled to take leave of me. I addressed a few words of farewell in Italian to those present, and at ten minutes to 12 o'clock I left the palace to embark in my barge. The crowd assembled was immense: I never remember to have seen so many persons collected together in Corfu on any former occasion. The cheering was deafening, and the marks of sympathy and goodwill which I received were most gratifying. A great deal of feeling was displayed by those present, and tears ran down the cheeks of many who, to all appearance, would have been considered unlikely to have shown emotion on such an occasion.

I confess to you that I was much overcome myself, and however gratifying were the demonstrations of sympathy and goodwill which I received, I could not but be affected in taking leave of those in whom I took a great interest, and in quitting for ever a country to whose welfare I had devoted all my energies for more than five years.

On my reaching Her Majesty's ship "Marlborough" under the usual salutes, the British guards were relieved by Greek troops, the British colours lowered, and the Greek flag run up on the forts; salutes followed as laid down in the programme. The British flags were marched off and embarked with guards of honour, under the personal superintendence of the Major-General Commanding the troops. At 10 minutes to 2 o'clock, all being on board, Her Majesty's ships "Marlborough," "Meeanee," "Galatea," "Tamar," "Himalaya," and "Psyche" left the harbour of Corfu, and proceeded to Malta, except Her Majesty's ship, from which I am now writing, which takes me to Catacolo, to meet His Majesty the King of the Hellenes, accompanied by the "Psyche." In the other Islands the troops have all embarked, and at 12 o'clock this day the evacuation of the Ionian Islands was completed. Thus terminated the British Protectorate of the Ionian States.

It is impossible to look back to British rule in these Islands, which has lasted for nearly half a century, without being convinced that England has dealt generously with the Ionians, and faithfully discharged the arduous and responsible duties she accepted in 1815.

I have thus concluded the duties of the high office to which, by Her Majesty's gracious favour, I was appointed in February 1859; and I trust that Her Majesty's Government will approve of the manner in which those duties have been performed.

Rear-Admiral Yelverton to Vice-Admiral Smart.—(Received June 13.)

Sir,

"Revenge," Katakolo, June 4, 1864.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that His Majesty the King of the Hellenes embarked on board the Greek frigate "Hellas" at 9 o'clock on the night of the 24th May for Syra, it having been previously arranged that the escorting squadron should meet him at Navarino on his way to Corfu.

I accordingly left for that port in the "Revenge," on the morning of the 31st May (having embarked, at his own request, Mr. Horace Rumbold, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Athens, who has been directed by Earl Russell to accompany His Majesty on his visit to the Ionian Islands; also one Attaché and three servants), and arrived there on the 1st instant, where I found the French frigate "Magicienne." I was shortly afterwards joined by the Russian frigate "Oleg."

His Majesty, however, did not arrive until about 11 o'clock last night, and after landing for three-quarters of an hour this morning, at 7 o'clock he left for Katakolo under escort of the three ships before named, and a Greek gun-boat.

I now beg to report my arrival in presence of your flag.

The "Gibraltar" arrived from Besika Bay on the morning of the 29th of May, and I have left Captain Prevost in charge of the duties of Senior Officer in the "Piræus," with the "Surprise" under his orders.

I have, &c.

Vice-Admiral Smart to the Secretary to the Admiralty.—(Received June 13.)

"Marlborough," at Malta, June 7, 1864.

I HAVE the honour to report, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, that the "Magicienne" and "Trident" left Corfu for Santa Maura and Argostoli, on the 28th ultimo, to embark the troops at those places; the "Orlando" and "Liffey" having preceded them to Argostoli and Zante.

The "Wanderer" left Corfu on the 29th for Port Nicolo, with Mr. Reade, recently appointed Her Majesty's Consul at Scutari, and having landed him returned to Corfu on the 31st. She has been left at Corfu for the protection of British interests.

The "Growler" left for Paxo on the 30th, and having embarked the garrison returned to Corfu on the 31st. She sailed for Malta on the 1st instant, her services being no longer required at Corfu.

The "Supply" left on the 31st for Malta, with the barrack stores, &c., from Corfu, and having landed them and received a cargo of old and condemned stores from the Dock and Victualling yard, sails for Spithead to-morrow.

The "Hellas," with His Hellenic Majesty on board, arrived at Katakolo on the afternoon of the 4th instant, escorted by the "Revenge," French frigate "Magicienne," Russian frigate "Oleg," and a small Greek gun-boat, and His Majesty was received with the usual honours from my flag-ship.

Sir Henry Storks left the same evening in the "Psyche" for Marseilles, and I left in the "Marlborough" for Malta, which place I reached early this morning.

No. 13.

Mr. Rumbold to Earl Russell.—(Received June 14.)

My Lord,

Corfu, June 7, 1864.

ON the morning of Saturday the 4th instant, the allied squadron, composed of Her Majesty's ship "Revenge," bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Yelverton, C.B., the French frigate "Magicienne," bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral d'Aboville, and the Russian frigate "Oleg," steamed out of the harbour of Navarino, escorting His Hellenic Majesty on his way to take possession of his new dominions. The King had joined the squadron at Navarino on the previous evening from Kalamata in the frigate "Hellas," and found to welcome him the flags of the three Powers whose combined navies had, thirty-seven years before, on the same spot, fought the battle which called into life the Kingdom over which he has been called to reign. No place in Greece could be more appropriate as the starting-point of a journey the object of which was to inaugurate an enlarged and, it is to be hoped, a more prosperous Kingdom of Greece.

In the evening the squadron reached Katacolo, where the late Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands was waiting in Her Majesty's ship "Marlborough" to pay his respects to the King.

The following morning was taken up by a Royal visit to the town of Pyrgos, and at 3 o'clock in the afternoon His Majesty embarked for Corfu, the ships of his escort manning yards and firing a royal salute. The squadron then steamed through the channel between Zante and Cephalonia, and came in sight of the town of Corfu, about 10 o'clock on the morning of Monday, the 6th instant.

On nearing the town the ships were in the following order: The royal frigate leading, with the "Magicienne" on her starboard quarter, the "Revenge" on her port quarter, and the "Oleg" following in her wake. At about a mile from the shore the ships stopped in their several stations, and at half-past 1 His Majesty landed with the usual royal honours. As we had gradually approached the shore the day had brightened and now revealed to view a prospect all the glorious beauties of which it were vain for me to attempt to describe, and which for me who had never before beheld it derived an additional charm from the thought of how dear it has been to so many of our English race. Well, my Lord, could the King when first viewing the scene from the deck of the royal frigate feel, as he has since told me he did, the magnitude and beauty of the present bestowed upon him by Her Majesty.

As we drew near we became aware of dark masses of people lining the beach, clustering on the sea-wall at Kastrades, and crowding every space on the road leading to the town and esplanade. As the Royal barge reached the shore all the bells of the town rang out their most joyful peals, the guns of the citadel saluted, and from the crowd that was awaiting his arrival shouts of welcome were raised such as for hearty and ringing sound it has seldom been my lot to hear out of England. The keys of the city were here presented to the King, and an address was read by the Mayor in the name of the Municipality. His Majesty then entered an open carriage drawn by four horses, and proceeded through the midst of the multitude, which in its eagerness to behold him crowded on him most inconveniently, to the Church of St. Spiridion, where a Te Deum was sung in his presence by the Greek Archbishop and clergy. From thence His Majesty went to the Palace of St. Michael and St. George, and in the evening drove and later rode through the town, being received everywhere with signs of the most genuine enthusiasm.

Although the King was not expected at Corfu till Wednesday, and the preparations for his reception were by no means completed, the illuminations and the display of fire-works were highly creditable to the taste and liberality of the Corfiotes. Nor can too much praise be bestowed on the behaviour of the immense crowds which all day and all night long filled the town and lingered chiefly round the Palace. On the whole, few of those who witnessed the scene are likely to forget the arrival of the King at Corfu.

I have the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship translation of the official programme for His Majesty's reception, published by the authorities.

I have, &c.

(Signed) HORACE RUMBOLD.

Sir,

Downing Street, June 22, 1864.

I HAVE received with great satisfaction your despatch of the 2nd instant, in which you report your departure from Corfu, and the evacuation of the Ionian Islands by the British troops.

The very interesting account which you have given of the conduct and spirit of the people on that remarkable occasion reflects the highest credit upon them, and not upon them only, but also upon those who have administered, in the name of the Queen, the office of the British Protectorate.

You entered upon your duties at a time of difficulty, but by the exercise of firmness, discretion, and forbearance, you have maintained unbroken tranquillity, and have encouraged in the breasts of the Ionian people those sentiments of gratitude and attachment towards the British Crown which they have now so honourably displayed.

For your services, therefore, during the continuance of your office, and for the skill with which you have discharged the delicate task of bringing that office to a close, I have the pleasure to convey to you Her Majesty's entire approval.

I have, &c.

ARTICLE XI.

Per far luogo al pagamento di questi dazi, l' importatore deve fare alla dogana una dichiarazione scritta, nelle quale siano indicati il valore e la natura degli oggetti importati, coll' aggiunta di cui sopra. Se le autorità doganali sono di parere che il valore dichiarato è insufficiente, sarà loro facoltativo di appropriarsi la mercanzia mediante il pagamento all' importatore del prezzo dichiarato, con un compenso del cinque per cento.

This payment, together with the restitution of any duty which may have been levied upon such goods, shall be made within the fifteen days following the declaration.

3. Potranno esercitare il loro commercio, sia personalmente, sia per mezzo di agenti che credano opportuno adoperarvi.

4. Non saranno, in alcun caso, sottoposti per le loro persone o proprietà, o pei passaporti, permessi di soggiorno, o di stabilimento, o per l'esercizio del loro commercio o industria, ad alcuna tassa generale o locale, nè imposta od obbligazione qualsiasi, che siano differenti o superiori a quelle che s'impongono, o possano imporsi, ai sudditi nazionali.

ARTICOLO XV.

I sudditi di ciascuna delle Parti Contraenti saranno esenti, negli stati e possessi dell'altra, dal servizio militare obbligatorio, sia nell'esercito, nella marina, nella guardia nazionale, sia nella milizia. Saranno parimente esenti da ogni ufficio giudiziario e from all judicial and municipal functions whatever, as well as from all contributions, whether pecuniary or in kind, imposed as a compensation for personal service; and, finally, from forced loans and military exactions or requisitions.

ARTICLE XVI.

The subjects of each of the Contracting Parties in the dominions and possessions of the other shall be at full liberty to acquire, possess, and dispose of every description of property which the laws of the country may permit any foreigners, of whatsoever nation, to acquire and possess. They may acquire and dispose of the same, whether by purchase, sale, donation, exchange, marriage, testament, succession ab intestato, or in any other manner, under the same conditions as are established by the laws of the country for all foreigners. Their heirs and representatives may succeed to and take possession of such property, either in person or by agents acting on their behalf, in the same manner and in the same legal forms as subjects of the country. In the absence of heirs and representatives the property shall be treated in the same manner as the like property belonging to a subject of the country under similar circumstances.

In none of these respects shall they pay upon the value of such property any other or higher impost, duty, or charge, than is payable by subjects of the country. In every case the subjects of the Contracting Parties shall be permitted to export their property, or the proceeds thereof if sold, freely, and without being subjected on such exportation to pay any duty as foreigners, or any other or higher duties than those to which subjects of the country are liable under similar circumstances.

ARTICLE XVII.

The dwellings, manufactories, warehouses, and shops of the subjects of each of the Contracting Parties in the dominions and possessions of the other, and all premises appertaining thereto, destined for purposes of residence or commerce, shall be respected. If there should be occasion to make a search of, or a domiciliary visit to, such dwellings and premises, or to examine or inspect books, papers, or accounts, such measure shall be executed only in conformity with the legal warrant or order in writing of a tribunal, or of the competent authority.

The subjects of each of the two Contracting Parties in the dominions and possessions of the other shall have free access to the Courts of Justice for the prosecution and defence of their rights. They shall enjoy in this respect the same rights and privileges as municipale, come pure da ogni specie di contribuzione, in danaro o in natura, imposta a compenso del servizio personale, e finalmente da qualsiasi prestito forzato, prestazione, o requisizione militare.

ARTICOLO XVI.

I sudditi di ciascuna delle Parti Contraenti avranno piena libertà, negli stati e possessi dell'altra, di acquistare, possedere, e disporre di ogni sorta di proprietà che le leggi del paese permettono agli stranieri, di qualsiasi nazione, di acquistare e di possederli. Essi potranno acquistare e disporre delle loro proprietà per compra, vendita, donazione, permuta, matrimonio, testamento, successione ab intestato, o in qualsiasi altra maniera, alle stesse condizioni che sono stabilite dalle leggi locali per tutti gli stranieri. I loro eredi o rappresentanti potranno succedere in queste proprietà e prenderne possesso, sia in persona, sia per mezzo di agenti per loro conto, nella stessa guisa e nelle stesse forme legali richieste pei nazionali. In mancanza di eredi o di rappresentanti, le loro proprietà saranno trattate nell'istessa maniera come se appartenessero ad un suddito del paese posto in eguali condizioni.

In tutti questi casi essi non pagheranno sul valore delle loro proprietà altre o maggiori tasse, diritti, e carichi, di quelli che sarebbero dovuti dei sudditi nazionali. I sudditi di ciascuna delle Parti Contraenti potranno, in ogni caso, esportare le loro proprietà, od il ricavo della loro vendita, con tutta libertà, e senza essere sottoposti per tale esportazione al pagamento di alcun diritto come straniero, o di alcun diritto che sia differente da quelli cui andrebbero soggetti in simili casi i sudditi del paese.

ARTICOLO XVII.

Le abitazioni, gli stabilimenti industriali, i magazzini, e le botteghe tenute dai sudditi di ciascuna delle Parti Contraenti negli stati e possessi dell'altra, come pure i locali che loro appartengono, destinati al commercio, saranno rispettati. Nel caso di perquisizione, o di visita domiciliare, in tali abitazioni o locali, e nel caso di ricognizione di libre, carte, e conti, non vi si potrà procedere che dietro autorizzazione legale od ordine scritto di un tribunale, o altra autorità competente.

I sudditi di ciascuna della due Parti Contraenti potranno, negli stati e possessi dell'altra, far valere i loro diritti e difenderli avanti i tribunali. Essi in tal caso godranno dei diritti e privilegi de' nazionali, e potranno, al pari di questi, affidare la trattazione delle subjects of the country, and shall, like them, be at liberty to employ, in all causes, their advocates, attorneys, or agents from among the persons admitted to the exercise of those professions according to the laws of the country.

ARTICLE XVIII.

Any ship of war or merchant-vessel of either of the Contracting Parties which may be compelled by stress of weather, or by accident, to take shelter in a port of the other, shall be at liberty to refit therein, to procure all necessary stores, and to put to sea again, without paying any dues other than such as would be payable in a similar case by a national vessel. In case, however, the master of a merchant-vessel should be under the necessity of disposing of a part of his merchandize in order to defray his expenses, he shall be bound to conform to the regulations and tariffs of the place to which he may have come.

If any ship of war or merchant-vessel of one of the Contracting Parties should run aground or be wrecked upon the coasts of the other, such ship or vessel, and all parts thereof, and all furniture and appurtenances belonging thereunto, and all goods and merchandize saved therefrom, including any which may have been cast into the sea, or the proceeds thereof if sold, as well as all papers found on board such stranded or wrecked ship or vessel, shall be given up to the owners or their agents when claimed by them. If there are no such owners or agents on the spot, then the same shall be delivered to the British or Italian Consul-General, Consul, or Vice-Consul, in whose district the wreck or stranding may have taken place, upon being claimed by him within the period fixed by the laws of the country; and such Consuls, owners, or agents, shall pay only the expenses incurred in the preservation of the property, together with the salvage or other expenses which would have been payable in the like case of a wreck of a national vessel.

The goods and merchandize saved from the wreck shall be exempt from all duties of Customs, unless cleared for consumption, in which case they shall pay the same rate of duty as if they had been imported in a national vessel.

In the case either of a vessel being driven in by stress of weather, run aground, or wrecked, the respective Consuls-General, Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Consular Agents shall, if the owner or master or other agent of the owner is not present, or is present and requires it, be authorized to interpose in order to afford the necessary assistance to their fellow-countrymen.

loro cause ad avvocati, procuratori, e agenti i quali abbiano diritto, secondo le leggi del paese, di esercitare tali professioni.

ARTICOLO XVIII.

I vascelli da guerra o bastimenti mercantili di una delle Parti Contraenti, i quali per necessità o per accidente trovinsi costretti a rifugiarsi nei porti dell'altra, vi potranno essere riparati, e avranno facoltà di approvvigionarsi e riprendere il mare, e in tutti questi casi non saranno tenuti a pagare altri o maggiori diritti di quelli che sarebbero dovuti da navi nazionali. Però se il capitano di un bastimento mercantile si trovi nella necessità di disporre di una parte del carico pel pagamento delle sue spese, dovrà uniformarsi in tal caso ai regolamenti e alle tariffe locali.

Se avvenga che un vascello da guerra o bastimento mercantile dell'una delle Parti Contraenti s'arreni o faccia naufragio sulle coste degli stati o possessi dell'altra, queste navi, le loro parti o rottami, l'alberatura e ogni altro oggetto che vi appartengano, come pure tutte le mercanzie che saranno state salvate, comprese quelle gettate in mare, o il ricavo della loro vendita, e le carte tutte rinvenute a bordo della nave arrenata o naufragata, saranno restituite al proprietario o chi per esso, appena siano reclamate. Nel caso manchi il proprietario o chi per esso, ogni cosa sarà consegnata al Console-Generale, Console, o Vice-Console Britannico o Italiano del distretto ov'ebbe luogo il naufragio o l'arrenamento, dietro domanda che l'interessato dovrà fare nel termine fissato dalle leggi locali. I Consoli, i proprietari, o loro rappresentanti, non saranno tenuti che al pagamento delle spese occorse per la conservazione della proprietà, comprese quelle di salvataggio e simili, che in casi analoghi sarebbero dovute dalle navi nazionali.

Le mercanzie e oggetti salvati dal naufragio non saranno sottoposti ai diritti di dogana, se non in quanto vengano dichiarati per la consumazione, ed in questi casi pagheranno solamente gli stessi diritti che sarebbero dovuti se fossero importati sopra nave nazionale.

Occorrendo che una nave debba per necessità entrare in un porto, sia arrenata o faccia naufragio, i Consoli-Generali, Consoli, e Vice-Consoli, sono autorizzati ad interporli perchè sia data la necessaria assistenza ai loro connazionali, occorrendo però la richiesta del capitano, padrone, o loro rappresentante, quando trovinsi presenti.

ARTICLE XIX.

The Consuls-General, Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Consular Agents of each of the Contracting Parties, residing in the dominions and possessions of the other, shall receive from the local authorities such assistance as can by law be given to them for the recovery of deserters from the vessels of their respective countries.

ARTICLE XX.

The present Treaty of Commerce and Navigation, when ratified, shall be substituted for the Treaties in force between the High Contracting Parties, namely, those concluded on the 5th April, 1847, and 30th December, 1854, between Great Britain and Tuscany; and on the 29th April, 1845, between Great Britain and the Two Sicilies; and on the 27th February, 1851, and 9th August, 1854, between Great Britain and Sardinia; and shall remain in force for ten years from the date of the exchange of the ratifications, and further until the expiration of twelve months after either of the Contracting Parties shall have given notice to the other of its intention to terminate the same; each of the Contracting Parties being at liberty to give such notice to the other at the expiration of the first nine years, or at any time afterwards.

ARTICLE XXI.

The present Treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at London in six weeks, or sooner if possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Turin, 6 August, 1863.

ARTICOLO XIX.

I Consoli-Generali, Consoli, Vice-Consoli, e Agenti Consolari di ciascuna delle Parti Contraenti, residenti negli stati e possessi dell'altra, riceveranno dalle autorità locali la maggiore assistenza che possa darsi secondo le legge del paese, per l'arresto dei disertori dalle navi della loro nazione.

ARTICOLO XX.

Il presente Trattato di Commercio e di Navigazione, allorquando sarà ratificato, surogherà i Trattati vigenti tra le Parti Contraenti, conchiusi il 5 Aprile, 1847, e 30 Dicembre, 1854, fra il Governo della Gran Bretagna e quello della Toscana; il 29 Aprile, 1845, fra il Governo della Gran Bretagna e quello delle Due Sicilie; il 27 febbrajo, 1851, e il 9 Agosto, 1854, tra il Governo della Gran Bretagna e quello della Sardegna; e sarà in vigore per dieci anni dalla data dello scambio delle ratifiche del presente Trattato, e anche oltre il detto termine sino a che non siano decorsi dodici mesi dall'annunzio che l'una delle Parti Contraenti fosse per dare all'altra della sua intenzione di farlo cessare; ognuna di esse riservandosi la facoltà di fare all'altra simile dichiarazione allo spirare dei primi nove anni, e in ogni tempo ulteriore.

ARTICOLO XXI.

Il presente Trattato sarà ratificato dalle due Parti Contraenti, e le ratifiche saranno cambiate in Londra nel termine de sei settimane, o prima se far si può.

In fede del che i rispettivi Plenipotenziarii sottoscrissero per doppio il presente Trattato, e vi apposero il sigillo delle loro armi.

Correspondence respecting Affairs in Japan.

No. 1.

Earl Russell to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir,

Foreign Office, December 24, 1862.

THE barbarous murder of Mr. Richardson, and the murderous assault on two gentlemen and a lady who were in his company, have inspired Her Majesty's Government with great and just indignation.

It was to be hoped that the instant trial and condign punishment of the murderers, together with an offer of further reparation, would have shown, on the part of the Japanese Government, a due sense of the magnitude of the offence which had been committed. But the letter of the Japanese Ministers of Foreign Affairs, dated the 16th of September, dispels this hope. In a tone of helplessness or evasion they say that in the answer which Saboolo gave to their officer, there is something very improper, and that they will have the whole state of the case more accurately inquired into, and inform you of the result.

There could have been no doubt in the minds of the Ministers of Japan that a barbarous murder had been committed; no doubt that other murders had, at the same time, been contemplated; and the only course which a Government sensible of its duties, and able to perform them, could have pursued was to arrest, try, convict, and execute the murderers.

But even the first step of this process does not seem to have been taken.

In fixing the reparation to be required, Her Majesty's Government have had to consider the anomalous state of political rule in Japan. They find two parties who are responsible to the British Government: first, the Government of Yeddo, who, when British subjects are attacked and murdered on the high-road in full daylight, by persons who are known, nevertheless allow those persons to remain unpunished; secondly, the Daimio Prince of Satsuma, whose relation, Simadzoo Saboolo, permitted, if he did not actually order, his retainers to commit this horrible crime, and who do not punish it.

You are instructed to ask as reparation from the Japanese Government:—

1. An ample and formal apology for the offence of permitting a murderous attack on British subjects passing on a road open by Treaty to them.

2. The payment of 100,000*l.*, as a penalty on Japan for this offence.

Next you will demand from the Daimio Prince of Satsuma:—

1. The immediate trial and capital execution, in the presence of one or more of Her Majesty's naval officers, of the chief perpetrators of the murder of Mr. Richardson, and of the murderous assault upon the lady and gentlemen who accompanied him.

2. The payment of 25,000*l.*, to be distributed to the relations of the murdered man, and to those who escaped with their lives the swords of the assassins on that occasion.

If the Japanese Government should refuse the redress you are thus instructed to demand, you will inform thereof the Admiral or Senior Naval Officer on the station, and you will call upon him to adopt such measures of reprisal or blockade, or of both, as he may judge best calculated to attain the end proposed.

You will at the same time communicate the substance of your instructions to the Envoys and Naval Commanders in Japan of other European Powers; and you will concert with the British Admiral, and the naval officers of those Powers, arrangements for the safety of foreigners during coercive operations.

If the Daimio Satsuma should not immediately agree to and carry into effect the terms demanded of him, the Admiral should go with his own ship, and with such others as he may think fit to take with him, or he should send a sufficient force to the territory of the Prince, which I have been informed is a peninsula on the most southerly point of the island. He has a port, I am told, at the south-west end of the Island of Kiu-siu.

The Admiral or Senior Naval officer will be better able to judge than Her Majesty's Government can be, whether it will be most expedient to blockade this port, or whether it will be possible or advisable to shell the residence of the Prince.

I have also been informed that the Prince of Satsuma has steam-ships brought from Europe of considerable value; these might be seized or detained till redress is obtained.

During these operations, whether against the Government of Japan or the Prince of Satsuma, care must be taken by the Admiral to protect the ports where British persons and property may be in jeopardy.

The distinction between the Government and the Daimios is one that must be kept in view.

The Prince of Satsuma is said by one of the Japanese Ministers to be a powerful Daimio, who could not easily be coerced by the Japanese Government. He must not, nor must the other Daimios, escape, on that account, the penalty of their misdeeds.

I am, &c.

(Signed) RUSSELL.

No. 2.

Earl Russell to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir,

Foreign Office, December 27, 1862.

YOUR despatch of the 29th of October,* received this day, does not alter in any respect the grounds upon which the decision of Her Majesty's Government was taken in reference to the murder and murderous assaults of the 14th September.

In your note to the Japanese Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the 12th of October, which is approved by Her Majesty's Government, you say that the Japanese communication of the 11th of October amounts to a denial of all redress, and that you shall so consider it, and so report it to Her Majesty's Government, unless within ten days you shall receive satisfactory and detailed information.

Your despatch of the 29th October contains no account of the reception of such satisfactory and detailed information.

You will perceive that in the instructions now sent to you, Her Majesty's Government have made full allowance for the inability of the Tycoon's Ministers to control the powerful Daimios, and Her Majesty's Government are ready to believe that the Tycoon's Ministers are willing and desirous to punish the murderers who committed the crimes of the 14th September.

It is obvious that if the Prince of Satsuma had been ready to give up the murderers, he would not have allowed a month or six weeks to pass without doing so.

If, however, since the date of your despatch, the murderers have been given up and executed, one of the demands of Her Majesty's Government will have been satisfied.

Her Majesty's Government are happy to hear that by the construction of a new road, and the removal of thousands of the retainers of the Daimios from Yeddo, chances of future collision will be diminished. These measures, moreover, show a conciliatory disposition towards foreigners on the part of the Tycoon's Government.

I am, &c.

(Signed) RUSSELL.

No. 3.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received January 15, 1863.)

Yokohama, November 12, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to report to your Lordship that I have been officially informed by the Japanese Ministers, a copy of whose despatch I have the honour to inclose, that His Majesty the Tycoon will proceed to Miako on a visit to the Mikado in the second month of the ensuing year, corresponding with the month of March 1863.

No reason is officially assigned for the projected journey of the Tycoon, nor is it stated whether His Majesty will travel by land or by sea, or how long he will be absent from Yeddo.

Such information the Japanese Government is never disposed to afford. I have, however, addressed a despatch to the Ministers, a copy of which I have the honour to inclose, requesting to be informed whether the business of the Government, especially as regards foreign affairs, will still be conducted at Yeddo during the Tycoon's absence. To that despatch I have as yet received no reply; but I have endeavoured to obtain as much information as possible in respect to the object of the Tycoon's journey, and I am told that His Majesty never having been formally invested in his high position by the Mikado, now proceeds to Miako for that purpose, more especially urged to accomplish that ceremony owing to the relationship by marriage which now subsists between the Mikado and himself, and further, to mark the dependence of the Tycoon to the Mikado's authority, a point which had fallen into disuse during previous reigns.

I am also informed that the Tycoon will travel with a very large retinue, comprising the Regent of the Empire, several of the higher Daimios, one or more of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs, and several members of the First and Second Council.

It is impossible with any degree of exactitude to unravel the policy of the Japanese Government amidst the changes now in course of accomplishment in this country, or to ascertain with certainty whether those changes have been brought about by the differences of the Government with the Daimios, or arising out of its relations with foreign nations.

Yokohama, November 5, 1862.

I HAVE been informed by Mr. Eusden, Japanese Secretary, that the Governors for Foreign Affairs have addressed to him a letter informing him that His Majesty the Tycoon purposed proceeding to Miako on the second month of the next year, and requesting Mr. Eusden to inform me of that circumstance.

I have the honour to express to your Excellencies my regret that so important an announcement should not have been deemed by you a subject proper to be communicated by you directly to the Representatives of foreign nations.

It becomes now my duty, acting upon the information so conveyed to me, to request your Excellencies to inform me, for the information of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, and for my own guidance, whether during the absence of His Majesty the Tycoon, the Supreme Government of Japan, and more especially the administration of foreign affairs presided over by your Excellencies, will be conducted as heretofore at Yeddo.

With respect and consideration.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received January 26, 1863.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, November 18, 1862.

AMIDST the current of events through which our diplomatic and commercial relations have been maintained in this country with such consistent tenacity, I venture to believe that it would not be inappropriate to record the personal and exceptional situation of the members of Her Majesty's Legation at Yeddo, as contrasting with any that can well be contemplated at a distance, and contrasting also with the ordinary course of official and private tranquillity into which Her Majesty's Diplomatic servants in Japan will doubtless settle at a later period of our intercourse.

The arrival of the Legation at Yeddo is on each occasion preceded by a notice addressed to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs. On reaching the shore (which occupies from one and a-half to two hours, as the distance from the anchorage is between three and four miles) the boats containing the members of the Legation and guards are received by a hedge of yaconins, who restrain within certain bounds the crowd which assembles on these occasions. Accompanied by the guards, the Legation residence is reached on foot, and sentries from the British guard are at once posted round it. The all but empty house is rendered habitable with the requisites and attendants brought from Yokohama. The main body of the Japanese guards appointed for the protection of the Legation, and amounting to between 200 and 300 men, but whose presence inspires little confidence, muster about their wooden huts on the rising ground around the Legation and along the avenue which leads to it.

Preparations are now actively hurried to ensure the appliances requisite for the guards within the Legation inclosure at night. Fire-wood is brought and piled on the lawn, and the numerous lanterns which are hung round the inclosure are trimmed and suspended in their places. At nightfall the sentries are increased, the bonfire and lanterns are lit, throwing a glare on all the neighbouring thickets and on all surrounding objects. The night is passed by the hourly rounds and the relief of sentries. The orders given to the sentries (with the knowledge and concurrence of the Japanese authorities) are to shoot all Japanese approaching their posts within the well-defined precincts after dark.

On the occasions when official visits are paid to the Ministers who reside at a distance, which occupies two hours to reach, the British mounted escort, consisting of ten men, accompanies the cortège; but the Japanese authorities appear to consider it indispensably necessary to surround it with from twenty to thirty horsemen of their own, who precede and follow, closely watching the movements of all persons in the streets, and especially of two-sworded men, and even a single man if he is seen approaching; for the sole act of drawing his sword impels the stroke which has so often inflicted a death-wound.

Notwithstanding these precautions—and they can hardly be increased—startling incidents are of not unfrequent occurrence, serving as warnings of more serious casualties which may befall one at any moment. On one of the last occasions that I visited the Ministers, attended by the cortège I have described, forming a retinue of about fifty persons, my horse plunged and reared amidst a general tumult, when two horsemen passed me, coming from behind at full speed, rushing through our ranks, striking the horses of our Japanese guards with heavy sticks, and pursued by the whole body of them. I was now left with the few men of the British escort in the middle of Yeddo, but continued on my road to the official residence of the Ministers; after a while we were rejoined by the Japanese guards, who returned breathless from their pursuit, but without having overtaken our assailants. I was told they were adherents of the Prince of Satsuma.

On ordinary occasions, any member of the Legation who may walk or ride for exercise out of the limits of the Legation inclosure is surrounded by Japanese guards, who gather in the closest contact round him upon the approach of any two-sworded man; but should the procession of a Daimio be met while riding, they are reduced to the necessity, according to the usage of this country not yet overcome, of breaking into single file, and thus exposing to isolated attack from passing retainers the foreigner they may be guarding.

I should add that the French Legation is in every respect in the same position as what I have above described to be that of Her Majesty's Legation, nor is there any difference in the case of the American or Dutch Missions, save in the particular that they have no guards of their own nations, but, on the other hand, have around them a still greater number of Japanese guards, many of whom occupy rooms within the Legation buildings—a proximity from which Her Majesty's Legation is grateful to be relieved by the assuring presence of our own countrymen.

I have, &c.

No. 5.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received January 26, 1863.)

Yokohama, November 20, 1862.

A VERY general report prevailed here a few days ago that the Regent of the Empire, who has taken an active part in all the innovations upon old-established customs recently adopted, had been assassinated in the Tycoon's palace in Yeddo.

In the absence of all sources from whence authentic information can be obtained upon these occasions, I decided upon addressing the Japanese Ministers themselves, requesting to be informed if the report referred to had any foundation in truth, and at the same time to try the experiment of seeking from the Ministers official information respecting the changes which have recently taken place.

Contrary to my expectation, I received an early reply from the Ministers to the letter I had addressed to them. I have the honour to inclose copies of this correspondence, and your Lordship will observe that the report respecting the Regent's assassination was incorrect; but it is still the popular belief that an attempt has been made on his life, arising more directly, it is said, out of retrenchments he had recently directed in the quantity of rice allowed daily to public officers, guards, and attendants, and which had never before been subjected to diminution.

In respect to the Decree referred to by the Gorogio, which enables the Daimios to reside with their families on their estates, the motives assigned to this measure are twofold. On the one hand it is believed, I think with good reason, that the return of the Daimios to their domains is ordained with a view to their being better enabled to carry out measures of defence within their territories, especially on the coast, by erecting new batteries and collecting their adherents for the purpose of better resisting whatever hostile measures any of the Western Treaty Powers may adopt, arising out of outrages sustained, or which may hereafter be sustained, by their subjects.

In support of this impression I should state to your Lordship that I learnt recently from the Commander of the United States' war-steamer "Wyoming," which arrived here from Nagasaki, that several fortifications on a formidable scale were in course of active construction at different points in the inland sea, and especially at the entrance and outlet into the Pacific of the Bay of Osaka. The anxiety of the Japanese Government to seek every information within their reach respecting the best description of artillery, and especially as to Armstrong guns, doubtless for the purpose of arming these and other batteries, would all seem to point to preparations of a defensive character, in anticipation of troubles which might in the course of events chance to arise with one or more of the Treaty Powers, or of more immediate pressure which Great Britain may apply in obtaining satisfactory redress for reiterated outrages. To this may be added the projected departure of the Tycoon to a point of the Empire less accessible to foreign ships of war.

On the other hand, it is stated that all the measures recently decreed by the Government have been instigated by the party attached to the pre-eminence of the Mikado over the power usurped by the Dynasty of the Tycoon, whose present supremacy is believed to be gradually declining. Thus the projected journey of the Tycoon to Kioto (Miako) for investiture is the first on record since a similar journey performed in 1623 by the third Emperor of this Dynasty; Envoys subsequently to that period having on the occasion of each new succession of a Tycoon come from the Mikado to Yeddo charged with that office. Coupled with the journey of the Tycoon are the sumptuary laws which dispense with distinctive symbols of official costume, and, finally, the liberation of the Daimios from attendance at the Tycoon's Court, save at long intervals; all measures which, in the opinion of some well-informed persons, have for their object and tendency to elevate the supreme authority of the Mikado, while it lowers in the person of the reigning Tycoon the position and authority hitherto usurped and enforced by his Dynasty.

Yokohama, October 27, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to address your Excellencies under the circumstances of the general report which prevails, that the Gotiro or Regent of this Empire has been assassinated at Yeddo. While conveying to your Excellencies my sincere hope that so lamentable a report may be ill-founded, I request of your Excellencies to afford me some official information respecting this serious subject, which cannot be otherwise than of great interest to all nations in relation of peace and amity with Japan.

Public and universal report proclaims also the accomplishment of great changes ordained by the Government of His Majesty the Tycoon within the last few days, affecting the institutions of this Empire, in regard to the residence of the Daimios in Yeddo, and in other established usages of this country. Such important changes are of political interest to friendly nations, which are guided in their relations with Japan according to their knowledge of the institutions and circumstances which exist. Upon these grounds I am called upon to request your Excellencies to afford me such intelligence as you may deem it consistent with your duties to communicate.

A serious and urgent communication.

The Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

(Translation.)

WE have received your despatch dated October 27th.

You have stated that a report has reached you that an accident had befallen the Regent, but it is altogether without foundation. But with regard to the political changes, it has been decreed that the Princes (Daimios) who hitherto resided at Yeddo one whole year out of the two, shall henceforth only repair thither after the third year, and fixing amongst themselves the time when they are to relieve each other, shall alternately reside there about 100 days; furthermore, that they are at liberty to allow their wives and children to remain in their domains.

Besides these are some minor changes, but of not sufficient importance to communicate to you.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received February 12, 1863.)

My Lord,

Yeddo, December 3, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to lay before your Lordship copies of two despatches I have received from Mr. Ensle, Acting Consul at Hakodadi, conveying to me the substance of petitions recently addressed by a large number of the principal adherents of hostile Daimios through the Mikado to the Tycoon.

It is impossible to be satisfactorily convinced of the authenticity of these documents, but in the present instance some time has elapsed since they came to Mr. Ensle's knowledge, and nothing which has transpired has served to lessen the probability of a petition, in the terms described, having been addressed to the Tycoon.

If this be so, the statements and sentiments expressed partake, I venture to think, of considerable interest.

Inclosure 1 in No. 6.

Acting Consul Enslie to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir,

Hakodadi, October 17, 1862.

THE various documents which I have lately obtained clearly proves that we are rapidly approaching a Japanese-European crisis, and it may reasonably be feared that the sequel will be terrible.

As the endeavours of the loonins, bribed by the Daimios to excite a hostile movement against Yeddo and against foreigners, have not succeeded, the anti-foreign Daimios have drawn away the veil which hid their designs, and now loudly utter their demands.

They commence the attack by a series of protestations as bold towards the Government of the Tycoon as they are insolent with regard to foreigners. Kiusiu and Shikoku are at the head of this movement, and the other Daimios of the south-west of Japan follow in the rear; and the representations of their secret envoys to Kioto appear very modestly worded when compared with the audacious tone of their proclamation.

I shall not trouble you with a literal translation of the long document, as a summary of its contents will easily show its tendency.

They commence with accusations against the Yeddo Government, and repeat a hundred times that the administration is wretched, but assign no reasons, nor do they endeavour to prove their assertions. The old objection that the Tycoon did not ask for the Mikado's sanction before ratifying the Treaties is repeated again and again. The Tycoon is called the Mayor of Kuanton (the Eastern district of Yeddo), and they threaten to renounce their allegiance to him, and transact the affairs of the State only with the Mikado.

In that part of the document in which the Daimio of Mori states his grievances, he says: "The Mayor of Kuanton will thus be left to his own resources, and how will he then resist the Te-hits-roa (English, French, Russians, Americans)? The Tycoon is young and unable to govern. Everybody laughs at him! The Daimio of Satsuma has acted rightly in demanding the reins of government, and this would perhaps be a remedy for every evil. But why does not the Mayor of Kuanton take the advice of those who understand his situation, and know the remedies: why does he not consult the learned Naga-oota before the nation has proceeded to such extremities?"

The other Daimios express themselves in a more audacious manner. It is an undeniable fact that the Yeddo Government has merited their criticism, but the Daimios of the Opposition doubtless have not unveiled all the vices of the Government of the Tycoon, as their own is equally bad. They have resisted the encroachments of the Yeddo Government for centuries, and wishing to avenge their personal grievances they have made the opening of Japan to foreigners a pretext to demand the deposition of the Tycoon.

At present they do not speak about political economy, nor do they complain about the state of their Treasuries; in their previous document they said that foreign trade was one of the banes of Japan, now, however, it appears that we are the only cause of their complaints. The only cause which makes them express their opinions is patriotism.

"Japan ought not to have been open to foreigners. If, as you assert, you were forced to accede to the wishes of the barbarians, the opening of the other ports can and must be postponed until Japan is sufficiently fortified. At present we certainly cannot receive the proud barbarians, nor can we show them the glory of our great country. Our army and navy are not formidable enough. What a disgrace to our country that we are not able to say to the newly arrived foreigners as we did to those at Decima: 'Fear, tremble, and obey!' Japan is a great Empire, it must be fortified, and then the Tehitsroa will not despise us. They laugh at us now, and this certainly is our own fault. We gladly sacrifice ourselves if this will wipe out the stain. If, as you say, it is impossible to undo what has been done, the privileges they at present enjoy in Japan must be lessened, and their liberties restricted. We fully agree with you that it is difficult to break off at once all connection with foreigners, and the Tycoon must, therefore, go to Kioto to confer with the Mikado regarding the measures which must be adopted to maintain the dignity of Japan, if we really must receive the Tehitsroa."

As I have already said, this document is written by Kiusiu and Shikoku, but the writers take great care to state that the south and south-west parts of Japan entertain the same opinion. They seem to say to the Mayor of Kuanton, "Count your forces, as we have counted ours." All the malcontents have put a stop to their journeys to Yeddo; the timid and polite Daimios have sent excuses—sickness, dangerous times, &c., &c.; others have turned back on the road, after a conference with their colleagues.

I shall now take the liberty of giving you a true translation of another and still more important document.

As soon as the Daimios were informed that a delay had been granted to Japan for the opening of other ports, they sent a Proclamation to Yeddo through the Mikado, in which they claimed the honour of having forced the foreigners to grant this delay. I have not been able to obtain this declaration, which is said to be very long, but I have the honour of submitting to your notice a translation of the instructions of the Mikado to the Gioshee or to his Envoy to the Tycoon, which contains the demands of the Daimios:

"The honour and safety of our country," says the Kirambaku (the highest dignity after the Mikado), "not only demand that the Tehitsroa shall not enter our sacred Empire any further, but the liberties they at present enjoy must be restricted. It is quite natural that they renounced their supposed rights to Osaka and Yeddo, and in doing so they showed a little common sense. I have ordered Oobara Saimon to inform you of the contents of the petition of the Southern Daimios. As the peace which has long reigned in Japan renders it impossible for us to enforce our orders on the Te-hits-ro-a, they must be reasoned with. Kanagawa must be closed, as their residence in that port is a disgrace to the nation, and the reasons assigned for Osaka and Yeddo must be again adduced. Tell them this is absolutely necessary for the peace of Yeddo, and that 'when a nation experiences no change it enjoys peace.'"—(Extract from "Long-Yu," one of the four classical Chinese books.) "You must also add that the presence of foreigners at Kanagawa (Yokohama) increases the price of the daily necessities of life, thereby causing great discontent among the people, who no longer obey their superiors.

"The Daimios say that the Tehitsroa ought to be sent back to Nagasaki, as was formerly the case. As this would perhaps be rather difficult, we must allow them to remain at Hakodadi. Great difficulty will perhaps be experienced in obtaining their consent to leave Kanagawa; if, therefore, they will not listen to your reasons, Shimoda can be offered to them in exchange for Kanagawa. This is all that can be done; and if this last proposition does not please them, you must postpone your decision until you have seen us.

"You may let them entertain a slight hope that Kanagawa will be re-opened at some future period, for the Daimios say that Japan will be able to receive foreigners without blushing in six or seven years. Our Envoy has received strict orders not to leave Yeddo until you have solemnly promised to do your utmost to replace our country in the position it occupied when the Ooranda were at Nagasaki."

This new document will doubtless surprise you still more than the former one, and, while vouching for its authenticity, I trust I may in some measure prepare you for the strange proposals the Yeddo Government will make to you.

The hostility of the Daimios, who are oppressed by the Tycoon and his Government, the fears they entertain that the importance and power of Yeddo will increase by its intercourse with foreign nations, and their national pride, which cannot brook the equality which exists in civilized countries and among civilized people, are the three principal causes of the anti-foreign movement in Japan.

In conclusion, I take the liberty to add a few words about the journey of the Tycoon to Kioto. He cannot go to Miako alone, as his youthful age renders it impossible for him to decide upon matters of such importance. He has, therefore, been forced to look out for a counsellor; and this is certainly no easy matter, as his choice has to be confined to the eighteen elder branches of the Daimios, who nearly all entertain hostile feelings against the Lieutenant of the Mikado. After long consultations, proposals have been made to the Daimio of Shendai, who has, however, not yet sent his reply.

I have, &c.

(Extract.)

Hakodadi, October 16, 1862.

IN accordance with your instructions I have the honour to forward you a copy of the translation of the Daimio's petition I lately had the pleasure of submitting to your notice:—

"When you consulted us about the new relations into which we were to enter with foreigners, you told us upon the authority of a certain Harisoo (Mr. Harris, the American Minister) that the Treaty would give us plenty and abundance. Both you and Harisoo said that cotton would be sold for a mere nothing, and that silk and manufactured goods would not cost us anything. The daily necessities of life would be brought to our country from all the quarters of the globe, and our farmers would not be required to sow and reap. We anxiously expect these miracles, and at present enjoy advantages which you never mentioned, namely, that those articles which you and Harisoooh promised to give at very low prices are now three times as expensive as they formerly were. You told us that our treasuries would always be open to receive the enormous riches which our intercourse with foreigners would procure us. It is an undeniable fact that our treasuries have continually been open; but instead of receiving money, we have been called upon to sacrifice the little we possess.

"You monopolize the import and export duties completely, and we had a right to suppose that those duties which, according to your statements and those of your financier Harisoooh, would enrich the Japanese nation, ought to cover expenses, such as building fortifications and buying men-of-war, which you say must inspire the barbarians with the respect due to our great country. But what have you done for the last three years? What has been the tenour of all your despatches? Japan must be fortified, fortifications must be built, the artillery and navy increased. Money is required. The presence of foreigners occasioned great expenses, entertainments must be given to the Ministers, the petty Consuros cannot be forgotten, and foreigners must be made to respect and fear our great nation by witnessing the boundless resources of the country, and the majesty of its ruler.

"If we could only see those fortifications, those men-of-war, we would complain less about the expense; but everything is proposed, and nothing executed. You think that drawings and plans will scare foreigners, and cause them to flee from our country, but we doubt it, for they nearly equal us in this art. You sometimes talk to us about political economy, and we candidly own you give us excellent advice; unfortunately we have numerous proofs that you do not follow the precepts you give us. Why was such an incredible sum of money spent for all the vain and useless pomp which accompanied the sister of the Mikado on her journey to Yeddo preparatory to her marriage with the Tycoon? Why was so much money expended in rebuilding the palace of the Tycoon? We shall not mention the various ways in which public money is wasted, as this would cause our nation to blush, and the Mikado to mourn. Public rumour, however, says that numerous thefts have been committed by the highest officers of the Tycoon; if any protest against the course which is now pursued, they are instantly and mysteriously silenced for ever.

"As you always remind us of the great principles of political economy when you demand pecuniary supplies, pardon us for making the following remarks:—

"Owing to the troubled state of the country, the presence of the Daimios at Yeddo was formerly highly necessary.

"This is not the case at present, and still our Lords are travelling to and from the capital. The personal fatigue, vexation, and the expense of the immense retinue which always accompanies them, can no longer be supported. The time has come that these ruinous journeys should cease, and that the Lords of Japan declare themselves unable to defray the expenses which you impose upon them.

"As foreign trade has nearly ruined us, and as fortifications and numerous other unforeseen expenses are deemed necessary in all the ports which have been opened to the barbarians, we not only demand that the new ports, Osaka, Neegata, and Yeddo, shall not be opened, but that Kanagawa be closed. You always assert that we are opposed to friendly intercourse with foreign nations; but this is utterly false. We willingly consent to open the whole of Japan if this step does not occasion expenses which surpass our means. We have not murdered our adherents who were favourably inclined towards the opening of Japan to foreigners.

"You teach the young to despise and insult foreigners; and although you always tell us that the foreign nations are powerful, and greatly to be feared, a high functionary of the 'Tori' lately said that, with the exception of the Russians, all the foreigners could be insulted with impunity."

No. 7.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received February 12, 1863.)

My Lord,

Yeddo, December 3, 1862.

WITH reference to my previous correspondence upon the subject of the danger which was risked by British subjects, in common with all other foreigners, when availing themselves of the privilege of walking or riding on the tokaido or high-road in the vicinity of Yokohama, I have the honour to lay before your Lordship copies of a correspondence which has taken place between the Japanese Ministers and myself upon that subject.

Your Lordship will be gratified to observe that, by the establishment of numerous guard-houses, the duties and responsibilities with which the guards are charged, and the further arrangements in progress, the Japanese Government evince an undeniable anxiety, which no inconvenience or expense has abated, to avert the possibility of the collision of foreigners with the retinues of Daimios, who are in reality very little under control, especially when leaving Yeddo armed and in large numbers, to return to the almost independent possessions of their chief.

In the meanwhile, neither the notifications from time to time issued by Her Majesty's Consul, under my instructions, cautioning the community of the risk which still exists on the tokaido until the new road is opened for Daimios, nor the knowledge of past or occurring incidents, appear to deter them from frequenting it for their recreation.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 1 in No. 7.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.

Yokohama, November 22, 1862.

I HAVE been informed by the British Consul at this port that the Governor of Kanagawa had written to him that twenty-three guard-houses had been erected between Kawasaki and Hodogaya, and that officers had been placed in them, and that the Governor requested the Consul to inform British subjects of these arrangements.

The urgent necessity of rendering safe the tokaido within the limits assigned to foreigners has been the subject of serious communications between myself and your Excellencies, both verbal and written, since the occurrence of the murder and outrage upon British subjects on the 14th September.

I have been awaiting a communication from your Excellencies as to the accomplishment of the various measures which you have assured me should be executed to avoid the recurrence of such serious events.

Your Excellencies have not written to me upon this subject, but have directed the Governor to inform the Consul.

This communication having thus indirectly come to my knowledge, I have the honour to state that I am entitled to expect some more explicit and detailed information from your Excellencies with regard to the measures adopted, and remaining still to be adopted, in order that British subjects may be informed that they can proceed in safety and without risk of outrage on the tokaido within the whole of the limits. I have the honour to request your Excellencies to inform me—

1. Whether the twenty-three guard-houses are the whole number which it is intended to construct?

2. Whether the five guards placed in each of them are permanently stationed there, so that they may know the foreigners who pass, or whether they are changed?

3. What are the orders given to the guards with regard to the protection of foreigners? A point upon which I have to request your Excellencies will afford me full and explicit information.

4. Whether the new road is already open for the passage of Daimios, and if not when it will be opened? And

5. Finally, whether British subjects can under present arrangements proceed without risk of encountering outrage or insult from the cortège of Daimios or others upon the tokaido within the limits.

An urgent communication.

Inclosure 2 in No. 7.

The Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

(Translation.)

WE have received your despatch of the 22nd November, and have fully understood the five points you have adduced, and that you have disapproved of the erection of the watchhouses between Kawasaki and Hodogaya being communicated by the Governor of Kanagawa to the British Consul, as it ought properly to have been made known to you.

It was our intention to have sent you a communication on this subject as soon as the measures of protection were completed. And the communication which was made by the said Governor to the British Consul was but verbal, merely mentioning that the watchhouses were erected; thus this cannot be construed into our having acted improperly, but as you wish it we will answer your five questions.

1. You have stated that twenty-three watchhouses had been erected, but what we have undertaken to do is the erection of nineteen watchhouses and five smaller ones, which is the number that was fixed on after the Governor of Kanagawa with his officials had pointed out the proper places. Besides these, there are ten other places for officials who are to give assistance to the aforesaid watchhouses in case of need.

2. The guards placed in these watchhouses relieve each other, but of course they know the foreigners that pass by, and five officials are always present in the said watchhouses.

3. In the event of any accident (insult, attack, murder) taking place, the guards are to hasten to the rescue, and to protect and defend, and others are to give notice to the different watchhouses, and thus assistance will be obtained, and united they will endeavour to prevent anything improper happening.

These are the instructions we have already issued.

4. The making of a new road for the Daimios to travel on has already been decided on, as we have already informed you; but we have something to communicate to you respecting this new road, which we will do at our next interview.

5. Regarding this point, it will of course be settled according to your desire, after all the measures have been completed; thus we can assure you beforehand that there will be a time in the future when not only you but we ourselves will feel perfectly at ease.

With respect and consideration.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received February 25, 1863.)

My Lord,

Yeddo, December 12, 1862.

IMMEDIATELY upon receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 22nd September last,* conveying instructions to me with reference to the attack on Her Majesty's Legation on the 26th of June, I sought and obtained an interview with the Japanese Ministers.

I commenced the conference by requesting the Japanese Ministers' attention to the subject of my interview without interposing any incidental remarks to the communication I was instructed to make to them, until I had concluded what I had to say, to which they readily assented.

I then read the paper of which I have the honour herewith to inclose a copy, and which was interpreted by Mr. Eusden from a translation already prepared.

Having attentively listened to what I stated, the Ministers rejoined by some remarks which are annexed to that document, reserving their explicit reply to a later date, when they said they would answer my communication at length. After awaiting twelve days at Yeddo the determination of the Japanese Government I purpose to return to Yokohama, as the duties imposed upon the guards attached to the Legation during the residence of its members here is necessarily under present circumstances harassing; but I have every reason to expect that I shall be enabled to lay before your Lordship the reply of the Japanese Government to the communication I have made, by the same mail which conveys this despatch, and by the succeeding mail I shall have the honour to report to your Lordship such further measures as I shall have deemed it to be my duty, according to circumstances to adopt, within the limit of your Lordship's instructions.

I have, &c.

Inclosure in No. 8.

Memorandum communicated verbally to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs at Yeddo, on the 4th December, 1862, by Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires.

HER Majesty has learned with sorrow and indignation the events of the 26th of June in Her Majesty's Legation at Yeddo.

Her Majesty's Minister has had under his notice the very unsatisfactory apologies and declarations of the Japanese Minister upon this subject.

I am directed to state that some circumstances connected with the murders perpetrated on two of Her Majesty's subjects employed in Her Majesty's service, and actually engaged in defending Her Majesty's Legation, have produced a very painful impression.

Some of these circumstances are:—1. That whereas the Japanese Guards employed when the murderous attempts of last year took place, bravely defended the Legation and exposed their lives in the performance of their duty, the followers of the Daimio employed on the present occasion, although sufficiently numerous, behaved in the most cowardly and treacherous manner. The inference would appear to be that the former guards were removed for their fidelity, and the guards who behaved in a cowardly and treacherous manner were expressly chosen for their want of courage and fidelity. 2. That the Japanese Governor for Foreign Affairs, who called on me the day previous to the murderous assault, exhausted his communications in congratulations, and when it was afterwards asked why he did not warn me of my danger, he admitted the omission but failed to account for it. The inference would seem to be that the visit of congratulation was intended to put me off my guard, and to prevent my taking those precautions which would have saved the lives of the unfortunate victims. 3. The number of wounds—sixteen in the person of one, and nine in that of the other murdered man—would seem to show that the assassins were several, and that the Japanese yakonins or guards connived at the assassination. The inference would seem to be that the Daimio intrusted with the defence and protection of Her Majesty's Mission secretly favoured an attempt to murder the Chargé d'Affaires and all the members of the Queen's Mission. 4. Neither on the last occasion of murderous and midnight assault, nor on the present, have the Japanese Ministers given any assurance of efficient protection for the future. And I have on my own part to add and to observe to your Excellencies, that upwards of five months have now elapsed since the occurrence referred to, and I have still received no such assurance based upon any measures which the Japanese Government may have adopted to attain that end. The inference would seem to be that the Japanese Government indulges a secret hope that the sense of insecurity may at length induce Her Majesty's Government to abandon Yeddo, and gradually allow the ancient custom of non-intercourse and prohibition of trade to be re-established.

Her Majesty's Minister observes that these are grave suspicions, and that it is painful to be obliged to entertain them, but that they are suspicions which nothing but the most searching inquiry into the past, and the most efficient protection for the future, will suffice to dissipate.

Her Majesty's Government are glad to see the readiness with which the Representatives of the Emperor of the French, and of the United States and other Powers, evinced their horror, indignation, and sympathy at the event which had occurred.

I am charged to urge upon the Japanese Government the duty, for its own sake, of a strict inquiry into this deplorable occurrence; and I am further instructed that if the Daimio in charge of the Legation, as there is every reason to believe, betrayed his trust, and connived at the attack on the Legation, he should be openly degraded and severely punished. Upon this point I am called upon, on my part, in the meanwhile to declare to your Excellencies, as I have already recorded in my letter addressed to you on September 9th, and a copy of which I have transmitted to Her Majesty's Government, that the result of the investigation into the conduct of the Daimio, Tamba no Kami, and of the others directly or indirectly implicated in this occurrence, and the punishments awarded as communicated by you to me, and copy of which I have also transmitted to Her Majesty's Government, were altogether insufficient and unsatisfactory. These punishments, especially as relate to the Daimio, Tamba no Kami, who, as it is acknowledged in the report furnished to me of the investigation, failed, if he did nothing worse, to give the necessary orders to his guards for the performance of their duty, which duty expressly and solely consisted in duly protecting and in coming to the immediate aid of Her Majesty's Legation if attacked, yet remain to be reconsidered, revised, and awarded, consistently with the magnitude of the offence and most serious neglect of duty avowed to have been by them committed.

If the Government of the Tycoon is properly impressed with the desire of affording complete satisfaction, calculated to assure Her Majesty's Government of his sincere wish to maintain friendly relations, the Daimio, Tamba no Kami, will be openly degraded, and receive a far more severe punishment than the arrest to which he voluntarily subjected himself.

Reserving this point for further adjustment, I have to state to your Excellencies that I am charged and instructed to demand of the Japanese Government compensation for the families of the unfortunate men who have lost their lives in the service of their country, the amount fixed being 10,000*l.* sterling, to be paid in gold. This sum, it is observed by Her Majesty's Minister, should be levied on the estate of the Daimio in charge of the Legation at the time of the assault.

Having now accomplished my duty in making the above communication with which I have been charged consequent upon the outrage committed upon Her Majesty's Legation of the 26th of June, I shall await with anxiety a reasonable period the definite and explicit acceptance by the Tycoon's Government, conveyed to me through your Excellencies, of the specific demand I am now instructed to make.

The gravity of the outrage committed does not permit me to contemplate its aggravation by the interposition, on the part of the Japanese Government, of difficulties or prolonged discussions.

It remains for me, as a bounden duty, in conclusion to call your Excellencies' attention to the lamentable and regrettable fact, that when my present instructions were addressed to me, the intelligence conveyed by me to Her Majesty's Government of the barbarous murder and outrage more recently perpetrated upon other British subjects in open day on the high road, without the shadow of an extenuating circumstance, had barely left this Legation. Seventy days have now, however, passed since that occurrence, and your Excellencies have not placed it in my power to lay before Her Majesty's Government a recital of any definite acts or measures adopted by the Tycoon's Government with a view of voluntarily tendering satisfaction for this fresh outrage, which has been superadded to the rest, or calculated to guide or modify the decision of Her Majesty's Government in respect to the degree of reparation it will require in due course of time at the hands of the Japanese Government.

I have still an important statement to address to your Excellencies, and to which I solicit your marked attention. It is, that no situation of affairs affecting the personal safety of the members of Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular Officers in Japan or of British subjects in general residing in this country, will deter Her Majesty's Government from maintaining the position assigned to Her Majesty's subjects by solemn Treaty rights, whether as to locality of residence or in the conduct of their affairs. The personal security of British subjects in Japan, if unassured or unafforded by the Japanese Government, will have alone for its result the necessity of augmenting the means of independent protection and defence, which Her Majesty's Government will not fail to afford in proportion as the absence of such security is maintained or becomes more evident.

The Japanese Ministers then said:—We have understood all you have said to us, but we trust when the report of all that we have done in this matter reaches the British Government that it will modify the inferences it has drawn.

Chargé d'Affaires.—I do not think that probable, as you have afforded me no additional information which I could communicate to my Government calculated to produce that effect.

Japanese Ministers.—But we are especially pained to observe that the British Government entertains the impression that the Japanese Government was implicated in the attack on the Legation. Do you really think so yourself?

Chargé d'Affaires.—You have afforded me no substantial grounds for forming an opinion upon that subject. The Governor whom you sent to me on the morning of the attack avoided warning me of my danger, and I repeat that had he acted differently the murdered men would have been saved.

Japanese Ministers.—But you have had opportunities since of judging of our conduct. Will you not write to your Government to disculpate us from the imputations conveyed in the inferences derived from the first reports? Probably it will then modify its decisions.

Chargé d'Affaires.—What has transpired since my first report of the facts which occurred has consisted (after great delays) in your communication to me respecting the investigation you had made, and the punishment you had awarded, which I communicated to my Government, and which I wrote you at the time was most unsatisfactory. I warned you at the time that I could only write during the six months (nearly) which have passed such further particulars and explanations of this outrage that you thought proper to communicate to me. You have communicated nothing. I have now received instructions to make an explicit demand.

Japanese Ministers.—Our observations do not refer to the amount of the compensation demanded; but we desire to remove the imputation of complicity.

Chargé d'Affaires.—That is natural and just, and I will state all which is in my power calculated to aid you in so doing; but the observations which Her Majesty's Secretary of State has made upon the facts as they occurred, and as I reported, do not necessarily bear directly upon the compensation demanded, which marks the sense of Her Majesty's Government of the great outrage which was committed upon Her Majesty's Legation, and the main facts of which remain always the same. The punishments you awarded to the surviving delinquents have since been meagre and insufficient.

Japanese Ministers.—But we acted in that matter according to the old institutions of our country.

Chargé d'Affaires.—We have also old institutions which require reparation for the outrages committed within the sacred limits of a British Legation, and for the murder of British subjects.

Japanese Ministers.—We shall attentively consider and in a short while reply to your communication.

The Conference here closed.

No. 9.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received February 25, 1863.)

Yokohama, December 24, 1862.

WITH reference to my preceding despatch, dated the 12th instant, I have the honour to lay before your Lordship a copy of a despatch which has been addressed to me by the Japanese Ministers in reply to the verbal and written communication made by me to them in Yeddo on the 2nd instant, in accordance with your Lordship's directions.

Your Lordship will observe that after entering into an elaborate disculpation of the inferences deduced from the facts attending the murder of the two British guards on the occasion referred to, the Ministers conclude by declining to assent to the amount of compensation I was instructed by your Lordship to demand from the Japanese Government, but repeat their readiness to pay the sum of 3,000 dollars, which they had previously offered.

Inclosure in No. 9.

The Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

(Translation.)

WE have attentively perused your letter dated December 4th, which you gave us at the last interview.

The occurrence in which Ito Goonbay, retainer to the Daimio Matsdaira Tamba no Kami (one of the Daimios to whom the protection of your temporary residence ('tozengee') was entrusted), in the night of the 29th day of our last 5th month, attacked your residence and murdered and wounded two British sentries, caused us in truth very great sorrow, as we at the time repeatedly told you, and which even for us was a very sad event.

All that is communicated in the letter which by order of your Government you wrote to us, has already been maturely discussed at our last interview; therefore we put the two together, and now perfectly understand the whole.

With regard to the attack of last year the number of assailants was great, and on examining their deed it became evident that although they entered by stealth, yet when once they had effected an entrance their sole object then was to murder the foreigners, not fearing the encounter with the guards and sacrificing their own lives; but as regards the attack on your residence this year, it was not undertaken by one who was not connected with foreigners, but it was done by one of the retainers of Matsdaira Tamba no Kami, without calling in the aid of any other person, and in the darkness of the night he disguised himself as one of the soldiers on duty of the said Daimio, who go round about the residence for inspection, which caused the other officers on guard to take no notice of him, so that he succeeded in getting into the garden, made a sudden attack, murdered and killed the two said sentries, and suddenly took to flight; so that the other officers there for the protection unintentionally lost him out of sight. Therefore it cannot be said that they were not faithful. Had they all been participators in the foul deed, how is it the Representative and the other members (of the Legation) escaped the danger?

It is said that the spirit of the guard of this year, as compared with that of the guard of last year, is just the reverse, and that the latter, who were faithful, were removed, and the former, who were faithless, were intentionally chosen. But this is not the case. When our Government imposes a service (duty) on any Daimio, the time is specified (how long it is to last), and when that term has expired he is released, and another (Daimio) is appointed to take his place.

This is an old-established custom; thus, what took place between last year and the present was founded upon this old custom, and there is no reason whatever for supposing that those entrusted with the protection of (subjects belonging to) a nation living in peace and amity with us should have been chosen from persons wanting in fidelity.

But it is not to be wondered at that your Government should have had suspicions on that subject, as it did not exactly know the true state of affairs; but we trust that you have sent home what we communicated to you from time to time respecting the punishment, &c., of the said guards, so that your Government will be better informed now, and that suspicion will no longer exist. It is, however, desirable that you should again explain the whole affair more fully to your Government.

That the Governor for Foreign Affairs called on you the day previous to the said sad occurrence and congratulated you, was merely owing to his recollecting what had taken place the year before, and he trusted all was safe now, as nothing had happened (on the anniversary of the day); but could he then have had the least suspicion of what was going to happen, he would have informed you of it at the time, and he would have given strict orders to the officers placed there for protection to be on the look-out, as it is part of his duty to endeavour to quench such an outbreak. Thus there is no reason to suppose that he kept secret what was going to take place the next day, could he have known it beforehand; and his felicitation was not made in order to put you off your guard, which is quite evident of itself, without our trying to explain it; and besides, if you accepted his felicitations, how could this have made you feel more at your ease? And although you might try to put some one off his guard by a felicitation, yet it would be a means by which you would scarcely deceive a child. Thus, as you saw and heard all the circumstances of the case, it must be quite evident to you there would be no reason to adopt such a plan towards a foreign Representative; but in this instance also the suspicion of your Government may have been raised, owing to its not having understood the matter.

Furthermore, with regard to the use of weapons by the Japanese, the advantage of fire-arms is well known, but it is not so generally acknowledged as that of the sword. As it is only since a few years we have received instruction in European tactics, we have only just begun to make fire-arms and build ships; but the number of those is still great who, preferring Japanese tactics to foreign, have diligently applied themselves to the use of the sword, and have attained the climax of dexterity. This sword is always carried at the side, and adepts in the use of it wound you the moment it is drawn. As the number of wounds the two murdered men received were many, it gave rise to a suspicion that this was not done by one man only; but a single person who in our country has murdered any one with a sword, has always inflicted a number of wounds on his murdered enemy. However, considering the circumstances of the case, on the same night we instituted inquiries to endeavour to find out whether the murderer had any participators, for it was alleged that, seeing the number of wounds (inflicted), the number of murderers must have been many: but we are not of that opinion.

Your suspicion has fallen on Matsdaira Tamba no Kami, who was entrusted with the protection of your residence, because the foul deed was committed by one of his retainers. It is not so unnatural that you should think this, but it is not so: and it is quite evident that the foul deed was the doing of one person only, the undertaking of which was not only not known to Tamba no Kami, but not even to his other retainers, or inferior officers. The reason is, that a person who wishes to commit a crime disguises his iniquity by his words, and does not allow his wickedness to be detected in his outward behaviour. Thus, although he harbours many cruelties in his heart, yet outwardly he appears to be very obedient, and pretends to be of a kindly disposition; therefore it is very difficult to detect such a person. If there were a means of knowing all events beforehand, then from the very beginning no crime could ever have been committed; but as the contrary is the case, and it cannot be known whether a person casts off all sincerity, and is pre-meditating all sorts of cruelties, therefore the guard for protection has been considerably increased since both attacks, and has received strict orders to be watchful. You will have observed it yourself without our communicating it, that the guard for protection has been increased.

And with regard to the suspicion that our Government expected (knew of) the said two attacks, and is in hopes that (by these means) foreign trade will be stopped by degrees, and the old custom will be restored of no intercourse with foreigners, how could our Government ever expect such a thing, or even wish it, after Treaties of perpetual peace and amity have been ratified by both Empires?

Although it appears to be thought that the punishment of Tamba no Kami, &c., is not sufficient (and you are perfectly right in supposing so from your want of the knowledge of the difference of the law of our land, and thus cannot be acquainted with the severity and leniency of Japanese punishment), yet the arrest ("sasihika-yay") for a Daimio is very pressing as a punishment; for during the arrest he is obliged to keep the gate of his residence closed, and, forbidding any one to enter or to leave, he is obliged to shut himself up in his room and abstain from all business. Moreover, he is not allowed to shave or bathe, or have intercourse with any one, be they his parents, children, or brothers; and all his servants, from the lowest upwards, are not allowed to leave his residence, on account of the arrest of their master.

This punishment is more humbling and more unbearable than for the lower class who are imprisoned for crime; and a burden like this is in itself already a punishment, which is not easily imposed on any one. The other persons have also received an impartial and, perhaps, proper punishment, in accordance with our old-established law; therefore we are of opinion no objection can be made on that score, as it is in accordance with the stipulations of the Treaty.

We have taken into mature consideration the demand made for indemnity for the relations of the two murdered sentries; but we do not understand why 10,000*l.* should be demanded. We are, however, of opinion that the demand and the stipulation that the indemnity should be paid in gold coin, and is to consist of so large a sum, should be in proportion to the high or low position the persons have held, or to the services they have rendered.

In our country there is likewise a law about indemnity, as a punishment for small crime, and other punishments are determined according to the extent of the crime; for instance, one criminal is prohibited residing any more in the province he has been in the habit of living in, and another is banished to a far distant place; and he who murders any one is condemned to death, and no indemnity is demanded from him; but it is considered expedient to give to the relatives of the murdered person something for their maintenance.

It has happened at the opened ports that Japanese have been murdered and wounded by foreigners; but we have never demanded any indemnity for them. In accordance with the law of the land, any one wounding, not only foreigners, but also natives, is condemned to death, if his adversary dies in consequence, as stated above. Matsdaira Tamba no Kami's criminal retainer ought likewise to have been punished according to this law, but he soon after committed suicide; we therefore sent his corpse to your residence to prove that our law could not punish him any more.

Therefore the law of our land does not allow us to grant the indemnity, and we therefore decline (to pay) it; but it is desirable you should understand it. We are, however, ready to pay the silver coin to the relatives of the two murdered sentries for their maintenance, as we communicated to you in writing some time ago.

This is our answer to your communication, and we request you to make known to your Government, not only all we have communicated in answer to your despatches, and what has been discussed at the interviews, but also the whole state of affairs in our Empire.

In regard to the last period of your despatch, "that British subjects must have the rights obtained by Treaty ensured to them," we perfectly agree with you, and our intention is to carry out all the stipulations of the Treaty. We are taking into consideration further measures of protection, and trust they will be effectual.

With respect and consideration.

Yokohama, January 10, 1863.

IN connection with the subject of the general measures adopted by the Japanese Government to avert the recurrence of outrage to foreigners upon the tokaido or high road in this vicinity, and which I have referred to in my previous correspondence upon that subject, I have now the honour to inclose, for the information of your Lordship, a copy of a despatch I have received from the Japanese Ministers, informing me of their determination to carry into effect the project of opening a new road for Daimios' processions, upon the sole condition that foreigners would abstain from frequenting it, upon special occasions, when warned of the passage of any notables and their retinues.

With the usual scrupulous and laborious attention bestowed by the Japanese authorities upon these matters, they have had a survey made of the two roads, and have sent me copy.

Seeing that we now find it expedient to abstain from frequenting even the present one high road upon the occasions referred to, I have thought it very expedient to accept the proposal of the Japanese Ministers in regard to the new road, which, although within the limits, has never been resorted to by foreign residents, while the prospect now presented of the old road being freed from all danger of collisions,—more especially as no less than twenty-four guard-houses, with five men in each, have been established upon it within the limits during the last two months,—is certainly very satisfactory.

The abandonment of about forty miles in this vicinity of the sole great high road of Japan leading from Yeddo to Nagasaki, and traversed for centuries by the dignitaries of the land, is undoubtedly a strong and gratifying proof of the sincerity of the Government, when they declare their anxious desire to avert the chance of collision with foreigners. I should have added that while the old road is lined on either side with resting-houses for travellers, these will have to be built on the road now proposed to be substituted for Daimios and other native travellers.

Inclosure in No. 10.

The Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

(Translation.)

WE send you the following communication.

In regard to the opening of a new high road instead of part of the tokaido, as we lately communicated to you in writing, and also through the Governors for Foreign Affairs, persons appointed by us have surveyed the ground (in different directions) and have reported that there is no other road fit for the said high road than the one hitherto called Atsookey Oquan, which, as indicated in the inclosed plan, runs from the west of the River Banyugawa, situated to the west of this road, between the towns of Hilatsooka and Toosisawa, and turning off to the north leads in a direct line to Yeddo. It is at a distance of about five or six ri from Kanagawa.

Although this road is not beyond the limits of the ten ri, as stipulated by Treaty, yet as the present arrangement is effected for the purpose of avoiding any accident, &c., to foreigners, it is desirable your countrymen should not go in that direction whenever the Governor of Kanagawa, from anxiety of Daimios' processions and others travelling on this road, sends a communication to your Consul for this purpose. It is not with an intention to restrict foreigners in the excursions they are in the habit of making, and besides, as this road is at a great distance from the foreign settlement, it will not put them to any inconvenience.

We intend to adopt this road for a permanency, but we first send this plan to you for your consideration.

With respect and esteem.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received April 12.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, January 15, 1863.

BY my despatch of the 24th ultimo I had the honour to report to your Lordship the result of my communications with the Japanese Ministers respecting the murder of two of the British guard at Her Majesty's Legation on the 26th of June last.

I have since addressed a despatch to the Ministers for Foreign Affairs, urging such arguments as have occurred to me with a view to calling their serious attention to the consequences which may arise from their having declined to comply with the demand I was instructed by your Lordship to make, as pecuniary compensation for the families of the murdered men.

In transmitting to your Lordship, here inclosed, a copy of that despatch, to which I have as yet received no reply (the reason assigned by the Ministers being that it is in course of translation into Japanese), I am at present enabled only to add that I do not anticipate an entire consent on the part of this Government to pay the whole amount demanded.

It is probable they will modify their own offer of compensation, from 3,000 dollars to a larger sum, perhaps extending to double that amount; thus gaining time, and trusting to the course of events for an easier solution of the difficulty.

With reference to that part of your Lordship's instructions in which you have remarked that the compensation demanded should be levied upon the estate of Tamba no Kami, the Daimio charged with the protection of the Legation on the occasion of the attack, I should state that I am informed from reliable sources that he is in very impoverished circumstances, and his estates mortgaged to merchants of Osaka.

I have, &c.

Inclosure in No. 11.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs:

Yokohama, December 27, 1862.

I HAVE received, and carefully perused the despatch which your Excellencies have addressed to me, dated the 20th December, in reply to the communications, written and verbal, which I had the honour to make to you on the 4th of this month, under instructions from my Government, upon the subject of the outrage committed at Her Majesty's Legation on the 26th of June last.

By the mail which left yesterday, I have communicated a translation of your despatch to Her Majesty's Government, and it is my duty to declare to your Excellencies that the decision adopted by the Japanese Government in declining to comply with the specific demand I was directed to make by Her Majesty's Minister for Foreign Affairs, after serious consideration of the circumstances attending the outrage committed, has occasioned in me great anxieties for the consequences which may reasonably be expected to result. It is difficult for me to understand under what regrettable influences the Japanese Government has adopted the serious course of rejecting the only easy solution which could be proposed by the Government of a great and friendly nation, as reparation for an unusual outrage committed in a foreign country within the precincts of its Legation, and at the door of its Representative, resulting in the treacherous murder of two of the guards engaged in its protection. Those guards were exposing their lives, not owing to any unnecessary formality or display, but because of the inability of the Japanese Government, by their own confession on the previous occasion of a similar outrage, to afford any satisfactory guarantee for the safety of the members of Her Majesty's Legation.

Such measures of self-protection are altogether unnecessary in other countries. A constant and unfailing vigilance against midnight attack and murder can alone be satisfactorily ensured as yet in Japan by the personal precautions adopted by foreigners. I am entitled to make this statement, for your Excellencies have never as yet informed me that the measures adopted by the Japanese Government have rendered such attempts as rare and difficult as in other countries. But you have said on the previous occasion that you could not guarantee the non-recurrence of such events, and within the period of the same year it did recur.

Two of the guards thus necessarily employed at the doors of Her Majesty's Legation were murdered; the assassin, a retainer of the Daimio charged with its protection, and coming through the ranks of the Japanese guards.

So flagrant an outrage cannot be viewed by the Japanese Government as an ordinary occurrence for which the ordinary punishments may be applied; a marked and signal reparation must always be accorded under similar circumstances by countries where such flagrant outrages are committed. Individuals may be attacked and murdered in any country, the assassins being instigated by personal objects of gain or revenge; but there are no records of which I am aware of a similar crime to that which has here been committed, nor can it be dealt with in an ordinary manner, for its object was the murder of the members of a Legation residing at the Court of the Tycoon.

In Oriental countries such an attempt is especially regarded as a crime of the highest magnitude.

The Japanese Government may be free from blame respecting the choice of the Daimio and his retainers charged with the protection of the Legation.

The Governor, who observed a culpable mystery and silence respecting the danger which threatened the Legation, whether past or impending, may have acted in accordance with the reserve and want of confidence towards foreigners and towards each other observed by most officials in this country.

The assassin may have been alone, who inflicted barbarously needless wounds after the murder of his victims.

But it is not endeavoured to be explained how he escaped, wounded and disordered from a sanguinary struggle, through the numerous guards that surrounded the scene. It is not explained why no succour whatever was rendered by those numerous guards during the whole time in which the assassin was engaged in slaying two men, accompanied with outcry, pistol-shots, and confusion.

If these are acts which are dealt lightly with by Japanese law, they cannot be so lightly or patiently supported by nations which scrupulously watch over and protect their subjects in whatever spot in the world duty or business may entitle them to live by Treaty rights.

The Japanese Government is bound to appease and atone for acts shocking to foreign nations committed by assassins who had no personal affront to avenge, or no gain to derive by the murder of their innocent victims; the strong probability yet reasonably remaining, despite of all examinations, that the assassin only accomplished in part a more criminal mission assigned to him by others.

If I am not greatly in error, even the laws of Japan award the punishment of death to participators or abettors of murder, when the principal in such murder is lost, escapes, or disappears. The murderer in this case was lost to justice by suicide, no proof is given that he had no participators or abettors beyond the denial of his companions and friends.

Signal examples are resorted to by all nations, and doubtless by Japan, to deter others from the deliberate plotting and committal of foul deeds, notwithstanding the death of the individual chosen to perpetrate the act.

A money indemnity to the families of the murdered subjects of a great nation, under such circumstances, the Japanese Government must be well aware is the mildest reparation by which peace can be preserved, while atonement is made and an example afforded.

There is no graduated scale or tariff of the amount which the British Minister will affix upon each occasion of the murder of a British subject, according to his station and rank, as imagined by the Japanese Ministers. But the repetition, as in this case, of great outrages necessarily influences the extent of the example required, and the amount demanded for the victims or their families.

This mode of appeasing a great scandal and offence twice repeated in one year at the very doors of the Representative of Great Britain, has been decided upon after mature consideration of the principal facts by the British Minister for Foreign Affairs, anxious and desirous of preserving peace and amity between Great Britain and Japan. Such demands the Japanese Government must be well aware are not lightly made by a British Minister, nor can they be set aside by arguments as to the incorrectness of inferences deduced from details and isolated facts.

Two British guards on duty at the British Legation, and placed there solely owing to a previous murderous attack, have been assassinated by the retainers of a Daimio of Japan appointed for its protection. This is a fact standing by itself, and for which a signal example alone can atone.

The Japanese Ministers have deliberately declined to accede to the reparation which has deliberately been demanded.

This decision of the Tycoon's Government is now on its way to England with a full and literal translation of the despatch, in which your Excellencies conveyed to me that decision. It will reach the hands of the British Minister at a moment when the circumstances attending a fresh barbarous outrage upon unarmed and unoffending British subjects, committed by the adherents of another Daimio, on the 14th of September, will be before him, still unpunished by the Japanese Government, and no reparation suggested for the sufferers.

The rejection by the Japanese Government of the solution proposed for the outrage of the 26th June, carries with it manifestly in its first consequences the result that the two unrequited outrages will become combined, and form together a most serious subject for the consideration of the British Government.

The distance is great, and communications and replies occupy many months, and cannot, therefore, be resorted to as in other countries during the settlement of serious difficulties; decisions under such circumstances necessarily take the place of statements, counter-statements, and arguments respecting less important details; the main facts must be dealt with without inordinate delay.

Under all these considerations it now devolves upon me, as a serious duty and as a sincere friend to Japan, of which I am willing to hope your Excellencies have had reason to be convinced, earnestly to call upon and solicit your Excellencies to reconsider the decision which you have communicated to me in reply to the demand I was instructed to convey to you.

During the period of a month from this date my further reports upon the subject to Her Majesty's Government, if they are of a satisfactory nature, may influence final and ulterior determinations, which the receipt of your present resolutions must necessarily produce, when joined to the facts attending the more recent outrage. Whatever you may determine at a later period can only cross on its passage the instructions I shall receive, or which will be conveyed by Her Britannic Majesty's Minister in Japan, expected to return to Yeddo in the spring of the new year now at hand.

A serious and urgent communication made in the most friendly spirit.

No. 12.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received March 27.)

Yokohama, January 26, 1863.

MR. PRUYN, the Resident Minister of the United States, was so obliging as to address a circular despatch to M. de Bellecourt, my French colleague, and to myself, informing us of the murder of a Japanese guard at the door of the grounds called Goteng-yama, upon which the new British Legation at Yeddo is erected, and upon which also the Legation-buildings of the other Treaty Powers will be situated.

The Governor of this district, on the same date of Mr. Pruyn's letter, also officially announced to me this incident, and referred to more than one of the guards as having been killed. My own information in the meanwhile was more detailed as to the causes of this attack and murder, and represented the deed as having been connected with my supposed residence at the new Legation with the other members of Her Majesty's Mission.

Under these circumstances, I deemed it most desirable to address the Japanese Ministers at once, and directly ask them what were the real facts connected with this event; and I have the the honour to inclose a copy of my despatch upon that subject.

The Japanese Ministers, in reply, deputed a Governor for Foreign Affairs to call upon me yesterday, charged, on their part, verbally to reply to my inquiries.

The Governor, after causing all his attendants to retire, said that the Gorogio had directed him to inform me that on the morning of the 16th instant, at 10 o'clock A.M., ten armed persons, who are as yet unknown, presented themselves at the door of the Legation building, [entrance into] which, as they were strangers, was refused by the yaonin on guard, his companion being absent. That they then went away to a tea-house close at hand, and asked the owner whether the Legation was inhabited; and being answered that it was not, one of them drew his sword partly out and threatened the tea-house keeper, telling him that what he saw (the sword) awaited him for deceiving them, and for stating what was not true. Four of their number then left, returned to the door of the Legation-ground and again demanded admittance; and upon refusal, as before, attacked and cut to pieces the yaonin. They then escaped, and, as the Governor informed me, had not yet been traced.

Thus, in the circumstances attending the murder of one of their own countrymen, happening to be the guard of the future, but yet unoccupied, British Legation, we have a premonitory warning of the incidents which may reasonably be expected to occur sooner or later after Her Majesty's Legation is established within its walls.

Inclosure in No. 12.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.

Yokohama, January 19, 1863.

INFORMATION has been received here, and since communicated to the several Legations, of the murder of one or more of the Japanese guard stationed at the gate of Gotenyama.

Although the British Legation residence at Yeddo is not yet completed or occupied, the circumstance of the murder having taken place within its gates renders it a matter of natural interest that I should wish to be informed of some of the particulars, the Governor having furnished none.

I have, therefore, to request your Excellencies to acquaint me of the number of persons killed, the number and character of the persons who attacked them, and the supposed reason for the act,—whether owing to personal quarrel, or whether it is connected with any subject of interest to the Representatives of foreign States.

Yokohama, February 3, 1863.

IT devolves upon me to inform, with great regret, your Lordship that the Legation residence no longer exists, having been burnt to the ground by political incendiaries on the night of the 1st instant.

The Japanese Ministers restrict themselves to communicating to me the bare fact of this event, coupled only with the statement that the fire was not accidental, but the act of incendiaries.

That a building erected at the expense of the Japanese Government, of the best materials which the country can produce, constructed with infinite care and painful attention to details, and costing according to the estimates 8,000*l.*, should be destroyed by order and connivance of that same Government is difficult to be surmised. Yet your Lordship will not fail to notice the facts that on the 28th ultimo the Japanese Ministers appealed to me to abandon the intention of inhabiting the residence at Goteng-yama, and solicited me to select another site for the reasons urged by them. That they begged me to furnish them with a definite answer before the 15th of their month (2nd instant), as a very high functionary, the Tycoon's Guardian and Envoy, would on that date proceed to hold an interview with the Mikado. That I declared to them my answer at once, which consisted in my inability to entertain any question of the abandonment of the Legation residence already erected. And that as a sequel to these preceding incidents, on the 1st instant the building was destroyed by fire.

The inference would seem to be that the Japanese Government has connived at the accomplishment of this act as the only effectual solution of the pressure brought to bear by the Mikado and his party upon the Tycoon. It is equally possible that the retainers and partizans of the hostile Daimios, intent on carrying out the desires of their Chiefs, may have accomplished a portion of the work allotted to them by the destruction of the residence at Goteng-yama, despite all the efforts of the Government to restrain them.

In either case, the threatening incidents which have of late so rapidly succeeded each other, and the general aspect of affairs at Yeddo, accompanied by the continued exodus of Daimios from the Tycoon's to the Mikado's Court, the degradation and confiscation of the property of so many others denounced by the Mikado's Envoy as friendly to foreigners; and, finally, the serious incident of the deliberate destruction of the Legation residence;—all these combined events, prognosticating the advent of a serious crisis, have pressed upon me the necessity of addressing a despatch, a copy of which I have the honour to inclose, to Admiral Kuper, representing the urgent expediency for the appearance of a strong naval force in these waters, and to which I have every reason to believe the Admiral will respond by arriving here towards the close of this month.

I shall, of course, continue to proceed to Yeddo whenever passing events may require my presence there, and on such occasions I should occupy the temple hitherto the residence of the Legation.

(Extract.)

Yokohama, February 2, 1863.

EVERY act of the Government betrays an anxious dread that their political enemies, whose movements of late have been most active and suspicious, should break out suddenly into open violence, notwithstanding all the efforts of the Tycoon's authorities to restrain them.

Last week a band of ten armed men presented themselves at the gates of the new British Legation at Yeddo, which, though as yet unoccupied, was all but completed, and demanded admittance to inspect the building, which having been refused by the Japanese guard, one of them was cut to pieces on the spot, his assailants escaping; and last night I was waited upon by a Governor of Foreign Affairs from Yeddo, who brought me the serious intelligence, forming a sequel to the foregoing event, that the British Legation residence no longer existed, having been burned to the ground by armed incendiaries, who employed trains of powder and other combustibles, which exploded simultaneously in all directions.

Irrespective of these unmistakeable indications of an impending crisis in our relations with Japan, and of serious efforts to displace and interrupt our peaceful intercourse with this country, the whole empire is passing through the ordeal of internal political convulsion, importing civil strife and disorder, a catastrophe as yet evidently averted and arrested through the unceasing efforts of the Tycoon and his Government to conciliate the Mikado by promises to accomplish by degrees his impracticable desires, especially in respect to foreigners.

One of the reproaches cast upon the Tycoon by the Mikado was that he had granted the commanding site of Goten-yama at Yeddo, where a sacred temple had for ages stood, frequented by his ancestors, and consecrated as the place of festivals for the people, to be the future place of residence for foreign Ministers. The Tycoon, it is now said by the present Government, was uninformed by his Ministers of the Mikado's displeasure in connection with this subject. He has now been made aware of it in personal interviews with the Mikado's envoys. A high functionary is despatched to the Mikado to offer conciliatory explanations upon this and other matters, and twenty-four hours before his departure, by a striking coincidence, the future British Legation residence, built with infinite care and at great cost, is burnt to the ground, thus affording to the Mikado the most effectual atonement.

The mandate next on the list, addressed to the Tycoon by the Mikado, is that he should expel foreigners from Kanagawa and Yokohama. This is an undertaking doubtless presenting great and insuperable difficulties to the Tycoon's Government, by this time well aware of the power and determination of Western States to maintain the rights conceded to them by Treaties; but judging from the course of events, no satisfactory assurance is afforded but that the Tycoon and his Government may be suddenly overcome and displaced, and a desperate effort made by their less well-informed or reckless successors to accomplish the Mikado's imputed desire to expel or extirpate foreigners, especially from this settlement, so unpalatably contiguous to the capital.

Under all the circumstances attending this condition of affairs, whether viewed in the light of the troubles and embarrassments besetting the Tycoon's Government, which it is our interest should be supported if found to be sincere in its friendly professions, or whether regarded only in respect to the actual risk and danger to which the lives and property of British subjects are exposed, in either case it appears to me that a considerable demonstration in this quarter of our naval forces would at this moment be most opportune, and conduce to results highly advantageous to our interests. The presence of such a force, whose mission would be to insure the maintenance of Treaty rights, and enable British subjects engaged in a prosperous and increasing trade to remain undisturbed, at least within their settlements, I have every reason to believe would at the same time afford a powerful moral support to the Tycoon's Government in its well-disposed but wavering and timid policy in regard to foreign intercourse.

From these considerations I am induced to trust that you may be enabled and deem it expedient to afford me the early support of your own presence at Yokohama and Yeddo with such a force as would constitute an unmistakeable demonstration, and calculated to realize the results I confidently anticipate. I need hardly add that I look forward with great satisfaction to the opportunity which will thus be afforded to me of conferring and advising with you personally as to the course of action which accumulating events in this country may necessitate.

My Lord,

Yokohama, February 4, 1863.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 15th ultimo, in which I had the honour to transmit to your Lordship a copy of a letter I had addressed to the Japanese Ministers, consequent upon their declining to accede to the payment of the compensation I had been instructed to demand for the families of the two British guards murdered at the Legation at Yeddo, I have now the honour to lay before your Lordship a copy of the reply which I have received to the strong remonstrances I had urged upon them.

Your Lordship will observe that the Ministers conclude with proposals to diminish the amount demanded, and appear inclined to negotiate respecting the sum which would be accepted in compensation. I shall again address the Ministers, pointing out to them explicitly that I am not authorized to negotiate with them respecting the amount which your Lordship has directed me to demand; and I am not without hopes that, influenced by passing events, the Japanese Government will feel it expedient, after some further correspondence, obstructions, and delays, to accede to the payment of the compensation required of it.

WE have received your despatch dated December 27.

As we mentioned to you in our answer to your despatch relative to the indemnity for the murder of the two British sentries at Tozengee, it is an irrevocable law in our country that any one killing another shall be punished with pain of death, and not by paying an indemnity. And although it may be thought that a law relative to indemnity exists in our country, yet the sum you demand is so uncommonly large that Tamba no Kami is unable to pay it. Moreover, it is impossible to subject him to this new punishment after he has been properly punished. But if you do not think what our Government has proposed to give for the maintenance of the relatives of the said two sentries is sufficient, we request you to let us know what you consider would do, after you have taken our present communication into mature consideration.

With respect and esteem.

(Extract.)

Yokohama, February 10, 1863.

THE incidents which have of late succeeded each other, and of which I have had the honour to inform your Lordship, are of a nature to convey the impression that serious designs are entertained by the Tycoon's Government to bring about a rupture in their relations with the Treaty Powers.

This is not so. The political situation of affairs is nevertheless sufficiently critical.

The collisions and obstructions with which we have had to contend originate from inevitable causes.

It is difficult, indeed, to comprehend how surprise can be entertained at their occurrence. It does not thence follow that they should be unobserved or unrequited. A show of material force, coupled with conciliatory action on our part, would seem however, as a general rule, the best calculated to consolidate our footing in this country.

There is no reason why our relations with Japan, accompanied by all its regrettable episodes, should not be viewed by the same light as our early intercourse with other Asiatic States. That the outrages to which foreigners have been subjected at intervals in this country should have been attended with bloodshed and murder may unquestionably be traced to an exceptional fact, viz., that a large proportion of the population of this country is an armed population; keen-edged weapons form a portion of their attire. In Europe a stone would be thrown where here a sword is drawn. There is no Asiatic country with which we are in relation where the inhabitants of the dominant class are so armed, in which sanguinary scenes do not at intervals prevail. The Turk, the Albanian, and the Arab will draw his pistol or his yataghan on the first defenceless person by whom he conceives himself aggrieved. Equally with the Japanese, the incentive is derived from the same ignoble source, viz., the consciousness that his victim is unarmed. In Turkey a heavy blow was struck at the very root of such a condition of society by the destruction of the janissaries; in Japan the two-sworded adherents of Daimios have as yet met with no check; they walk abroad with these insignia of destruction, in mock heroic defiance of all whom they meet; and should their arms have been newly acquired these men have been known to try their edge upon the bodies of strolling beggars in the streets at night. During the long and dark seclusion of Japan the tyranny of the strong has been suffered to prevail, but the history of other Eastern people assures us that with the light admitted by intercourse with civilized nations it cannot endure.

Viewed as a whole, our relations with this country present no serious cause for discouragement. Little more than ten years ago the ruling impression of Western nations respecting relations with Japan was, that the crew of a foreign vessel wrecked upon these coasts was doomed to immediate destruction. In point of fact, however, it has resulted, that at the close of three years of intercourse our trade has increased threefold, and our exports from this country exceed during the past year 1,000,000*l.* sterling.

Indifference to the cold reserve and obstructive acts of the authorities in this country would meanwhile doubtless encourage their continuance, but it is impossible by arguments or reasoning alone to influence the councils of this Government. The great difficulty with which our diplomatic agency has had to contend has been the lack of means to induce moral pressure; no lever has presented itself whereby to arouse conviction of a reciprocity of interests tending to render our goodwill and amity a political necessity to the Tycoon's Government, or to induce on their part even a conciliatory policy. In a word, it has not hitherto been apparent to the ruling powers in this country what they had to gain by their relations with foreigners; while, on the contrary, the jealousy of powerful feudal Chiefs, the chances of civil commotion (the elements of which already existed), are alarmingly increased by our presence and by our requirements.

The Tycoon and his Government, as an undeniable fact, have fallen into national discredit by assenting to the much-dreaded renewal of intercourse with Western people, though indeed this assent was obtained under irresistible pressure; but they have conjured as yet the explosion of displeasure on the part of the reactionary Daimios by half simulated repugnance to the foreigners, whom they had (according to their belief) in an evil hour admitted.

Hence, while they deplored the embarrassing perpetration of outrages upon foreigners, each renewed occurrence of which brought matters to a crisis injurious to their own stability, on the other hand their presumed national sympathies could not consistently admit of the display of any energetic zeal in the arrest and punishment of the offenders.

By this temporizing policy the Government of the Tycoon, with ever-recurring dismissals and appointments of the members which compose it, has maintained itself; while our own diplomatic and commercial relations have been conducted amidst the divided fears of this Government, between the contingency of the overthrow of the Tycoon's dynasty, and the consequent downfall of its supporters on the one hand, should favour or encouragement be extended to foreigners, and the equally formidable risk and danger to be encountered by an undisguised course of hostile policy in their relations with the more powerful Western States.

But a crisis has now been reached in this condition of affairs. The dynastic rule of the reigning Tycoon, or temporal Sovereign, is threatened by the attitude assumed by the Mikado, or spiritual Emperor, supported by some of the most powerful and wealthy Daimios of the Empire. The Tycoon and his Government have of late shown unmistakable signs of yielding to this pressure by carrying into effect the stringent measures of confiscations, arrests, and degradations enjoined by the Mikado, and directed against a long list of Daimios and high functionaries known to be partizans of the Tycoon's Government, and more or less favourably disposed to abide by the obligations imposed by Treaties with foreign States, and one of the last acts of this enforced policy may be said to be sequelized in the destruction of the British Legation-residence at Yeddo.

Here, then, has arisen a new phase in our political situation in this country, but here also is presented a lever for our political action which no other condition of affairs could have afforded, and the absence of which, as I have ventured to express the belief in the early part of this despatch, obstructed the acquirement of any diplomatic influence.

I have ventured to submit these remarks for your Lordship's consideration; but as in the meanwhile the imputed hostile designs of the Mikado's party, and its pressure on the Tycoon's Government, may be further progressed towards serious action than I am tempted to hope, I have deemed it no longer prudent to abstain from requesting Admiral Kuper to afford me the support of his presence in the event of any sudden emergency, as I had the honour to report to your Lordship by the last mail.

I cannot, however, but entertain strong hopes and expectations that this country will pass unharmed through its present ordeal of political effervescence, for the Japanese are a shrewd and intelligent people, not subject to persevere in projects of impossible attainment. On our part it is as difficult as it would be wrong to lose sight of the main and sole object of our establishment in Japan, viz., the fresh field it has afforded for a prosperous trade, best secured to us by patience and forbearance.

The surplus imports from Great Britain to China find here an outlet, and the resources of this country in silk and tea promise to supply to all Europe and America those necessities when the worn-out Empire of China ceases to yield them.

Our future satisfactory commercial relations with Japan are doubtless inevitably assured to us. In the meanwhile Her Majesty's diplomatic servants have been, and may have the honour to be, still for some time in the position of pioneers and martyrs to the attainment of peaceful and settled relations with this country in commerce and in diplomacy, not unlike the early fathers in their special calling.

My Lord,

Yokohama, February 16, 1863.

BY my despatch of the 4th instant I had the honour to inclose a copy of a letter I had received from the Japanese Ministers in answer to my second application demanding, under instructions from your Lordship, the specified pecuniary compensation for the families of the two men, of Her Majesty's ship "Renard," murdered during the attack on the Legation on the 26th of June last. I have now the honour to transmit to your Lordship a copy of the further note I have addressed to the Ministers in reply to their last communication.

I have, &c.
(Signed) EDWD. ST. JOHN NEALE

Inclosure in No. 17.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.

Yokohama, February 7, 1863.

I HAVE received your Excellencies' despatch in reply to that which I addressed to you on the 27th December, 1862, entering into explanatory details and reasons conveyed in the most friendly spirit, and urging upon the Japanese Government the great expediency of acceding to the demand I was instructed to make as compensation for the murder of two British subjects on duty as guards at the door of Her Majesty's Legation at Yeddo on the night of the 26th of June last.

Your Excellencies in your reply appear to be under the impression that I am empowered to negotiate, modify, arrange, and settle with the Japanese Government the sum which shall finally be awarded in settlement of such compensation. And with this view your Excellencies ask me what sum I conceive will be sufficient, notwithstanding my assurances that I am not authorized to consent to the payment of one cobang less than the sum of 10,000*l.*, or as near as need be at present 10,000 old cobangs of Japan.

It is true that each fresh proposal at present made to me by your Excellencies, in behalf of the Japanese Government, may result in delay in the settlement of this matter; but it is my duty, and consistent with the desire entertained by the British Government, to preserve, if possible, amicable relations with Japan, that I should earnestly warn the Government of His Majesty the Tycoon that no good results can be expected from the delay thus occasioned.

The Japanese Government having decided upon declining to pay the amount demanded, that decision is by this date nearly arrived in England.

By successive mails I have been obliged to inform Her Majesty's Government that I have received no further communication from your Excellencies, and I shall now have to report that your Excellencies propose to enter into correspondence and arrangements with me as to the sum which would be accepted in compensation.

The proposed solution of this difficulty has been rejected, and such rejection will be under consideration of Her Majesty's Secretary of State at a very critical period in the situation of this country and its relations with foreign States; and I sincerely deplore that in the present state of affairs, when the best accord is desirable in the interests of the maintenance of good will and amity towards Japan on the part of the British Government, a great grievance and scandal, to which the Legation of Her Britannic Majesty was exposed by the murder of two of its guards, should remain unadjusted, because the Japanese Government are at variance as to the amount which should be paid to the families of the victims.

There is no measure by which outrages can be classed and estimated; the same outrage again repeated may result in open hostilities, or serious indemnities which cannot be weighed in the scale with the money compensation now demanded, and unwisely refused by the Japanese Government.

The Daimio Tamba no Kami, had he been as rich as many of the Daimios of this Empire, would undoubtedly have been the right person to have borne the burden of the penalty required.

This has been pointed out by the British Minister for Foreign Affairs, but it rests with the Japanese Government to decide from what source the amount shall be levied, if that Daimio, as stated, is unable to defray it.

Confiscations, fines, and penalties are not new in the institutions of this country.

Political exigencies have of late struck with tenfold pressure many notable Daimios and other high officials of this Empire, some of whom have been accused of mismanaging the affairs of foreigners. The revenues of which they have been deprived would, with hardly perceptible diminution to the Imperial Treasury, supply the means of atoning for a great outrage.

In conclusion, I have earnestly to request that your Excellencies will bring the whole circumstances and correspondence connected with the subject to which this despatch relates, to the knowledge of His Majesty the Tycoon, to whose Imperial consideration it must eventually be submitted, if unadjusted by the wisdom of His Majesty's Minister.

No. 18.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received May 16.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, February 23, 1863.

IN connection with the opinions and statements which prevail amongst rival parties in this country bearing upon the subject of intercourse with foreigners, I have the honour to transmit a translation of a very remarkable letter addressed by one of the most influential Daimios of the Mikado's party to the Tycoon's Government.

This document was obtained by me some time ago in Japanese manuscript, but laid aside with others which reach me from time to time, as no proof existed of their authenticity. Passing events, however, as they succeed each other, stamp the inclosed paper with truth as to its imputed authorship, and render it an index to the opinions which prevail among the disaffected Daimios.

It is worthy of note that the letter is dated in May of last year; in June a circular was addressed to the police-agents at Yeddo, a copy having recently fallen into my hands, and a translation of which I have the honour to annex. It is there stated that some adherents of the same Prince Matsudaira Daizen no Daiboo had entered Yeddo, and that suspicion was attached to their movements. On the 26th of the same month the Legation was attacked. The inference would seem to be that that Daimio was implicated in the outrage; proof of which, however, will probably never be elicited.

Inclosure 1 in No. 18.

Letter written by Matsudaira Daizen no Daiboo, Prince of Soowo and Nagato, to the Gorogio, or Great Council of State.

May 1862.

ALLOW me, notwithstanding your urgent political discussions (with the Mikado's Envoys) to give you my opinion respecting the troubles which foreigners have given us of late years, in asking all kinds of concessions, in addition to the unexpected troubles which exist in our own country. This combination of difficulties within and without, occurring at the same time, and bringing us to a point when our prosperity or misfortune is to be decided, keeps my heart day and night in anxiety, and induces me to give you, in confidence, my own feelings upon these subjects.

I have long thought that union and concord between the Sjogoon (Tycoon) and Mikado, and obedience to the Mikado's orders, are highly necessary in keeping up our intercourse with foreign nations, as I have already said very often.

But every one knows that since the Council of Officers which took place in the 7th Ansei, the Sjogoon (Tycoon) and Mikado are disunited, which has occasioned a conflict of parties and brought with it discord and troubles.

I think the reason of this is that although the signing of the Treaties was forced upon us by urgent circumstances and pressing events, there are some who maintain that the reopening of relations with foreigners has occasioned a degradation of the people who were so brave and constant ten years ago, to the state of quiescence and cowardice to which they are now reduced by their fear of war and of the foreign Powers. These persons who are of this opinion are, therefore, in opposition to the acts of the Sjogoon (Tycoon), and say that they will themselves undertake to set aside the Treaties and prepare the country for war; declaring that the Mikado still maintains the old laws of our country, which directs the expulsion of foreigners.

Other persons accept, on the contrary, the re-opening of the country and praise the foreigners, and thus destroy all confidence in ourselves. They say that the foreigners have large forces, and that they have great knowledge of arts and sciences.

These conflicting opinions trouble the minds of the people. Unity is force and strength, and discord is weakness; therefore it would be imprudent to go to war against powerful and brave enemies with discord in our minds.

The closing or re-opening of Japan is a matter of the greatest moment, but this is only a branch and not the main stem of our policy, and I think there will be no difficulty about this branch, as the strategical law says,—“He who can well defend himself can well attack; and he who well attacks can well defend himself:” therefore I think that this law is applicable here. That which cannot be shut again should not have been opened, and that which cannot be opened should not have been shut.

The closing of Japan will never be a real closing, and the opening will never be a real opening, as long as our country is not restored to its independence, and as long as it is menaced and despised by foreign countries. Therefore the opening or closing of Japan is dependent upon the restoration of our own powers; if that is effected, then war or peace can be declared.

The condition upon which this power can be restored to us is the enlightening of the people and their union.

I think the only way to bring about national union is by the solid union between the Sjogoon (Tycoon) and Mikado acting together as in one body; should there be war it can be brought to an end very easily.

A time is now come very different from barbarous ages, and arising out of the long peace which has prevailed. Every little child knows the respect it owes to its parents and masters.

It will therefore rejoice everybody in this advanced age to see the Tycoon hold the Mikado in great respect, and the whole nation would honour the Tycoon, and all troubles would cease, and then only we can be restored to our independence and power.

After our independence has been restored it is urgent and pressing that we reform our military institutions, the naval sciences, as well as all branches of industry; we should find out the great advancements and developments of arts and sciences in other countries. The whole nation must devote life and soul to the benefit of our State, and we must learn and study the interior arrangements of foreign lands, in order that the commerce of our country may flourish in this important age. I think all this ought to have been done long since, but nothing, however, of the kind is to be found in the edicts which have appeared so often during the last seven years.

Inventions and improvements press on with rapidity, and the time is now come to make all these changes and improvements; but if our attachment to old customs causes us to postpone these measures of such great importance, if these changes are later suddenly forced by circumstances upon the inhabitants, a very bad impression will be produced creating disorder and confusion. These are the reasons why they should be effected now, calmly and gradually. I think that the Mikado will not be disinclined to this, and therefore I wish that the Sjogoon (Tycoon) should act under the orders of the Mikado, and not conclude matters by his own authority. He ought to let these designs be known to all the Daimios in the name of the Mikado; then there will be a general quiet restored, then the dormant soul of the whole nation will awake, and will be united in power and in independence, and finally then it will display our force and strength to the other five portions of the universe, without anxiety and fear for our own country.

I do not write these my sentiments to aid you in your negotiations, as they may be of little or no use to you, and like a drop of water falling in the ocean, but to show my gratitude for the favours of the Sjogoon (Tycoon) which my ancestors have enjoyed during centuries.

Inclosure 2 in No. 18.

Notice addressed to the Agents of the Police by the Head Spy of the North-Western District of Yeddo, dated 18th of the 5th month (June 15, 1862).

(Translation.)

THE news has reached me that the officers of Matzdaira Daizen no Daibu of Nagato and Suwo,* numbering thirty-six during the day, and twenty during the night, have come overland from Sounpoo† (in Suruga) to Yeddo on the 11th of the 5th month (8th June), wearing riding trousers and coats of tight foreign fashion, and that they had taken post horses without previous notice and with violence; others of the same Daimio dressed in common travellers' clothes came by sea from Shimidsu.

We have received especial orders to guard against disturbances the approaches to Yeddo, the streets, and the temples in which the foreigners reside, and the neighbouring coasts.

* Two Provinces at the entrance of the Inland Sea.

† Near the mountain Fusi-yama.

We beg you, therefore, to come directly and give notice to the police-stations at the houses of Kato Tazaemon and Ohojagi Silosabro, in case there be any deviation from the habitual state of things at Yeddo.

No. 19.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received May 16.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, February 24, 1863.

AS bearing upon the subject of my recent reports to your Lordship on the situation of political affairs in this country, I have the honour to transmit a communication addressed to me by my colleague of the United States.

I have for some time been in possession of a translation of the letter from the Mikado to the Tycoon of which Mr. Pruyn obligingly sends me a copy, but its authenticity has hitherto remained uncertain. Its acceptance by the Japanese Government under slight reserve as a document actually addressed by the Mikado to the Tycoon impresses it with importance, and throws a light on passing events.

I have, &c.

(Signed) EDWD. ST. JOHN NEALE.

Inclosure 1 in No. 19.

Mr. Pruyn to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir,

Yeddo, February 10, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inclose to you a copy of the translation of an important letter of the Mikado to the Tycoon. The Japanese copy was sent by me to the Gorogio through one of the Governors, with a message requesting to know whether it was a genuine document. It was returned through another Governor, with an answer that it was substantially correct.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBT. PRUYN.

Inclosure 2 in No. 19.

Letter addressed by the Mikado to the Tycoon.

(Translation.)

WHAT ought to be done to sweep away the foreign barbarians?

From ancient times till now, the heart of the Mikado has not at all changed. The "Willow Palace" (i. e., Tycoon) has also respected the Imperial will in changing and improving its ways, and executing new methods of government. Hence the Mikado's feelings have not been painfully disturbed.

But at the present time there is no unanimous decision respecting the banishment of foreign barbarians, and therefore the minds of the people cannot be united.

This afflicts the heart of the Mikado (Sublime Porte), and he commands the Willow Palace (Tycoon) persistently to determine that the foreign barbarians shall be swept out of the country. He must, without delay, notify all the Daimios, and it is his duty to devise the best stratagem, and speedily, as Commander-in-chief, to carry out the deliberations of the whole, and execute their just and patriotic decision.

Let him fix upon a period for cutting off the ugly barbarians (from this country). The Emperor commands that a report (of results) be made to His Imperial Majesty.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received May 16.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, February 28, 1863.

THE accompanying list of the principal Daimios of this Empire, with the class and families to which they belong, and the revenues they possess, has appeared in a local paper. As I have every reason to believe it to be correct, and as no such complete list has, to my knowledge, hitherto ever been written or published, I have the honour to transmit some copies for the purposes of reference in your Lordship's Department.

I have, &c.

(Signed) EDWD. ST. JOHN NEALE.

No. 21.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received May 16.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, March 2, 1863.

I HAVE had the honour to receive your Lordship's despatch of the 9th of December last,* in reference to the murder and outrage committed upon British subjects in this vicinity on the 14th of September last.

It is difficult for me to express to your Lordship the extreme support and encouragement I have derived in the discharge of my anxious and responsible duties by learning that the course I felt it to be my duty to pursue on that occasion has met with the entire approval of Her Majesty's Government.

Since the date of my first report respecting that regrettable event I have had the honour to inform your Lordship from time to time of the communications, written and personal, which have taken place between the Japanese Ministers and myself respecting it.

* See "Correspondence respecting Affairs in Japan," presented to Parliament in 1863, No. 50.

The result has led to the conviction that the Tycoon's Government is powerless to afford reparation, inasmuch as that reparation necessitates the arrest of the malefactors within the domain of the Prince of Satsuma, an attempt to effect which would, in all probability, hasten to a climax the gathering elements of civil war in this country. The urgent necessity for active measures on the part of the Tycoon's Government to constrain the Prince to deliver up the criminals is not as yet sufficiently apparent to the Mikado and nobles hostile to foreign intercourse. Extraneous pressure, coming from a powerful foreign nation, would not only afford a ready reason to this Government for the adoption of such stringent measures as are possibly within its reach; but there are strong reasons to entertain the belief that the Tycoon and his Government would view with passive satisfaction Satsuma, Nagato, and Tosa (the three powerful Daimios who are hostile alike to the Tycoon's Dynasty and to foreign intercourse), made aware of the contingency of Her Majesty's Government exacting redress, if needs be, at the ports of their own seaboard possessions.

I have now the honour to await the instructions which I am informed by your Lordship would be transmitted to me by the mail of the 26th December. In the meanwhile it has fortunately occurred that the generally agitated state of affairs in this country, and the danger of violence threatened at intervals to the foreign community of Yohohama, rendered it imperative upon me, more than three weeks ago, to request Admiral Kuper to afford me the support of his presence with as strong a force as he can for a while detach from China.

Thus I have reason to hope that the Admiral will arrive here simultaneously with the mail which will convey to me your Lordship's instructions.

I have, &c.

No. 22.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received May 16.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, March 14, 1863.

YOUR Lordship's despatches of the 24th and 27th of December, conveying to me my instructions with reference to the murder and outrage committed upon British subjects on the 14th of September last, have engaged my most anxious attention with a view of being prepared for all contingencies in the event of the Japanese Government refusing or evading the reparation I am directed to demand.

While awaiting, however, the arrival of Admiral Kuper, who, I have every reason to expect, will be here by the 20th instant, I have deemed it very expedient to abstain from awakening the immediate adoption of precautionary measures on the part of the Japanese Government by making to them any communication as to the nature of my instructions, which, were I to do so, might defeat perhaps, or render more difficult, the course of action which the Admiral may consider best adapted to attain the end in view.

I have in the meanwhile to report to your Lordship that since the date of my last despatches I have received no communications from the Japanese Government referring either to the subject of the compensation I have been instructed to demand for the families of the guards murdered on the occasion of the attack on Her Majesty's Legation on the 26th of June last, nor in respect to any reparation they are prepared to offer for the murder and outrage of the 14th of September, notwithstanding the urgency of my demands in connection with those events.

While actively adopting such measures of defence as at present are within their reach, consisting chiefly in the enrolment of volunteers, the erection of new forts at various points in the inland sea and on the coast, and a new distribution of Daimios charged with these preparations for resistance, the Japanese Government would seem passively and resignedly to await the course of events, intending to shape their course according to the urgency of the danger which may threaten them.

By the ensuing mail I trust to be in a position to announce to your Lordship the measures which I have found it expedient and essential to adopt in carrying out, to the best of my judgment, the instructions with which I have the honour to be charged.

I have the satisfaction in the meanwhile to report to your Lordship that since the destruction of the Legation residence at Yeddo, no fresh event has occurred to excite the apprehensions of the foreign communities, although the internal effervescence between the partisans of the Tycoon and Mikado unceasingly prevails.

I have, &c.

Sir,

Foreign Office, May 21, 1863.

HER Majesty's Government approve your proceedings, as reported in your despatch of the 16th of February, with reference to the compensation you have been instructed to demand from the Japanese Government on account of the murder of two men of Her Majesty's ship "Renard."

My Lord,

Yokohama, March 29, 1863.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 3rd February last, transmitting for your Lordship's information a copy of a despatch I had addressed to Rear-Admiral Kuper, I have now the honour to inclose a copy of a despatch I have received in reply, but which did not reach me until after the Admiral's own arrival.

Rear-Admiral Kuper to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir,

"Euryalus," at Hong Kong, February 21, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 2nd instant, detailing the various incidents which have recently transpired in Japan tending to threaten the safety of foreign residents at Yokohama and other places.

I had previously determined upon proceeding to Japan, but have been detained in order to complete the refit of Her Majesty's ships lately arrived from England.

It is, however, my intention to leave this port on the 25th instant for Yokohama direct, accompanied by the "Rattler" and "Racehorse," leaving instructions for other vessels to follow me when ready.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS L. KUPER.

No. 25.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received May 27.)

Yokohama, March 29, 1863.

CONSEQUENT upon the full instructions I have received from your Lordship on the subject of the redress and reparation to be demanded from the Japanese Government, I conceived it to be advisable to communicate with Rear-Admiral Kuper, and to solicit his arrival as soon as conveniently practicable. A copy of my letter I have the honour herewith to inclose.

The Admiral having in the meanwhile received corresponding instructions from the Admiralty, had left Hong Kong, and I had the satisfaction to hail his arrival here on the 22nd instant. In company with the flag-ship were Her Majesty's ships "Rattler" and "Racehorse." Her Majesty's ship "Centaur" and gun-boat "Kestrel" were already in port. Two days subsequently Her Majesty's ship "Argus" joined the flag, to be followed, as the Admiral informs me, by the "Pearl," "Encounter," "Coquette," "Ringdove," "Cormorant," and all other available vessels on the China station.

It will be impossible for me to convey to your Lordship by this occasion any reliable information as to the tone or attitude which the Japanese Government is likely to adopt upon the receipt of the specific and peremptory demands I have been instructed to make. In presence of the squadron, already assembled here, the Japanese Ministers have preserved the most perfect silence, and have not even requested to be informed of the cause of its arrival. That this should be so has been to me the subject of much congratulation, as I am desirous of avoiding all communication with them in respect to the measures in contemplation, until I have concerted with the Admiral the course to be adopted under every probable contingency.

But in the course of two or three days after the departure of this mail, I purpose to make my first move in the execution of your Lordship's instructions, by sending in the demand for reparation, prefaced by a detailed statement and declaration of the improper and unsatisfactory course which the Japanese Ministers have adopted under the circumstances of the unprovoked outrages which have been committed. I shall also deem it my duty to incorporate with the present demands those which I had already preferred in connection with the attack on Her Majesty's Legation, and which remain unrequited.

Simultaneously with the presentation of these demands to the Tycoon's Ministers, I purpose to address a letter to the Prince of Satsuma in accordance with your Lordship's instructions, which I will request the Admiral to cause to be delivered by a ship of war. And I here venture to express to your Lordship my conviction and opinion that the hardest blows we may be forced to strike should be directed against this Daimio, so thwarting to the Tycoon's Government in its relations with foreigners, and so directly connected with the perpetrators of the outrage for which redress is sought. The scene of hostilities would thus also be removed to a distance from the Tycoon's Court and capital, while the news which would percolate throughout the Empire that Satsuma had been humbled in his independent career, would afford, I have reason to believe, actual satisfaction to the Yeddo Government.

In my preliminary communications, however, with the Japanese Government, I shall be impressed with the most conciliatory spirit so long as a reasonable probability exists of obtaining the reparation demanded in both cases without recourse to coercion; and I shall especially explain and impress upon the Japanese Ministers the essential difference between measures of reprisal should they be forced upon us for the purpose of awakening in them a knowledge of the serious necessity of affording redress, and a declaration of war, as declared between nations, founded upon great political differences.

The blockade of the Japanese ports, in the ordinary meaning of the term, unless as restricted only to the Japanese flag, I trust may not prove necessary, as in truth at the open ports the foreign residents would be the only sufferers, and I believe I may venture to say that the Admiral is inclined to this opinion.

I cannot but cherish and maintain the expectation that the Japanese Government will yield before the evident display of force presented to them, and the irrevocable determination of Her Majesty's Government to obtain the required reparation; and I shall not fail to point out to them that the penalty now imposed upon Japan and measured in thousands, with considerate regard for their political embarrassments, will inevitably expand into millions, should they under evil advice cause Japan to drift into open hostilities with Great Britain, a Power with which they are so utterly unable to cope.

Impressed with the fact that the difference which we have at issue with the Japanese Government is restricted to a demand for reparation arising out of the occurrence of two isolated outrages which we have no proof were perpetrated with the knowledge or acquiescence of the Tycoon's Government; impressed, moreover, with the humble conviction that, apart from these lamentable occurrences and the first attack on the Legation, no hostile or defiant conduct has been exhibited towards us by the Japanese Government during the course of our relations with this country,—although, indeed, want of confidence and distrust has ever been perceptible,—I shall devote my best endeavours to avert a serious interruption of our commercial relations, which may fairly be said to be prosperous; keeping at the same time steadily in view the paramount duty with which I am charged, of carrying into effect, in letter and in spirit, the instructions with which I am furnished by your Lordship.

Inclosure in No. 25.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Rear-Admiral Kuper.

Sir,

Yokohama, March 13, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you that by the last mail I was placed in possession of instructions addressed to me by Earl Russell, regarding the reparation to be demanded from the Japanese Government, as well as from the Prince of Satsuma, for the outrage committed upon British subjects on the 14th of September last.

While in the execution of those instructions, I am directed to apply to you, with a view to the adoption of measures of coercion, should the Japanese Government attempt to refuse or evade the demands I am to make.

Under these circumstances I deem it to be most essential that I should abstain from entering upon any communication with the Japanese Ministers on the question at issue, until I have the support of your presence, assuming the great probability of their rejecting the peremptory reparation I am directed to seek at their hands. I have, therefore, the honour to state that I most anxiously await your arrival, and more especially as, in anticipation of the contingency about to be realized, the Japanese Government are adopting such measures of defence as are within their reach.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.

Yokohama, March 30, 1863, 10.30 A.M.

I HAVE this day, the 30th of March, at 10 o'clock in the morning, received your Excellencies' letter, acquainting me that His Majesty the Tycoon would leave Yeddo for Miako on the 31st instant, that is to say, to-morrow.

I lose not one moment on my part to acquaint your Excellencies that in two or three days from this date it will be my duty to present to you a declaration of the demands which Her Britannic Majesty's Government has directed me to make to the Government of the Tycoon for outrages committed upon British subjects, and for which no redress has been obtained.

The peremptory and explicit nature of those demands will necessitate the most serious deliberation and prompt attention of the Tycoon's Government within a restricted period of time. I therefore address this despatch to your Excellencies to warn you that the serious communications which I am about so immediately to enter upon with you cannot be arrested in their course by the announcement I have at the last moment received from you of the departure of the Tycoon. The reply which will be expected to my communication above referred to, I shall await from the Yeddo Government during the period which will be assigned, and my instructions will be pursued and carried out, whatever intervening circumstances may arise.

It is equally my duty to request that the purport of my present communication be brought immediately to the knowledge of the Tycoon; and I am bound to add that whatever regrettable consequences may result from such communication being withheld, the responsibility attending them will rest with your Excellencies and the Government of Japan.

My Lord,

Yokohama, April 14, 1863.

BY my despatch of the 30th ultimo, addressed to your Lordship at the moment of closing the last mail, I had the honour to transmit a copy of a letter I had addressed to the Japanese Ministers in reply to their announcement to me of the immediate departure of the Tycoon to Miako. I have now the honour to inclose a copy of the reply which the Ministers promptly made.

The Tycoon, in fact, left Yeddo the day following, viz., the 31st ultimo, and I sent in my note on the 6th instant.

Inclosure in No. 27.

The Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

(Translation.)

ON receipt of your despatch of the 30th March, we have understood that you intend, within a certain time, notwithstanding the absence of His Majesty the Tycoon on a visit to Kioto, to make certain communications to us relative to the murders committed last year by our nation on the subjects of your nation, as you have received instructions from your Government to do so.

As the preparation for the journey of His Majesty the Tycoon to Kioto were completed this morning, the sedan-chair has been got in readiness, and the followers are out in array, there is no possibility our awaiting the day when you will send us the said communication.

And as regards your wish that we should send you a speedy answer to that letter, we cannot enter into any promise beforehand, as we cannot judge now of the degree of importance of those matters, and also the number of days is unknown.

We naturally always wish to settle matters as quickly as possible; but we fear we shall not be able to settle what you allude to within the time to be specified, as it will require time to send a report to His Majesty the Tycoon, wherever he may be; therefore we beg of you to bear this in mind.

To His Majesty the Tycoon we have accurately made known the contents of your despatch.

With respect and consideration.

No. 28.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received June 12.)

Yokohama, April 14, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to lay before your Lordship a copy of the note I have presented to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs setting forth the outrages of which Her Majesty's subjects have been the victims in this country, and the reparation I have been instructed to demand from this Government, in accordance with your Lordship's instructions.

I deemed it to be advisable to accompany the foregoing with a brief supplementary despatch, a copy of which I have likewise the honour to inclose, drawing the immediate attention of the Ministers to two points referred to in my note, viz., the number of days which I had fixed for the reply of the Japanese Government, and my suggestion that they should send an officer of rank to accompany the ships of war which would convey the separate demands I am also instructed to make to the Prince of Satsuma.

These points required a more speedy reply, as I purposed requesting Admiral Kuper to detach one or more of the ships of war assembled here with my note to Kagosima, the chief residence of the Prince, long before the period had expired for the reply of the Japanese Ministers to my note containing the demands on the Yeddo Government.

Both my notes above referred to I entrusted to Mr. Eusden, Japanese Secretary of this Legation, who proceeded to Yeddo on the 6th instant in Her Majesty's gun-boat "Havoc," and delivered them the same day into the hands of a Governor of Foreign Affairs deputed to receive them. Mr. Eusden, under my instructions, awaited two days in the "Havoc" at Yeddo an answer to my supplementary note, and returning on the 9th to Yokohama, brought to me the reply of which I have the honour to inclose herewith a translation.

After taking into anxious and serious consideration the observations which it contains respecting the difficulties and confusion which the Ministers imply would be created by sudden and separate negotiations with the Prince of Satsuma in the disturbed political condition of this country; learning also as I had in the interval that the Prince of Satsuma was not in Kagosima, or in any other part of his domains, but at Miako, whither he has gone to meet the Tycoon, and knowing, moreover, that the Admiral would prefer awaiting the arrival of the remaining ships of his squadron before detaching two, at least, of those already here to Kagosima, a distant point from this rendezvous, and the defences and navigation of which are as yet but most imperfectly known,—for all these reasons I did not feel ill-disposed to defer the expedition to the South until I could see my way more clearly, leaving, however, the Japanese Ministers in doubt as to my intentions. I decided in the meanwhile to profit by the incidental correspondence for the purpose of extracting from the Japanese Ministers some candid statement as to the period when the Tycoon and his Council would be aware of the contents of my note. I therefore addressed a letter, a copy of which I have the honour to inclose, to the Japanese Ministers in reply to their communication last referred to.

Under ordinary circumstances the Japanese Ministers would, in accordance with their habitual policy, doubtless have informed me that the translation of my note containing the demands would occupy a considerable time, and that they could not say when it might reach the Tycoon; but as I informed them that I should act in respect to the Prince of Satsuma according to the nature of their reply, they returned to me the answer, of which the inclosed is a translation, and by which your Lordship will observe that they state that the contents of my note would be brought to the knowledge of the Tycoon on the 14th or 15th instant.

Matters have thus arrived at this point. As the period for the expiration of the twenty days, viz., the 26th instant, approaches, I shall most anxiously consider the situation of affairs in concert and cordial co-operation with the Admiral.

In the meanwhile I have prepared my note addressed to the Prince, a copy of which I have the honour to inclose, although circumstances may render its forced delivery inexpedient; as, for example, the prompt offer of the Tycoon's Government to satisfy the redress and reparation made upon its quasi independent vassal.

I trust that these considerations may be deemed by your Lordship as sufficiently explanatory of the cautious course I deem it to be my duty under the circumstances to pursue, while steadily carrying out the measures I have been directed to adopt by Her Majesty's Government. I have the satisfaction, in the meanwhile, to believe that Admiral Kuper concurs with me in the views and opinions I have here had the honour to submit to your Lordship respecting the main difficulties with which we have to deal, but which, though highly embarrassing, are not insuperable.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.

THE Undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, has received the explicit instructions of his Government to demand reparation from the Japanese Government for the murder and outrages committed upon British subjects on the 14th September last on the tokaido, near Kanagawa, by the retainers of the Prince of Satsuma.

The circumstances attending this unprovoked and savage assault, as related by the survivors, and as set forth by the Undersigned in his several communications, written and verbal, with the Japanese Ministers, have never been controverted, attempted to be palliated, or denied.

The statements of indignation with which Her Majesty's Government have learnt the particulars of this outrage are expressed in the following words addressed to the Undersigned by Her Britannic Majesty's Minister for Foreign Affairs:—

"The barbarous murder of Mr. Richardson, and the murderous assault on two gentlemen and a lady who were in his company, have inspired Her Majesty's Government with great and just indignation. It was to be hoped that the instant trial and condign punishment of the murderers, together with an offer of further reparation, would have shown on the part of the Japanese Government a due sense of the magnitude of the offence which had been committed; but the letter of the Japanese Ministers of Foreign Affairs, dated the 16th of September, dispels this hope. In a tone of helplessness or evasion they say, that in the answer that Saboolo gave to their officer there is something very improper, and that they will have the whole state of the case more accurately inquired into, and inform you of the result."

"There could have been no doubt in the minds of the Ministers of Japan, that a barbarous murder had been committed—no doubt that other murders had at the same time been attempted, and the only course which a Government, sensible of its duties, and able to perform them, could have pursued, was to arrest, try, convict, and execute the murderers; but even the first step of this process does not seem to have been taken."

Such are the observations of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, which, after mature consideration of the anomalous political rule which prevails in Japan, has instructed the Undersigned to make to the Japanese Government through your Excellencies a peremptory demand for immediate and full redress for the violence and outrage committed.

The reparation which the Undersigned is thus instructed to demand for this fresh outrage will be specially set forth at the close of this note.

In the meanwhile, under instructions from his Government, the Undersigned made verbally, and in writing, a formal demand, so far back as the 4th of December, 1862, on the Japanese Ministers for redress and compensation for the previous outrage on Her Britannic Majesty's Legation on the 26th of June last, and which consisted in the payment of 10,000*l.* sterling for the benefit of the families of the two British guards murdered on that occasion at the very bedroom door of the Undersigned, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires.

Nine months have now elapsed since the perpetration of that deed, and four months since the demand for compensation was communicated by the Undersigned to the Japanese Ministers; but it has been evaded, and the outrage remains still unrequited. It is now, again, peremptorily demanded.

These two flagrant acts, injurious to the dignity of the British flag, and accompanied with all the sensation and horror which they occasioned among civilized nations, have nevertheless called forth no serious offer of redress in any degree proportionate to the enormity of the crimes committed, which, moreover, carried with them in a national point of view an insult and indignity which the Japanese Government well knows Her Majesty's Government would not suffer to remain without atonement.

Whatever may be the real situation of the Government of the Tycoon in respect to its power of punishing the acts of hostile Daimios and their retainers, the Tycoon's Ministers under the circumstances referred to have betrayed a culpable apathy, disregard, and indifference in their communications with the Undersigned regarding these outrages, for which the Tycoon's Government is now most justly called upon to afford ample reparation.

Procrastination and evasion attained by lengthened arguments as to unimportant details, attempted negotiations as to the amount to be awarded as compensation, and more recently an absolute silence on the part of the Japanese Government in respect to both these unrequited grievances, has been the course pursued by your Excellencies, regardless of the friendly warnings and remonstrances of the Undersigned. Acting moreover under evil counsels, the Japanese Government has adopted a passive, reserved, and unfriendly policy with the British Representative, not only in regard to these outrages, but in all matters of interest to British subjects.

This unjustifiable course of action has been crowned with the destruction, by political incendiaries, of the new British Legation-residence at Goteng-yama.

On the other hand, the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, viewing with indulgence the obstacles and obstructions opposed to the full development of British commercial enterprise by the Japanese Government, and judging them to emanate from the great political embarrassments of this country, was the first to concede to the wishes of His Majesty the Tycoon, conveyed through his Envoys, and to consent conditionally to the postponement in the opening of the Osaka and other ports, subsequently assented to by other European Treaty Powers, and to be assented to by the Government of the United States, only in consideration of counter-concessions which the Government of Great Britain has not sought to exact.

The Tycoon's Envoys have returned and rendered an account of their Mission to the Japanese Government in relation to the foregoing negotiations, and the Undersigned has just communicated to his Government the thanks lately expressed to him in writing by your Excellencies on behalf of the Tycoon and Government of Japan, for the attentions and cordial reception bestowed upon those Envoys by the Sovereign, Government, and people of Great Britain; a record standing in painful contrast with the unfriendly demeanour of the Japanese Ministers towards the Representatives and subjects of Her Majesty in this country.

The Undersigned, nevertheless, unhesitatingly proclaims, and challenges the Japanese Government to disprove the fact, that the subjects of no nation with which Japan is in relation have given less cause for ill-will on the part of the Japanese authorities than the authorities and subjects of the great British nation, which the Japanese Government, regardless of its duty to the interests of the Tycoon and his Dynasty, has so easily been persuaded to treat with distrust and disregard.

By a happy and rare good fortune, which could not reasonably have been expected, during the period that British subjects, of all classes, have resided in Japan, and thousands of British sailors have frequented its open ports, no noticeable instance of violence against Japanese has been complained of regarding one of them, and yet in numbers they greatly exceed all other foreign residents in Japan.

Such has been the anxious care of the British authorities to engage their countrymen to adopt the conduct of friendship and conciliation, and to accommodate themselves to the difficult situation of the Government of this country.

While the good sense and forbearance of the British residents have ensured these unprecedented and happy results, those same British subjects do not and cannot forget that few nations of the world are as powerful, and none more determined than their own, to demand and obtain reparation for unprovoked outrages committed on its subjects.

The Undersigned is bound to add that four years of intercourse between the subjects of Great Britain and Japan have proved that the Japanese people are friendly and well-disposed, having no cause arising out of habits or prejudices to entertain hostile or fanatical feelings towards foreigners. The authorities and official class of this nation, from the Ministers and Daimios to the yaonins, have alone evinced a culpable jealousy and distrust towards foreigners, which threaten to endanger the interests and tranquillity of the peaceful inhabitants of this country.

Notwithstanding the amicable and conciliatory dispositions of the British Government, and the corresponding conduct of the British Representatives in Japan in their relations with the Tycoon's Government, emanating from a sincere desire to avert, in the interests of peace and commerce, all cause of absolute dissension, the Japanese Government would on its part appear, under evil advice and influence, to have resolved to try the risk of withholding reparation for absolute outrages, and to brave the inevitable consequences of its unfriendly and distrustful demeanour towards the British Government and nation.

In explanation of this uncalled for and ill-advised conduct, the Undersigned is willing to hope that the Tycoon and Government of Japan are not as yet adequately aware of the power and determination of Great Britain to enforce reparation for unprovoked grievances, even in this distant and extreme region of the world.

The Undersigned, in now approaching the specific reparation which is required from the Japanese Government, and which will not be deviated from, modified, or discussed, desires solemnly and earnestly to explain and impress upon your Excellencies as responsible servants of the Tycoon, for the information of His Majesty and the Supreme Council of this Empire, that there is a serious difference between open hostilities, or in other words war, as declared between nations,—and the adoption of such enforced measures of coercion as are necessary to ensure acquiescence to moderate demands should they be indiscreetly refused or attempted to be evaded.

No loss or ruin to Japan is involved by the preliminary measures which are at present contemplated to awaken the Japanese Government to a due sense of its responsibilities, should it refuse or evade to comply with the reparation now peremptorily demanded; but a persistence in such refusal must necessarily lead to a very different and disastrous situation of affairs.

The reparation now demanded for the murders and murderous assaults committed upon British subjects has been affixed by Her Majesty's Government with a considerate regard for the difficult situation of the Japanese Government and its political embarrassment. But the penalty imposed, and the measure of compensation demanded for the sufferers and their families, now computed in thousands, will if the Japanese Government continue to be ill-advised, inevitably expand into millions, to indemnify the costs of armaments which must be employed by Great Britain, should all serious warnings fail to ensure the redress imperatively demanded for these unprovoked and flagrant outrages.

Notwithstanding the evil designs of interested counsellors, the intelligent Ministers of the Tycoon are already aware that the sincere desire of Great Britain is to preserve peaceful relations of friendship and commerce with Japan ; but it is of vital interest to Japan that the Tycoon's Government should be guided in its councils by the knowledge that Great Britain will not tolerate even a passive defiance of its power, or refusal of its just demands.

If, however, the Ministers of the Tycoon now in office, setting aside all considerations of ordinary prudence, and devoting themselves to devices calculated to gain time, cause Japan to drift into hostilities with a great Power with which it is utterly unable to cope, upon those Ministers will fall the heavy responsibility of all the calamities which may ensue.

Having thus discharged his duty and conscience by the earnest remarks which precede, the Undersigned has the honour to state to your Excellencies that he is instructed to make the following explicit and peremptory demands upon the Japanese Government :—

First. An ample and formal apology for the offence of permitting a murderous attack on British subjects passing on a road open by Treaty to them.

Secondly. The payment of 100,000*l.* as a penalty on Japan for this offence.

The mode, manner, and form of the apology will be regulated in Conferences between the Undersigned and Commissioners appointed by the Japanese Government, as well as the mode and manner of payment of the money reparation demanded.

Twenty days from this date is assigned to the Japanese Government for its reply, which must be of a categorical character, either consenting to or rejecting the demands here made.

At the expiration of the twenty days assigned for the reply of the Japanese Government, should that reply either be a rejection or evasion, or otherwise than a positive acceptance of the reparation demanded, the British Admiral now assembled here with a considerable force will, within twenty-four hours after the receipt of such refusal of these demands, or in the event of no reply whatever being received at the expiration of that period from the Japanese Government, proceed to enter upon such measures as may be necessary to secure the reparation demanded.

The conduct of these measures will thenceforth necessarily be in the hands of the Admiral commanding-in-chief Her Majesty's naval forces.

The Undersigned for his own part is bound to remind the Japanese Ministers that upon the occurrence of the outrage on the 14th of September, in his extreme desire to leave to the Japanese Government the legitimate mode of affording redress, he exercised a discretion, since entirely approved of by Her Majesty's Government ; but which obliged him at the same time to bear the burden of much obloquy on the part of the foreign residents of Yokohama.

The Undersigned may even now apprise the Japanese Government that, so strong is his desire, while carrying out the full tenour of his instructions, to avoid the infliction of loss or suffering upon the unoffending inhabitants of Japan, that he will so express his views to the Admiral ; but resistance or attempted evasion of the operations of coercion which may be rendered necessary will evidently render all such considerations impracticable.

It becomes, therefore, the imperative duty of the Undersigned earnestly to warn the Japanese Ministers that the slightest molestation, injury, or violence attempted to be offered by the Japanese authorities, the adherents of Daimios, or others, to the persons or property of British subjects at the ports open to foreigners during the continuance of the preliminary measures, should they be rendered necessary, will alter the whole nature of the operations, and result in the immediate exercise of serious hostilities, the extent, duration, and consequences of which cannot be foreseen ; but the whole weight and responsibilities of which will rest with the Japanese Government and its advisers. The present demands of the British Government are sufficiently defined and explicit, as are also the first consequences of a refusal to accede to them.

The Undersigned having acquitted himself of his duties in thus earnestly stating and explaining to the Tycoon's Government what is peremptorily required at its hands, and the penalties which must inevitably attend a non-compliance with the same, proceeds to acquaint your Excellencies with the further measures which, under instructions from Her Majesty's Government, will be adopted to enforce a far more important portion of the reparation rendered necessary, and required for the barbarous murder of the 14th of September from the Prince of Satsuma, by whose adherents that deed was perpetrated.

The Japanese Ministers have written, and have stated to the Undersigned on various occasions, and have openly avowed to the Ministers of other foreign States that the Japanese Government could not pursue or arrest malefactors within the domains of the Daimio Prince Satzuma. This is no reason why the adherents of this Prince, who were the actual murderers, should escape condign punishment; and the British Government, taking into mature consideration the difficulties which thus obstruct the Tycoon's Government, is itself constrained to demand satisfaction and redress from the Prince of Satzuma.

A naval force will, therefore, be directed to proceed to a port appertaining to the Prince of Satzuma, where will be demanded from him:—

1. The immediate trial and capital execution, in the presence of one or more of Her Majesty's naval officers, of the chief perpetrators of the murder of Mr. Richardson, and of the murderous assault upon the lady and gentlemen who accompanied him.

2. The payment of 25,000*l.* sterling, to be distributed to the relatives of the murdered man and to those who escaped the swords of the assassins on that occasion.

In the event of the refusal, delay, or evasion of the Prince of Satzuma to carry these demands into immediate effect, such measures of coercion will immediately be adopted against him as the Admiral may judge best calculated to obtain the reparation demanded.

The Undersigned, out of courtesy and high consideration for the Tycoon's Government, makes to it the above communication regarding the course to be adopted with the Prince of Satzuma; considering also that the Government of the Tycoon may deem it expedient in the interests of Japan to advise the Prince of Satzuma to comply at once with the demands of the British Government, necessitated by the barbarous outrage committed by his retainers, at the head of whom was his father, Shimadzoo Saboolo, upon an unoffending British subject. With this object, a high officer might be despatched by the Japanese Government charged with averting the consequences of any obstinate or ill-advised conduct on the part of the Prince of Satzuma, in ignorance of the power and determination of the British nation to enforce redress for unprovoked injuries.

Yokohama, April 6, 1863.

THE accompanying note will be delivered to your Excellencies by Mr. Eusden, Japanese Secretary of this Legation, through the Governor of Foreign Affairs whom you may appoint to receive it.

As you cannot become immediately acquainted with all its contents, it becomes urgently necessary that I should request your Excellencies' first attention to two points:—

1. That, desirous of acting with the most considerate regard for the delay attendant upon the communication you may desire to make to His Majesty the Tycoon at Kioto, and the delay likewise attendant upon translation, ample time being also allotted for mature reflection, I have announced to you that I will await for a period of twenty days from this date the reply of the Japanese Government to the communication which I now have the honour to make in the note referred to.

But I have earnestly to inform your Excellencies that the instructions which both the Admiral Commanding-in-chief and myself have received will render it impossible for us to prolong that period by a single day or hour.

2. I have suggested in my note the expediency and advantage of the Tycoon's Government charging a high officer to accompany the British ships-of-war which will convey the demands I am instructed to make from the Prince of Satzuma. To this point I have to request a speedy reply, as it is evident my communication to the Prince cannot be delayed during the above specified period of twenty days. Mr. Eusden will await at Yeddo in the vessel which conveys him during two days the decision of the Japanese Government respecting this latter point.

The ships destined to proceed to Kiusiu will then immediately leave.

With respect and consideration.

Inclosure 3 in No. 28.

The Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

(Translation.)

ON receipt of a despatch dated April 6th, with an annexed Memorandum, we have understood all you communicated in the same, and we will immediately forward a report (on the subject) to His Majesty the Tycoon.

As regards your man-of-war going to the domains of (the Prince of) Satsuma, and there entering into discussion, it is such that you, understanding the state of affairs in this Empire, it needs no further communication; therefore it is to be feared whether the said undertaking may not originate an unexpected calamity, increase confusion tenfold, and create discord amongst us; and it causes us great sorrow (to think) that this undertaking might injure (put aside) the law of our Empire, and cause many irregularities. Therefore it is desirable that the said mission of men-of-war to (the domains of the Prince of) Satsuma should be given up.

However, as the said point (in question) occupied the attention of our Government very much, we request you to leave the settlement of the same for some time in our hands. Consequently, it is impossible to accede to your request to send an officer of high rank, as mentioned in your despatch, on board the man-of-war.

We will, of course, send you the answer on this point from His Majesty the Tycoon; but in order to give you an immediate reply to your despatch, we communicate this.

With respect and consideration.

I HAVE received the reply which you have written to my supplementary note dated the 6th instant. Before I can take into consideration the observations you therein make respecting the naval expedition which, I have announced to you, will proceed to present the demands I am instructed to make upon the Prince of Satsuma, I have to request you to inform me with the least possible delay how soon my detailed note addressed to your Excellencies, and dated the 6th instant, will be laid before His Majesty the Tycoon and Council.

According to the delay or promptness with which His Majesty and Council will be made aware of that serious communication (which contains also the demands which I am instructed to make upon the Prince of Satsuma) my further immediate action will be guided.

An urgent communication.

(Translation.)

ON receipt of a despatch dated 11th April, we have understood that you wish to know when the contents of the document annexed to your despatch of the 6th April, lately sent to us, will be sent and laid before His Majesty the Tycoon and our colleagues. The said document was already despatched on the 22nd instant (April 9th) by a special courier, after having been translated; and we consequently presume that if there is no difficulty in crossing the rivers owing to the heavy rains, that despatch will reach its destination to-day, 25th (12th April) or to-morrow, 26th (13th April). In the meanwhile we beg you to bear in mind that we will send you an answer as soon as we receive their reply. But in order to send you an immediate answer, we send you this beforehand.

Inclosure 6 in No. 28.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Prince of Satsuma.

Your Highness,

Yokohama, April 9, 1863.

IT is well known to you that a barbarous murder of an unarmed and unoffending British subject and merchant was perpetrated on the 14th of the month of September last, the 21st day of the 8th month of the 2nd year of Bung-kew of Japanese reckoning, upon the tokaido near Kanagawa by persons attending the procession and surrounding the norimon of Shimadzoo Saboolo, who, I am informed, is the father of your Highness.

It is equally known to you that a murderous assault was made at the same time, by the same retinue, upon a lady and two other gentlemen, British subjects, by whom he was accompanied; the two gentlemen having been severely and seriously wounded, and the lady escaping by a miracle.

The names of the British subjects here referred to are as follows: Charles Lenox Richardson, murdered; Mrs. Borradaile; Mr. Woodthorp Clarke, severely wounded; Mr. William Marshall, severely wounded.

This event filled with great and just indignation the British Government and people, and excited the sympathy of, and produced a painful impression upon, all civilized countries.

Impressed with friendly and considerate feelings towards the Government of the Tycoon, with whom the Queen of Great Britain, my august Sovereign, is in relations by Treaty of Peace and Amity, I acted with proper consideration for the Tycoon's Government by leaving in its hands the legitimate means of speedily arresting and bringing to capital punishment the murderer from among Shimadzoo Saboolo's retinue.

This necessary forbearance on my part has been entirely approved by my Government, and appreciated and acknowledged by the Government of the Tycoon.

A different course proposed at the moment to be adopted in the excitement attending this barbarous outrage might have resulted in the capture, and perhaps death by summary retribution, of Shimadzoo Saboolo himself.

Six months have now elapsed since the perpetration of this unprovoked outrage, during which period my Government has been duly informed by me of the circumstances attending it: while the Tycoon's Ministers have held out to me from time to time assurances and hopes that the murderers would be given up by your Highness, according to the Tycoon's desire, and sent to Yeddo for trial and execution.

But I have had occasion to report to my Government that, removed in your distant domains from the direct influence of the Supreme Government, and shielded also by certain privileges and immunities which belong to Daimios of this Empire, you had utterly disregarded all orders or decrees of the Japanese Government calling upon you to afford justice by sending the real criminals to Yeddo. They have not been arrested or sent, and no redress has consequently been afforded by the Tycoon's Government, however desirous it may be of doing so.

In the meanwhile I have received the explicit instructions of my own Government how to act in this matter.

The Tycoon's Government may be impeded by the laws of the country, and more especially by political embarrassments, from enforcing its desires upon Daimios of the Empire in regard to criminal acts committed by their adherents. But when British subjects are the victims of those acts, Japan, as a nation, must, through its Government, pay a penalty and disavow the misdeeds of its subjects to whatever rank they may belong.

Under instructions from my Government I am now about peremptorily to demand from the Tycoon's Government an apology, and the payment of a considerable penalty, for permitting the murderous attack made by your retainers on British subjects passing on a road open to them by Treaty.

But the British Government has also decided that those circumstances constitute no reason why the real delinquents and actual murderers should be shielded by your Highness, or by any means escape the condign punishment which they merit, and which they would be subjected to for great crimes such as they have committed in all other parts of the world.

It has therefore been determined by my Government, and I am instructed to demand of your Highness as follows:—

First. The immediate trial and capital execution, in the presence of one or more of Her Majesty's naval officers, of the chief perpetrators of the murder of Mr. Richardson and of the murderous assault upon the lady and the gentlemen who accompanied him.

Secondly. The payment of 25,000*l.* sterling, to be distributed to the relations of the murdered man and to those who escaped with their lives the swords of the assassins on that occasion.

These demands are required by Her Majesty's Government to be acceded to by your Highness immediately upon their being made known to you. And upon your refusing, or neglecting or evading to do so, the Admiral commanding the British forces in these seas will adopt such coercive measures, increasing in their severity, as he may deem expedient to obtain the required satisfaction and redress.

The Commander of Her Majesty's ship of war charged with the delivery of this letter is made acquainted with the specific demands which I have the honour to communicate to you in this letter; and according as they are accepted or refused he has received instructions either to carry out and witness their execution within a period of days which will be named, or in the event of a refusal to commence at once coercive operations pending the arrival of additional forces.

Your Highness is therefore earnestly requested seriously to consider the course you will adopt upon receipt of this communication, the terms of which it is not in my power to modify, alter, or discuss.

Yokohama, April 8, 1863.

I DEEM it to be essential, and I have the honour herewith to inclose for your information a copy of a note I have addressed to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs,* comprising the demands I have been instructed to make as reparation for the murders and outrages of which British subjects have of late been the victims in this country.

Your presence here with a portion of the fleet under your command has enabled me to adopt this first step towards carrying out the instructions which I have received connected with this subject, and with which you are acquainted, and has enabled me also to affix the number of days which, after the advantage of consulting with you, and under all the circumstances, it is most desirable to await the reply of the Japanese Government.

At the expiration of that period I shall have the honour to communicate to you the nature of the reply I may have received, and the prospect which may exist, or otherwise, of any satisfactory settlement of the differences at issue.

I BEG to transmit herewith for your information a copy of a letter addressed to the Prince of Satsuma, the original of which, accompanied with a Dutch translation, I shall, upon the return of the "Havoc" from Yeddo, have the honour to request you to cause to be transmitted by a ship of war to the Prince at Kagosima, in the Island of Kiusiu.

No. 30.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received June 12.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, April 14, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inclose for your Lordship's information a copy of a highly interesting despatch I have received from Mr. Acting Consul Ensle. The translation of the letter incorporated in this despatch, and purporting to be addressed by certain Daimios of the Empire to the Tycoon, is, I think, important as disclosing the spirit and genius which pervades the Feudal Chieftains of this country, and the difficulties which must thus encircle the Tycoon's Government in its relations with foreigners.

Inclosure in No. 30.

Acting Consul Ensle to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir,

Hakodadi, March 9, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to forward to you the last fortnight's news from the south, and at the same time inclose translations of certain authentic documents which I have been fortunate enough to obtain.

You are already aware that the Yeddo Government has issued several proclamations to the Daimios, tending to explain the cause and object of the changes made in the various Government Departments and in the intercourse with the Daimios. The Daimios of the Opposition party were, however, not satisfied with these declarations, and have sent the following answer to Yeddo. This document is signed by the eleven Daimios of Satsuma (Matsdaira Satsuma no Kami), Daimio of Mito (Mito Tjcoonagoon Suma); Daimio of Saga (Matsdaira Figen no Kami); Daimio of Foosokawa (Jitshoo no Kami); Daimio of Awa (Matsdaira Awa no Kami); Daimio of Aidsu (Matsdaira Figo no Kami); Daimio of Mori (Daigenno dai ioo); Daimio of Kooroda; Daimio of Aki (Matsdaira aki no Kami); Daimio of Jiono matja iama (Date Totonomi no Kami); Daimio of Wakasa (Saka Wakasa no Kami), and has created considerable excitement among the friends of Government:—

“We have to express our thanks for several acts lately passed by you, and for your plans for the future.

“You felt the necessity of exonerating the Daimios from the troublesome and expensive journeyings to Yeddo; unfortunately the changes made by you are very imperfect, although you gave us excellent reasons which ought to have induced you to effect a complete change instead of adopting semi-measures.

“If we must economize in order to fortify and prepare Japan to defend itself and dictate its laws to foreigners, we imagine that more money would be saved and our object more speedily attained if we were completely exonerated from the journey to Yeddo. You informed a Daimio who made this observation to you that the relations between the lords of Japan and the Chief of the Government could not be completely closed. But these relations might be kept up by deputies sent to you by the Daimios: these deputies would communicate our ideas to you. As you say you feel the necessity of resisting the encroachments of foreigners we hope you will make radical changes.

“We have to thank you, secondly, for the just punishment inflicted upon the Daimios and other members of Government who have behaved so cowardly in their intercourse with foreigners. The punishment is very light when compared with the crime, but we hope it will be a salutary warning. We, however, regret to say that those who profited by these punishments are unworthy of the confidence you place in them.

“You also speak to us for the first time about some persons you have sent to the foreign nations. We do not approve of this mark of respect shown to people who might misinterpret your intentions and imagine that you endeavour to obtain the object in view by entreaty. It is an undeniable fact that the barbarians have gladly consented to your proposition never to open the ports which have not yet been opened, and to restrict their liberty and privileges in the ports already opened; they felt too delighted and too much honoured in receiving Japanese, who although not high-born, are respectable persons, and who must have given a lesson in politeness and diplomacy to these nations who are not yet formed (‘imada fhirakadz aroo kooni’). We ought not, however, to humble ourselves so much. You appear to be very satisfied and astonished at the result. This is because you unfortunately allow yourself to be fascinated by the high-sounding expressions used by the foreign ‘Yakoonins’ at Yokohama, called ‘Ministeroos,’ although it is now fully proved that they only wish to amuse themselves and frighten you. Besides this they are the first to tremble, and when you address them as a superior ought to speak to an inferior (lit., 'a smaller person') they become very humble. It is also an undeniable fact that the Ministeroos have been severely reprimanded by their respective Governments, and that the latter have endeavoured to palliate the bad conduct of their Representatives by the extremely friendly and attentive manner in which they received the persons sent by you. These apologies ought to have been made by the Ministers; two of them have already been punished by their Sovereigns and are now in disgrace. We are surprised that notwithstanding all these proofs you do not comprehend, as we do, that you represent the Great Nippon.

"You ask us whether we demand the total expulsion of foreigners. No; this is not exactly what we wish; at least we only want this expulsion on certain conditions. Allow us to explain our wishes. It has been justly affirmed that the Treaty of Commerce was granted to the Tehitsroa (English, French, Russians, and Americans) and the Dutch, as a great favour, and after repeated and humble demands, and therefore bore no resemblance to a legal contract. Instead of enjoying this privilege as a favour, they wish to assert that it is their legal right; the majesty and dignity of our country cannot endure such audacious conduct. They must be allowed, as in former times, to gain money without defrauding our nation. We do not understand the necessity of all these foreign 'Yakoonins;' the only person required is a chief of the factory or of the merchants, who would have to learn our rules and regulations of commerce; this would save you a great deal of trouble.

"You say that they do not see matters in the light we do; all we have to do, if this is the case, is to withdraw the privileges we have granted to them. It is a law that everybody who abuses a favour loses it ipso facto.

"Part of your proclamation is incomprehensible. You say, 'In fifteen years everything will be ready!' What do you mean by this? Do you wish to affirm that Japan will be great and powerful then, and able to resist the encroachments of the barbarians; or do you wish to say you will then be able to expel them? In the first place you own that Japan is weak; this is a disgrace for the country: in the second you appear to be willing to submit to insults during fifteen years. You therefore are wrong in both cases. Why not say with us, Japan is ready, and has ever been ready? What is the difference between to-day and 250 years ago? Had not the foreigners large vessels then as now? Had they not artillery and large armies? Did they not know the tactics of war? Had they not large kingdoms? The only difference is, that their vessels were then propelled by sails; now, however, they use steam. So much the better; they will leave quicker. Every Japanese sighs when he thinks of the glorious past, and looks at the present. Remember how the barbarians respected the majesty and power of Nippon. They respected our slightest wishes; Japan was delivered from their presence. One single nation left hostages in Japan as a proof of the good faith of the others. This was, however, a great mistake, as their presence in Japan excited the cupidity and envy of the other nations."

"It is very difficult for us to understand you when you say the world has changed, and that it is difficult for a nation to seclude itself. You therefore suppose that other nations are like Japan and China! You say the world has changed! Do you wish to repeat what an insane member of the Gorogio said, when he insinuated that we ought to adopt the customs, arts, and sciences of the foreigners! What science? To exchange a precious stone for a tile. As you say that the Tehitsroa have arts and sciences, it will be very easy to satisfy their wishes, as we only demand that the foreigners shall first be punished, and then subjected to the old regulations of Nagasaki. Many of you would regret to see the commercial intercourse draw to a close, as you pretend that some useful articles would be inaccessible, particularly guns, which you say must make Japan more powerful than all the other nations. We have, however, refuted these objections by saying—

"1. Japan has been deprived of these articles during many thousand years.

"2. That it would be very easy to send our vessels to China, in order to buy them from the miserly foreign merchants who bring them hither; they would be delighted to sell them to us, even after having been punished and sent out of our country.

"We regret to see that for some time past you have been making references to the customs and governance of foreign nations, and you frequently speak directly and indirectly about imitating foreign nations, and concentrating the Government offices. In making such insinuations you expose yourself to severe criticism, and excite distrust among your most faithful and devoted partisans. Is there any authority among foreigners worthy of bearing the name of power? Have they a Mikado who is the grandson of the Kamis? Are not all our high families of celestial origin? It is absurd to wish to unite every power in one person ; you might with equal justice say, let us have one farmer, one merchant, and one labourer ! You are better aware than we are that power proceeds from the Tenshi (Mikado), who has distributed it among the great families of Japan. This is a divine order established by the Kamis, and he who wishes to change it pretended to be wiser than the heavens.

"If you, however, absolutely wish to imitate foreigners, you must consult with our Sovereign, who is above everybody, and the supreme chief, as is also the case with foreign nations. As he has confided the government to your care, and has instructed you to decide matters of general interest, you must use your power prudently ; if the honour and safety of Japan is endangered, you alone cannot decide upon the measures which are to be adopted. If, for instance, a fire breaks out, it is useless for you to order the owners of houses which are in danger to protect houses which are safe, because the proprietor will endeavour to save the house which is liable to be destroyed by the flames.

"You appeared to understand this a few months ago ; you then decided to accept the Mikado's invitation ; now, however, you hesitate, and postpone your journey. It is difficult to understand why you hesitate. Is it because some Daimios have expressed their intention of going to Kioto ? It is, however, quite natural that all the Daimios should be convoked to Kioto, and several Daimios have probably manifested their intention of going to Kioto during your residence there, in order to suggest this plan to you.

"As regards the advice you give us about the purchase of foreign vessels, we fully believe this is dangerous for the country. A naval force is useless if it does not move about, if the vessels do not visit distant countries, and if the sailors do not exercise themselves. In order to have a navy, intercourse must be kept up with other nations, and we wish to abolish this intercourse.

"Unfortunately, a great error in the foundation of all your arguments upon this subject is, Japan is not yet ready. Several Daimios have recently requested you to 'place the foreign question in their hands' ('I kokoono guva ware waren makasoo beshee').

I have, &c.

(Signed) JAMES J. ENSLIE.

P.S.—You have probably been informed that the Yeddo Government has issued an order that all the public granaries must be filled with hulled rice, instead of rice in a raw state. Such an order is only issued in case of great emergency, or when war is expected.

Yokohama, April 14, 1863.

I AVAIL myself of the occasion to report to your Lordship that both M. de Bellecourt, my French colleague, and Captain Massot, of the French Imperial corvette "Duplex," on station here, have formally acquainted both the Admiral and myself that the instructions they had received were to the effect that they should adapt their course of action in Japan under the present circumstances in perfect accord with the policy pursued by Her Majesty's Government.

I have the satisfaction to add that the French Admiral in his flag-ship and one or two other vessels are daily expected here. The support which we shall derive from this moral, if not material, co-operation, especially in regard to the safeguard which may be extended to foreign residents, and the impressions it should produce upon Japanese counsels, are sufficiently obvious.

My Lord,

Yokohama, April 14, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inclose a copy of a letter which I have received from the Japanese Ministers respecting the destruction by fire of the building which had been destined to be the future British Legation residence at Yeddo.

I have only to observe, in respect to this communication, that the Japanese Ministers evidently endeavour to conceal the fact of this act having been perpetrated by political incendiaries, and in all probability also with the connivance of the Japanese Government itself.

In connection with this subject a rumour even prevails that several of the Daimios who most actively opposed the establishment of foreign Legations at Gotengyama actually paid to the Japanese Government the amount expended upon the British Legation building, and which is stated to have amounted to 40,000 dollars (about 8,000*l.*), and upon which the Government assented to its destruction.

There is one point, however, in the Japanese Ministers' communication which I deem it right to correct. In saying that I had consented to the construction of a fresh building on another spot, and for which they thank me, the Ministers, designedly or otherwise, make a wrong statement. I have distinctly declined to consent to any new arrangement, leaving Sir Rutherford Alcock when he arrives free to enter upon this subject in the manner which he may deem most expedient.

The Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

(Translation.)

HEREWITH we make the following communication.

When the British Legation at Goteng-yama was almost completed, it unexpectedly caught fire, and was burned down to the ground, as you were lately informed. This caused us great sorrow, and we sympathize with you.

For our Government it is likewise a great pity, not only that such a large sum of money has been lost, but also that all the trouble in erecting (the building) has thus suddenly proved to have been fruitless.

Although the name and the whereabouts of the criminal are unknown, the consequences of his stealing into the compound towards daybreak on the 13th (February 1) are made known in the inclosed document.

Most probably this event must be ascribed to the envy of those persons who were displeased that the foreign Legations were to be erected on the place of recreation to which the name of Goteng-yama had been given, as you are well aware of.

Thus it is very doubtful whether one will be able to ensure safety there, if the building were to be erected on the same spot.

We therefore proposed to you through Maba Iniobu-shōo-yu to stop the work of the present Legations, and to enter into negotiations for another spot. And you have agreed to this, taking into consideration the present state of affairs in Japan, for which we are much obliged.

We also communicate that the French and the American Ministers have consented to this.

With respect and consideration.

Communication of the Officials in charge of the new Legation at Goteng-yama, when it was destroyed by fire.

(Translation.)

THIS morning in the middle of Oshe (about 2 o'clock in the night), we went the rounds, but saw nothing suspicious. After our return the Legation began to burn, it having the appearance as if it had been set fire to with powder, and the eastern side likewise began to burn.

Whilst it was immediately being made known at the temporary office, the Legation was in one blaze of fire.

At the same time shots were heard outside the gate to the southward.

Although we at once sent in every direction, no suspicious persons were found.

But one of the posts of the wooden fence near the drawbridge was cut through, and the articles as mentioned in the inclosed paper were left there.

We send in this communication.

13th of 12th month (February 1).

One saw, one bag containing six candles, one match 3 feet 7 inches long, one pair of sandals, one pair of wooden clogs, four lucifers, and two flints. Two packets of powder were left under the stable near the Great Gate.

I HAVE the honour to report to your Lordship the arrival in this port from Shanghai, on the 26th instant, of Rear-Admiral Jaures, in His Imperial Majesty's ship "Semiramis."

I had the honour to pay my respects to the Admiral, when he most cordially and unreservedly stated to me the entire sympathy entertained by His Imperial Majesty's Government with the justice of the cause on which our demands upon the Japanese Government for reparation are based.

No. 34.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received June 26.)

(Extract.)

Yokohama, April 30, 1863.

THE Ministers left at Yeddo have, as it would appear, under instructions from the Tycoon himself, evinced some indications of appreciating the serious situation of affairs.

These Ministers, invested with no power during the absence of the Tycoon and principal members of his Council, in respect at least to the difference pending with Her Majesty's Government, or from other causes, had preserved during the interval after the reception of my note a profound silence, which I had feared would have been continued to the end, and the contingency of a resort to coercive measures appeared likely to become a reality.

In this situation of affairs my colleague of the United States called upon me on the 21st instant, and in a lengthened conversation informed me that immediately after the receipt of a communication which had reached Yeddo from the Tycoon's Ministers, written on their journey to Miako, some of the Governors for Foreign Affairs had come to him, and although confined to his bed by sickness, had earnestly urged him to see me at Yokohama, and to induce me to accede to the request which was about to be made to me for an extension of the term accorded.

Mr. Pruyn left me to return to Yeddo with the final declaration on my part that I could form no conception what might be my decision until I had received and maturely considered the letter which he had informed me I was about to receive from the Japanese Government.

The same evening I received the letter referred to from the Japanese Ministers, a copy of which in translation I have the honour to inclose.

Takemoto Kai no Kami, the Envoy charged with the delivery of the letter, addressed himself in the meanwhile to my colleague of France, M. Duchesne de Bellecourt, soliciting in the name of the Japanese Government his good offices in supporting the application they had addressed to me for an extension of thirty days to the period already assigned.

The next stage in these proceedings was the arrival from Yeddo, on the 24th instant, of Arima Tootomi no Kami, Vice-Minister of the Second Council, who sought an interview directly with myself. He reiterated the same request that the term should be extended to thirty days beyond the period originally fixed; and, in a long sitting of several hours, made no statement worthy of record beyond that of the impossibility of the Ministers left at Yeddo giving any reply to my note preferring the demands until the Tycoon returned to Yeddo, and that he was expected to do so in thirty days.

I had in the meanwhile, after the most anxious consultation with Admiral Kuper, come to the decision that it was advisable and expedient to prolong the term I had originally fixed, by fifteen days, and the draft of my reply was so prepared. I therefore caused it to be translated to the Vice-Minister, who, after some further conversation, left me to return to Yeddo, and my despatch (a copy of which I have the honour to inclose) followed him to the Ministers.

This was succeeded by a brief note, a copy of which is likewise annexed, which I addressed to the Ministers in consequence of my having been informed that the Vice-

Minister, Arima Tootomi no Kami, had spoken of his intention to return to Yokohama for the purpose of obtaining my final decision.

I now proceed to submit to your Lordship the various considerations by which I was guided in granting an extension of the term I had originally fixed.

First, the paramount principle of action which I have traced for myself in the conduct of the present differences is to endeavour to attain, by every possible means, the reparation I have been instructed to demand, without an appeal to coercive measures so long as a reasonable chance existed of my doing so within a moderate period.

Secondly, the absence of the Tycoon and his principal Ministers at Miako and the stress laid upon the alleged necessity of their deliberating in Council upon the matter at issue, together with the want of all discretionary power of action on the part of the Acting Ministers for Foreign Affairs at Yeddo, were unexpected contingencies, the consideration of which could not be altogether rejected.

It thus appeared reasonable that sufficient time should be afforded to the Ministers at Yeddo, in order that they might be invested with instructions from the Tycoon beyond the mere command that they should apply for a delay until he returned to Yeddo.

But it is a grave and important fact that the demands for reparation at this conjuncture, preferred by Her Majesty's Government, form but an incident in the revolutionary crisis through which this country is passing. The agitating question which is at this moment engaging the struggle between contending parties at Miako is, whether foreigners in general shall be suffered, under any conditions whatever, to remain in Japan; and at the hour at which I write reports prevail that the Tycoon, overpowered by the Mikado and the more powerful Daimios, has been compelled to renounce his foreign policy, and that by this recantation he has saved his own life, while some of the more powerful Daimios have undertaken to urge a war of expulsion or extermination against foreigners.

Such, my Lord, at the departure of this mail is the situation of affairs so far as they can be penetrated through the darkness and confusion which pervades passing events at this moment in Japan. For my own part, invested as I find myself with an overpowering responsibility, whatever unexpected emergencies may spring up around me, my action shall be tempered by what I conceive to be the course most conducive to avert a total rupture in our relations with this country, if such be possibly consistent with our national honour and dignity.

WE send you the following communication.

After the translation of your despatch dated April 6, 1863, we sent it by an express courier to our colleagues, who were in attendance on His Majesty the Tycoon on his journey, as we lately communicated to you. They then immediately laid it before His Majesty the Tycoon, and have sent us a written reply, which we have just received.

It is a law of our Empire that (matters of importance) must first be discussed at a conference of the Tycoon's Guardian the Regent, and the Council of State, and then a decision is taken, and that it is not to be settled any other way; besides, it is very inconvenient to take any decision, owing to the residence elsewhere on the journey. But in order not to lose too much time, and to facilitate our doing in a proper manner what you have communicated, (it is desirable) the number of days should be diminished (increased?) from what was originally proposed, and if from this date thirty days (were allowed to) elapse the Tycoon would be back in his castle. It has subsequently been communicated to us that His Majesty the Tycoon undoubtedly believes that such an unavoidable delay of days will be acceptable to the British Government, which proposition we now make to you, and we request most earnestly that you will accede to it.

With respect and consideration.

Inclosure 2 in No. 34.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.

Yokohama, April 24, 1863.

I HAVE received the communication, dated the 21st instant, made to me by your Excellencies under direction of the Tycoon's Ministers, asking for an extension of the term accorded for the definite reply of the Japanese Government to the demands which the British Government has made upon it.

You state you have been instructed to ask for an additional term of thirty days, dating from the 22nd instant.

The Tycoon's Government, acting with its usual regrettable want of frankness and confidence, has afforded me no real or sufficient reasons for this demand; nor has your Envoy Takemoto afforded any better reasons to the Minister Plenipotentiary of France, to whom he has addressed himself to intercede and exercise his just influence with me to obtain this extension of the term.

In so serious a crisis, of which His Majesty the Tycoon was fully aware even before his departure from Yeddo, no Government has been left at Yeddo invested with powers even to offer guarantees or interchange assurances which might become imperatively necessary.

No guarantee exists that His Majesty the Tycoon will not defer his return to Yeddo for five months, the period originally fixed, and even when that event takes place, your Excellencies and your Envoy Takemoto speak of arrangements and discussion being entered upon respecting the categorical and unchangeable demands made after all discussions had failed, and all reparation had been withheld during many months.

Your Excellencies' instructions have for their evident object to gain time by any excuses or arguments which may present themselves. It is my duty, on the other hand, to see that the demands made by Her Britannic Majesty's Government are not trifled with.

The circumstance of the absence of His Majesty the Tycoon from Yeddo, and the fact of his Ministers not having assembled round His Majesty at Miako till the 20th instant, may engage the consideration of Her Majesty's Government when I report these facts; but I reject as utterly unacceptable your reasons for delay until the return of His Majesty to Yeddo.

To remove every shadow of doubt of my desire not to precipitate a crisis in presence of an accidental obstacle, such as your being invested with no powers to furnish me with a reply to my note of the 6th instant at the expiration of the term allotted, I now inform your Excellencies of the decision to which I have come after anxious consideration. It is as follows: Before engaging the Admiral commanding Her Majesty's naval forces in these seas, and now with a squadron at Yokohama, to defer the adoption of coercive measures after the 26th instant, in consequence of the non-settlement of the demands, I will now, in consequence of your strong appeal in writing to myself, and indirectly to my colleague the Minister of France, await the time absolutely required once more to communicate with, and receive an answer from, the Tycoon's Ministers at Miako.

I assign an ample period for the accomplishment of this purpose by according fifteen days, dating from the 27th instant inclusive, whether your communication takes place by land or by sea.

But I beg you seriously to observe that the reply which I require to enable me to withhold immediate measures of coercion at the expiration of the new term must be of a character to remove all doubt as to the assent of the Tycoon's Government to the demands made upon it.

No further arguments for delay can be received by me. The Tycoon's Government will be considered as having refused the demands, and coercive measures will be entered upon.

If at such a moment the Ministers at Yeddo are still invested with no powers of meeting so critical a contingency beyond those of seeking for further delay, the Tycoon's Government is alone responsible for the consequences attending such a situation of affairs.

It is not the intention to molest the peaceable Japanese inhabitants on shore at Yokohama, or at the other ports open to foreign trade in Japan, unless danger is threatened to them; but the British fleet will at once appear in other parts of Japan, where its presence may be less agreeable to the interests of the Tycoon and his Government.

The demands to be made upon the Prince of Satsuma are apart from those to which this despatch relates. I reserve to myself the intention to carry into effect that portion of my instructions at any moment at which it may be convenient to do so, unless in the meantime the Tycoon's Government itself satisfies those demands, the nature of which has been made known to it.

HAVING understood from my colleague the Minister of France that Arima Tōtomi no Kami had observed to him that as I had not given a definite answer to your Excellencies' letter of the 21st instant, he should return to Yokohama to discuss further upon the subject, I consider it extremely important that your Excellencies should understand that my letter addressed to you and dated yesterday did contain my definite answer.

Yokohama, May 11, 1863.

MY despatch of the 30th April will have apprised your Lordship of the circumstances under which I had extended the term allotted to the Japanese Ministers for their definite reply to the demands for reparation which I had preferred.

On the 1st instant I received a further despatch from the Japanese Ministers, the chief purport of which was again to solicit that the term should be extended to thirty days. I have the honour to inclose a copy of their despatch.

In this situation I sought occasion to meet and confer with Admiral Kuper, and with my colleague of France, and with the French Admiral, respecting the general condition of affairs.

I have already had the honour to report to your Lordship the unreserved and cordial manner in which the French Representatives had espoused our cause.

On the 3rd instant two Envoys, Takemoto Kai no Kami and Takemoto Hayato no Kami, came down from Yeddo, and announced their anxious desire to hold an interview with us.

On the 4th and 5th instant, long and protracted interviews took place.

The general result of these conferences was the further fresh accordance of a term of seventeen days dating from the 6th instant.

On the 9th instant I received a communication from the Japanese Ministers, of which I have the honour to inclose a copy, informing me that His Majesty the Tycoon would leave Miako on the 8th instant, and that he would reach Yeddo on the 24th instant. Considering, therefore, that the day named for the Tycoon's return immediately followed that which had been fixed for the definite reply of the Tycoon's Government to the proposals we had communicated, my colleague of France entirely concurred with me in the expediency of replying in an assuring spirit to the Japanese Ministers, and we accordingly wrote to them in identical terms, stating that coercive measures would not be precipitated if indeed it should turn out to be a fact that the Tycoon was about to re-enter his capital.

I have the honour to inclose a copy of my note in reply.

WE have to express to you our heartfelt thanks on the receipt of a letter dated April 24th, in reply to ours of the 4th day of our 3rd month (April 21), for kindly acceding to our request to put off the day for a definite answer, and that you have postponed it for fifteen days, to commence from the 27th instant, having taken into consideration the peculiar circumstances we are placed in. We immediately made it known (by courier) to His Majesty the Tycoon, because we wish, as much as possible, to give the definite answer within the time specified.

But although you have stated in your letter dated 25th April, that the letter of the 24th is your last and definite answer, yet the postponement we requested is the time we asked for, and this is no longer to be obtained, and yet it is very desirable that it should be granted; therefore we request you once more to take it into mature consideration.

With esteem and respect.

Yokohama, May 11, 1863.

I HAVE had the honour to receive your Excellencies' letter dated the 9th instant, informing me that His Majesty the Tycoon was expected to leave Miako on the 8th, and to arrived in Yeddo on the 24th instant, and I am rejoiced to receive this communication.

Considering, however, that the delay fixed at the last interview with Takemoto Kai no Kami expires on the 23rd instant, it is very desirable that your Excellencies keep me from time to time exactly informed of the progress of the Tycoon's journey; for should His Majesty indeed, on that day, be within one day's reach of Yeddo, your Excellencies will not find on my part, nor on the part of my colleague the Minister of France, any difficulty in awaiting the time necessary for the arrival and establishment of His Majesty in his capital.

On the other hand, my colleague of France and myself cannot too strongly state to your Excellencies that we distinctly expect that the engagements made with us by Takemoto Kai no Kami in respect to restoring calm and order at Yokohama, and in furnishing supplies for the inhabitants and the fleet, be strictly maintained.

With respect and consideration.

(Extract.)

Yokohama, May 12, 1863.

THE Tycoon's Government has long struggled to present to foreign Representatives a semblance of absolute power and authority, occasionally referring to the obstacles opposed to it by the undefined supremacy of the Mikado, and by the real and powerful influence of hostile Daimios. Serious and threatening political contentions have already arisen out of these causes. The Treaties concluded with foreign States, and the presence and unrestricted commercial operations of foreign merchants, especially at Yokohama, have furnished matter for their recriminations. The Tycoon and his Government have been in this contest on the defensive, for it was they who entered into the bond of relationship with the Western States, no matter under what influences. The Tycoon's Government has not disavowed the engagements into which it has entered by Treaties; but it has endeavoured to abate the resentment of the hostile party by cultivating no friendly relations with foreign States, especially with the Representatives of Great Britain and France, nations which they have soon apprehended were likely and able, on all occasions, to vindicate their rights. Hence a seeming preference to other States, which to them appeared otherwise situated.

Murders and outrages, of which British subjects have been more frequently the victims, intermingled with alarming rumours of attacks upon the foreign settlements—a belief in which was encouraged by the Government—has filled up the interval of the temporizing policy of the Tycoon's Government; while trade has flourished, despite of political intrigues, as it ever must where enterprising British merchants and native dealers and producers are thrown into contact.

But the Mikado's party has meanwhile gained the ascendancy. Several powerful Daimios of this Empire asserting rival claims to sovereignty, more or less well founded, have adopted the expedient of elevating the Mikado from a noiseless and spiritual seclusion to a position of traditional supremacy which the Tycoon can hardly resist. Hence the mandates which, during the last few months, have successively reached Yeddo; hence the degradations and confiscations of the revenues of the Tycoon's partizans; hence the arrogant declarations of the Daimios, and the absolute commands of the Mikado to the Tycoon, enjoining him at once to expel foreigners, as disclosed in the annexed translations transmitted to me by Her Majesty's Acting Consul at Hakodadi; and hence, finally, the summons of the Tycoon to Miako.

At such a crisis in the internal situation of this country I had the honour to receive your Lordship's instructions in regard to the reparation to be demanded for the murder and outrages committed in September last upon Mr. Richardson and other British subjects.

With the progress of my proceedings while carrying out those instructions I have had the honour to keep your Lordship fully informed.

The loyal, frank, and energetic co-operation of the French naval and diplomatic authorities has afforded no slight consistency to the decisions I have successively arrived at in perfect unanimity with Admiral Kuper.

The Mikado to the Tycoon of Japan.

(Translation.)

THE insolent intrusion of foreigners has now lasted during several years, and it is extremely difficult to say when it will end.

These barbarians occasion deep affliction to the Great Nippon, from its Sovereign down to the lowest native. I have frequently written to you upon this subject, partly for myself and partly for my people; and as I have already told you, this calamity does not cease.

The foreigners must either be banished by force or they must be all removed to Nagasaki and Hakodadi. Measures must be adopted to render it impossible for them to assert their pretensions, and if they are allowed to remain in Japan, let it appear that they are not here.

If these measures are not adopted, a war will break out. Do not delay these important reforms, and if they must be allowed to trade, their commerce must be restricted and duly controlled.

Endeavour to settle this important affair with the Daimios; but I must add that these perverse and barbarian foreigners ought to be sent out of our country.

The Tycoon to the Mikado of Japan.

(Translation.)

YOU have informed me that great anxiety is felt at Kioto, as it is not sufficiently protected if the banished foreigners intend to create disturbances. We are well aware that Kioto might be in danger if the barbarians revolted, but allow us to remind you that up to the present time Kioto has always been confided to the care of the Government of the Tycoon, and we have never neglected this duty.

If you, however, consider the protection of Government insufficient, we shall send several Daimios to watch over your safety. We have already commanded the principal Daimios to fortify Japan and defend it if the barbarians revolt. We therefore request you will inform us which Daimios you prefer.

When we are at Kioto this matter shall be amply discussed, and we shall then be able to consult about the manner in which the foreigners must be banished, and about the internal governance of our country.

My Lord,

Yokohama, May 12, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship a copy of a communication I have thought it advisable to make to the Japanese Ministers, apprising them of the declared total value of the property belonging to British subjects which is exposed to risk in the present situation of affairs, and especially should hostilities ensue consequent upon a non-settlement of the demands for reparation preferred by Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.

Inclosure in No. 38.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.

Yokohama, May 8, 1863.

IN the present situation of affairs it becomes my duty to communicate to your Excellencies that the value of the private and business property of British merchants and other British subjects residing in Yokohama, according to the lists they have separately and in detail recorded, amounts in the total to 2,967,575 Mexican dollars.

This measure of precaution has been adopted lest the sinister reports in circulation of the intended designs of loonins, or Daimios' retainers, as well as the possible acts of prisoners liberated from the gaol by the Japanese authorities against the foreign Settlement, should be realized.

I have in the meanwhile to acquaint your Excellencies that some British subjects have already been robbed by their fugitive servants.

With respect and consideration.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received August 6.)

(Extract.)

Yokohama, May 15, 1863.

BY the last mail I was unable to transmit to your Lordship a copy (now herewith inclosed) of a despatch addressed to me by Mr. Consul Winchester.

Inclosure in No. 40.

Consul Winchester to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir,

Kanagawa, May 4, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that pursuant to your instructions I sought an interview with the Governor at 11 A.M. for the purpose of drawing his attention to the alarm and inconvenience which the sudden exodus of the Japanese from this place and Kanagawa was sure to occasion.

The conversation commenced by my informing the Governor that you had sent me to inquire the meaning of the sudden and simultaneous leaving of great numbers of the population which had been going on all night, and was still continuing, and that you had hoped the same was not in consequence of any orders of the Government.

The Governor replied that the people had been informed of the differences between Her Majesty's Government and that of the Tycoon; that they knew the limit of days originally imposed; that thirty days had been asked for to enable the Tycoon to return to Yeddo with a view to the settlement of the question, and that only fifteen had been granted. Under these circumstances the people had been greatly terrified and excited, and had been told in reply to their anxious inquiries that they were at liberty to go or stay as they pleased.

I then stated to the Governor that such a measure as the withdrawal of the Japanese from the foreign settlement was in itself one of the acts of all others most likely to precipitate events in a sense unfavourable to the amicable settlement of the questions between the British Government and that of the Tycoon; that a step of this nature was calculated to create the greatest alarm, and to be highly prejudicial to the permanent interests of all concerned, and should not be encouraged or ordered, except in the last resort when all negotiations had failed. To this the only reply given by the Governor was that no constraint had been put on the people, they had been simply told to please themselves. I rejoined to this that this step was a bringing on of the evils of war before there was any occasion; that the Governor must know that negotiations were still going on; and I declared that in no case would any trouble fall on Yokohama, and requested that he would issue a circular to calm the minds of the people.

The Governor stated he would send officers among the people to induce them to remain, but would not promise to send round any circular.

At 12 noon the Governor had requested all the Consuls to meet him, and I therefore dispatched Mr. Flowers, who had taken pencil notes of the interview, to acquaint you with the unsatisfactory result.

My colleagues then entered the audience room, with the exception of the French Vice-Consul, and the Governor told us at some length that his object was to inform us that the guard would be changed to-morrow; that as there were troubles on hand the Daimio officers would be replaced by others under his immediate command, who would be more completely under his orders. He evaded any statement as to whether the numbers of the guard should be increased. Inquiries were then made by the American Consul and others with respect to the exodus. The neutrality of the Settlement was insisted on in becoming terms.

It was represented that the withdrawal of the Japanese involved all nations equally: that nothing was so likely to bring on war as to act as if it were certain.

The Governor reiterated that the Government had left the matter to the people themselves—to go or stay.

The United States' Consul stated that the accounts received by him of the character of the circular gave it a much more peremptory tone; that it was very unlikely the people would leave unless ordered by the Government.

I then suggested that he should furnish a copy of the circular. He evaded the demand by saying he would do so, but must first refer to Yeddo.

At this stage the general interview broke up, and the Governor was left by me with the Prussian and Portuguese Consuls.

Such is a very hurried account of what took place.

I have, &c.

(Signed) CHARLES A. WINCHESTER.

P.S.—Mr. Loureiro, Acting Consul for Portugal, has since told me that the Governor said to him he would be very sorry if any Portuguese suffered in consequence of being mistaken for English, but that it was impossible for the Japanese to distinguish. He promised to give the Portuguese notice of any hostile movement on Yokohama likely to involve their safety.

My Lord,

Yokohama, May 27, 1863.

I HAVE to report to your Lordship that the temple occupied by the United States' Legation at Yeddo was destroyed by fire on the early morning of the 24th instant. As yet it has not been discovered whether this event is attributable to accident or to political incendiaries. It should, however, be remarked, that my colleague of the United States has on more than one occasion told me that the Japanese Government had urgently solicited him to abandon Yeddo during the Tycoon's absence, and to reside in Yokohama.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.

Yokohama, May 18, 1863.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellencies' letter informing me that His Majesty the Tycoon would not leave Kioto on the 8th of May to return to Yeddo, as you had previously announced.

I have to express to your Excellencies my great disappointment and regret at this communication under existing circumstances. It remains for me only to state that, notwithstanding this unexpected change in the intentions of His Majesty with respect to the period of his return to his capital, I shall await with much anxiety the important and definite instructions which may reasonably be expected by the Government at Yeddo from His Majesty at Kioto in regard to foreign affairs.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received August 15.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, June 11, 1863.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 27th ultimo, I have the honour to inclose a copy of an official letter I have received from Mr. Pruyn informing me of the destruction of the United States' residence at Yeddo, accompanied with some particulars connected with that event.

Mr. Pruyn, I am satisfied, is quite justified in entertaining some suspicions that the fire was not accidental, although he commences by disculpating the authorities from all connivance.

It is well known that the Japanese Government has long resorted to every means of persuasion to induce the United States' Minister to reside at Yokohama, and with this view they had even offered to indemnify the American Legation for the inconvenience and expense which might be occasioned by their removal. Mr. Pruyn continued, however, to reside in a temporary residence at Yeddo after the destruction of the Legation, and thus baffled in their attempt to necessitate his departure, the next act of the Japanese authorities appears to have been a resort to terrorism. I am told that Mr. Pruyn was at dinner when a Vice-Governor came in breathless haste to urge his instant departure, for that the Governor could not guarantee the safety of his life for an hour, and then Mr. Pruyn at once embarked.

The measure next adopted by the authorities was to effect without chance of failure the departure of the United States' Consul and family, and some American missionaries from Kanagawa on the opposite side of the bay to this settlement.

Some yaconins roused the Consul at night, and announced the imminent peril to which they alleged he was exposed, and their inability to afford them any protection. Some of these families embarked immediately on board the United States' ship of war "Wyoming," as they had no immediate means of finding residences at Yokohama, where the whole are now located.

To render these measures thoroughly complete, the Swiss Mission, which had proceeded to Yeddo to negotiate respecting their Treaty, which had been promised, and was to have been on the same footing as that with Prussia, were conducted for safety on board a Japanese steamer each night, and finally returned in the same steamer a few days ago to Yokohama, without having as yet accomplished the object of their mission.

I have, &c.

P.S.—Since writing the above I have acknowledged the receipt of Mr. Pruyn's letter, and have the honour to inclose a copy of what I have written.

Inclosure 1 in No. 43.

Mr. Pruyn to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir, Legation of the United States in Japan, June 9, 1863.
I HAVE the honour to inform you of the destruction by fire of the buildings occupied by the United States in Yeddo on the 24th ultimo at 2 A.M.

As I have already unofficially stated to you the fire originated in the kitchen or a small building adjoining, and in fifteen minutes from the time of its discovery enveloped so completely the entire buildings as to allow me only opportunity to save the public archives.

My interviews with the Japanese Government in relation to the cause of the fire, and provision for another residence, and my temporary removal to this place, must be my apology for the delay in this official announcement.

I have no wish to attribute the destruction of the Legation buildings to design, nor have I any reason for any such belief, from the great desire which has been constantly shown to have me take up my residence in this place.

Some occurrences calculated to excite suspicion had attracted my notice, which I had frankly stated to the Government; while their force has been admitted, I am nevertheless assured that the evidence taken establishes beyond a doubt that the fire was accidental.

The Government has prepared plans for a temporary residence for me in the large temple within the inclosure which was not destroyed, and I suppose the work for such temporary residence has commenced. I remained in Yeddo one week after the fire to arrange this, refusing to leave the city even for a visit to this place, until I had positive assurances of such provision for my residence at Yeddo.

I had fixed the time of my departure from Yeddo on such visit for the 1st of June, but was induced to leave late in the evening of the day preceding, on receiving notice from the Government of the discovery of an organization to attack myself and the guard that night. I was informed that an additional force had been sent for my protection; but that in the event of a night attack, some accident might happen to me. The additional argument was strongly urged that my removing that afternoon would leave them free from apprehension for my safety, and enable them to act with more vigour against the conspirators (loonins), whom the Government at the very time were causing to be surrounded.

Under these circumstances I did not feel at liberty to refuse leaving a few hours earlier than I had intended.

It is my present intention to resume my residence at Yeddo early next month.

I have, &c.

Sir, Yokohama, June 12, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 9th instant, upon the subject of the destruction by fire of that portion of the temple at Yeddo which was occupied by the United States' Legation.

I beg to express my extreme sympathy and deep regret at this untoward and unexpected event. That it was occasioned by the act of political incendiaries, of which you have some suspicion, I have little doubt, judging from the context of past and passing events of a similar character. The general plan (now evident, and not disavowed by the Japanese Government) for the expulsion of foreigners from localities where their presence is most distasteful, is visibly enacting before our eyes. The multiplicity of grievances, and absence at present of fitting opportunity, having special matters on hand, alone retards the sweeping away of the ill-advised and futile efforts which more or less hostile parties in Japan oppose to the entire and complete execution of Treaty obligations. For myself I beg leave to declare that I will enter upon that work systematically, taking the obstructions presented to us seriatim in the order of their importance.

Sir,

Hakodadi, May 18, 1863.

I HAVE the honour of reporting my arrival on the 12th ultimo at the above-mentioned port, where all appeared in peace and tranquillity.

In accordance with your instructions, impressing upon me the necessity of furnishing you, by whatever opportunity that may present itself, by sea or by the Japanese land route, with every information which is attainable, bearing upon passing events, I take this early opportunity of inclosing copies of four official notices, circulated privately to each Japanese house by the Governor, giving information as to what is likely to happen, urging at the same time upon those under his jurisdiction to prepare themselves in the event of an emergency.

Orders issued by the Governor to the Inhabitants of Hakodadi.

(Translation.)

AT this time, although the common people have begun to shut up their houses, as there is no war, they must be opened, and mercantile business must be carried on as usual.

Hereafter if there should be a war I shall hear from Yeddo, and it will be told to you.

Speech addressed to all the Government Yakonins by the Governor of Hakodadi.

I have heard from the Governor at Yeddo. After some time (this expression "oté" may mean several years) a war may break out, or it may not; although this is not yet decided, I have to order you to be prepared, and to practice the sword exercise.
25th of 3rd month (12th May, 1863).

The Treaty between European countries and Japan is finished. Henceforth Hakodadi and Nagasaki will be the only ports opened to foreigners. If the foreigners, however, persist in their claims, a war will break out.

27th of 3rd month (14th May, 1863).

(Signed)

GOVERNOR OF HAKODADI.

In Hakodadi there is not the least chance of a war breaking out. If there should be a war in Yeddo, the large bell (in the Governor's house) will be sounded, and it will then be time to shut up your shops. Until, however, you hear this bell, business must be carried on as usual. In Hakodadi there will be no war.

My Lord,

Yokohama, June 12, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to transmit, for the information of your Lordship, copies of a despatch, with its inclosures, addressed to me by Mr. Consul Winchester in respect to measures adopted by the Japanese Government at Yokohama with the alleged object of affording protection to foreigners at the present crisis.

I have, &c.

EDWD. ST. JOHN NEALE.

Inclosure 1 in No. 45.

Consul Winchester to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir,

Kanagawa, May 31, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to submit to your attention the details of an important interview with the Governor to which I was summoned, along with my colleagues, this forenoon.

The first intimation, received about 8 A.M., was to the effect that the Governor wished to see the Consular Corps at 1 in the afternoon. A second notice reached me at 11.30 A.M., stating that the Governor was at the Custom-house, and wished to see the Consuls as soon as they could make it convenient.

Proceeding to the Custom-house, I waited some time, the Governor being engaged with the American Consul.

We were at length requested to come to the Governor's presence, and found him, with Mr. Fisher, in one of the upper rooms of the building. After sitting down, I gathered that they were concluding a conversation in which it had been arranged that, in consequence of the presence of a band of loonins in this neighbourhood, the Consul and American missionaries resident at Kanagawa were, for their greater safety, to remove at once to Yokohama, it being provided that a Japanese guard should take care of their house and furniture during their temporary absence, and that compensation for the expense and trouble of removal should be borne by the Japanese Government.

The Governor then proceeded to inform us that there were large numbers of loonins in Yeddo and its vicinity; that these men had been roaming about committing numerous outrages on the highway, entering the shops and warehouses of respectable merchants for the purpose of extorting money by threats and violence.

It is impossible, said the Governor, to prevent these people from coming on the tokaido; and he was particularly anxious that foreigners of all nations should be warned against riding or walking in that direction. Not only was there danger on the high road, but there were strong apprehensions that these outlaws, who were united in gangs more or less formidable, might introduce themselves into Yokohama and commit isolated assaults and homicides, or, combining in larger bodies, attack the Settlement in force. It was the duty of the Japanese Government, according to Treaties, to protect the Settlement and foreign residents from injury, and it was desirous of doing so in the most effectual manner. With this view the Gorogio had sent for the Governor and directed him to arrange all the necessary measures. A battalion of the Tycoon's own guard, commanded by officers of rank ("Hattomotos"), would be sent down to reinforce the Daimios' guards, and would be distributed in barracks and posts around the Settlement. These troops would patrol day and night. Additional accommodation would have to be built for them, and a strong detachment would be placed in the new Examination House in the East Hatoban.

These arrangements would probably last for thirty days, within which time the Gorogio expected to be able to clear the district of these troublesome intruders. In the meantime, looking to the possible confusion which might attend the joint action of Japanese and foreign troops, they hoped to be able to meet the crisis, which the Governor repeatedly averred was one of great danger, with the native soldiery; but if their ability to do so became doubtful, there would be no hesitation in requesting the aid of the foreign troops.

To these statements we replied in a general way that it was very gratifying to be assured of the solicitude of the Tycoon's Government for the safety of the settlement, but that the inconvenience of mixing up the Japanese and foreign soldiery before it became really necessary would be the result of stationing any detachment of Japanese soldiers in the centre of the bund; that the native and foreign residents must in such case be in constant contact with each other, and that collision and other complications would ensue.

Such a post was not wanted, as the gun-boats were anchored so as to command the whole of the sea-front of the foreign quarter, and if necessary the Admirals and other senior naval officers of the respective nations would direct additional guard-boats to row along the sea-front. The proper line for the Japanese guards to be posted was round, but not in, the Settlement, for so long as the ships of war were in harbour any attack from seaward would be impossible.

[The Governor said that] only the usual Custom-house officers would remain at the new hatoban, and he would be glad if the gun-boats could be anchored as near the shore as possible, and the arrangements I had spoken of with respect to the row guard-boats were continued.

I then pointed out to the Governor that these measures of precaution and defence were likely to lead to considerable apprehensions among the Japanese residents and servants, and that if proper measures were not taken to quiet such, we would surely have a return of the distressing panic which occurred at the commencement of the month. It was imperatively necessary that the Governor should provide against this both here and at Kanagawa, it being certain that the removal of the American Consul would create great alarm.

To this last observation the Governor accorded his full assent, repeating that within ten or fifteen days if the Government found itself unable to repress these bands of outlaws, the aid of foreign troops would be demanded.

Finally, the Governor requested that in making known to our several communities the state of affairs, we would be good enough to announce that the officers in charge of the Tycoon's troops were gentlemen of birth and consideration in Japan, much superior to the Daimios' officers whom we have been accustomed to see, and that any unnecessary threatening display of fire-arms would be felt by them as a special indignity.

The Governor further informed me that with a view of facilitating communication with foreign Ministers and Naval Chiefs and Consuls, certain officers would be named and deputed to convey information and reports in case of emergency.

During the course of the interview we endeavoured to obtain from the Governor a more definite statement of the strength of the reinforcements; he evaded this, however, by speaking of it as a single battalion—an idea hardly consistent with the numbers of posts and new barracks which we were given to understand were in contemplation. We heard nothing of any batteries or works to be thrown up; but I should not be astonished if under cover of the present excitement such were intended.

Undoubtedly the Japanese Government is quite capable of creating a fictitious alarm, and under its cover compassing their darling object of controlling the movements or (it may be) getting rid of this community.

I forward at once a copy of this despatch to Admiral Kuper, and to-morrow will issue a notification to the British community in terms to be submitted to you.

I have, &c.

(Signed) CHARLES A. WINCHESTER.

Inclosure 2 in No. 45.

Consul Winchester to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

(Extract.)

Kanagawa, June 2, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to forward, for your information, copy of the notification issued to British subjects consequent on Sunday's interview with the Governor.

Notwithstanding the apparent abandonment, at the moment, of the intention to place a Japanese guard on the East Hatoban, it became evident on Monday that the military control of the bund was an object of such importance that its accomplishment was not to be foregone without a struggle.

Ishibashi, the interpreter, was sent to inform me that the Governor adhered to his original views, and that he had betaken himself to the British flag-ship, in the hope of obtaining an assent to his wishes.

It is unnecessary to advert to the discussions with yourself, the French Minister, and Admiral, which have terminated in the withdrawal of this proposal, the carrying out of which would have created the greatest alarm among the foreign community.

What are the real facts hidden under the excitement so carefully unveiled to us it is as yet impossible to say. It seems to be clearly coincident with the arrival of Mito and his men to take care of Yeddo, and has enabled the Government successfully to attain two objects they have long had at heart—the retreat of the American Minister from Yeddo, and of the American Consul and missionaries from Kanagawa. It is possible that these two points gained, the system of terror will be relaxed for another fortnight, when further turns of the screw will be added, involving the confinement of foreigners within the canal or their expulsion from the settlement. All these are well understood landmarks in the programme of the Conservative party, who are so utterly blinded by extravagant appreciation of their own miscalled heroism as to fancy themselves equal to the burden of a foreign war, and to attribute foreign forbearance to fear.

Inclosure 3 in No. 45.

Circular addressed by Consul Winchester to the British Residents at Yokohama.

Kanagawa, June 1, 1863.

THE Undersigned was yesterday informed by the Governor of the presence of numerous bands of loönins in Yeddo and this neighbourhood, and warned that foreigners walking or riding along the tokaido will run great risk of being attacked.

The Undersigned would in any circumstances feel it his duty, out of regard to individual safety, to caution his countrymen against exposing themselves on a highway known to be infested by truculent outlaws. At the present moment it is especially desirable that relations should not be complicated by the occurrence of other untoward events. The demands now being made have arisen out of the commission of atrocious homicides, and from what is taking place the community can form an estimate of the inconvenience of having to demand redress for lesser injuries.

The Governor further announced that with the view of providing for the security of the foreign settlement and residents against isolated or combined attacks on the part of these outlaws, the present Japanese soldiers were to be reinforced by a battalion of the Tycoon's guard, whose special duty it will be to patrol the outskirts of Yokohama; and his Excellency further begged me to inform my countrymen that the officers of this corps (being Hattamotos) were persons entitled to respect and consideration in Japan.

My Lord,

Yokohama, June 13, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to transmit, for your Lordship's information and convenience, a copy of a despatch I have addressed to Vice-Admiral Kuper, and which consists of a summary of my negotiations with the Japanese Ministers since the departure of the last mail, and which, with the inclosures referred to, I have the honour to lay before your Lordship in greater detail by this occasion.

Inclosure 1 in No. 46.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Vice-Admiral Kuper.

Sir,

Yokohama, June 12, 1863.

THE result of the conferences which have taken place between myself and the Japanese Envoys from Yeddo since I had last the honour of informing you of the situation of affairs may be condensed as follows:—

Takemoto Kai no Kami, the Envoy with whom, as you are aware, I was previously in communication, did not keep his engagement of returning to Yokohama, arising, as alleged, from ill health, but probably from other causes. Two other Envoys did, however, replace him; and the whole purport and tenour of three long and protracted conferences I held with them on the 7th and 8th instant, and at one of which you were present, was to arrange the details of the mode, time, and manner of payment of the pecuniary demands made by Her Majesty's Government upon Japan, exclusive of the demands on Satsuma.

Various and widely differing proposals with this object were made by the Governors, ranging from ten months to ten years, as the term to be allotted for the payment of the whole; while I, on my part, insisted that, having extended all due consideration to the Tycoon's Government, and exhausted all patience, ten days was the limit of the term which I would now further await a settlement of the question in hand; and that in default of such being accomplished, I should be constrained to leave in your hands the execution of the measures to be adopted under such contingency as directed by Her Majesty's Government.

At the last of the interviews referred to, the Governors made finally a proposal to the effect that the sum of 140,000 dollars should be paid within a term of ten days, dating from the 9th instant. A long discussion then ensued as to when and in what proportions the remainder would be liquidated. I suggested the payment of 60,000 dollars at short intervals, i.e., week by week; this was eventually modified to 50,000 dollars per week, thus covering the whole amount in six weeks.

The Governors returned to Yeddo, undertaking to be with me this day, the 12th instant, bearing the approval, or otherwise, of the Tycoon's Government to this arrangement.

This morning I am placed in possession of a despatch from the Gorogio, translation of which I have the honour to inclose for your information, by which you will observe that the conditions proposed by me are formally and officially accepted. In the same despatch I am informed that a member of the Gorogio will come down to Yokohama to-morrow (the 13th instant) for the purpose of discussing the subject of the demands made upon the Prince of Satsuma, which I had informed the Envoys must also immediately be determined. The Gorogio also refer to other matters of the nature of which I am ignorant; but there is every reason to believe they may be of a very unsatisfactory character with regard to our relations generally with Japan: the chief object and persevering designs of the rulers of this country, to judge from the context of past and passing events, being to bring about the voluntary abandonment or enforced expulsion of foreigners,—if not from all the open ports, certainly from Yokohama.

In support of these conclusions I have the honour to inclose the translation of a Proclamation which has been very generally circulated in Yeddo within the last two days, and which has fallen into my possession this morning.

I have, &c.

(Signed) EDWD. ST. JOHN NEALE.

Inclosure 2 in No. 46.

Proclamation sent round by the Governor of Yeddo to the Head-men of every Street in that City, for the information of its Inhabitants.

(Translation.)

AS we are now going to enter upon the negotiations with regard to the closing of the ports,* and which will possibly result in war, bad people and robbers might profit by the occasion to create confusion and commit outrages, our Government has therefore taken precautions; but you (the people), as you have been for 300 years in the enjoyment of peace and quietness through the care and vigilance of the Government, must now yourselves also take the necessary steps to prevent the occurrence of such confusion or outrage.

The preservation of order in the different quarters of Yeddo is particularly to be cared for by you, and any one among you who has good plans to propose with that object, let him come and propose it to the Governor of Yeddo.

No. 47.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received August 15.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, June 14, 1863.

AT the last moment of the departure of the mail, I rise from a conference with the Governors of Foreign Affairs, and it is with no small satisfaction that I lay before your Lordship the written undertaking of the Japanese Government to satisfy the demands I have been instructed to make upon it on the part of Her Majesty's Government, so far as regards the pecuniary indemnities, apart from the demands on the Prince of Satsuma.

On the 11th instant I received a communication from the Japanese Ministers, a copy of which I have the honour to inclose, formally, and for the first time, assenting to the demands referred to, as well as to the specific amounts and periods of payment which I had insisted upon.

This was followed by a further communication, herewith inclosed, informing me of the sudden illness of the Minister, one of the Gorogio, who was to have come down, and stating that the two Governors, with whom I had last been in communication, would supply his place.

This morning, accordingly, I have been in conference with the Governors, the result of which is the formal signing and sealing of a specific and obligatory engagement, a copy of which I have here the honour and satisfaction to lay before your Lordship.

I dispatch the mail, to return to my conference with the Governors respecting the subject of the reparation demanded of the Prince of Satsuma, respecting which they have a communication to make.

Thus far matters have progressed without the firing of a shot. I trust I may be in a position to reiterate this remark when the whole of the demands shall have been satisfied. But I cannot venture to be over sanguine at a moment when this country is in the very throes and effervescence of internal commotion—a contest which may enable us to be passive, and perhaps even eventually conduce to our advantage, but which, on the other hand, may speedily and forcedly engage us in hostilities.

I have, &c.

(Extract.)

Yokohama, June 20, 1863.

IN continuation of my despatch of the 14th instant by the last mail, I have the honour to lay before your Lordship a recital of what has passed in the eventful fortnight which has succeeded.

At the last moment I transmitted to your Lordship a translation, in copy, of a formal and written engagement entered into with me by the Japanese to pay by instalments, at the periods specified, the pecuniary portion of the indemnity demanded by Her Majesty's Government. That Agreement was signed on the 14th instant.

Thus far my instructions being on the very eve of accomplishment, I proceeded on the following day to enter, with the same Envoys, upon the subject of the demands preferred upon the Prince of Satsuma, which the Envoys declared that they desired and were empowered to settle in a manner equally satisfactory.

The general purport and result of a very extended Conference with the Ministers, with which I will not weary your Lordship's attention, was to the effect that, on the part of the Envoys, they acknowledged the justice of the demand on Satsuma; that the arrest, conviction, and capital execution of the murderers of Mr. Richardson were also in accordance with their own laws; and that the only obstacle which presented itself was the impossibility to find the murderer (for the policy of this Government leads it, on all occasions when such is possible, to acknowledge the guilt of only one person at a time); that the Prince of Satsuma had been in constant correspondence with the Tycoon's Government, and declared his desire and willingness to arrest the actual murderers when this was practicable, and that both the Tycoon's Government and the Prince of Satsuma would not relax in their efforts to effect this object. They (the Envoys) therefore proposed that the money-portion of the demands (25,000*l.*) should be paid by the Tycoon's Government, and that we should await the arrest of the murderer in order to carry out the other portion of the demands.

I replied, that my instructions were urgent and peremptory; that the flight of the murderer, unless by the connivance of the Prince, was an inadmissible excuse, and the presumption that only one person was implicated equally inadmissible; that if one, therefore, had fled, others must be within the reach of Satsuma; that while the Japanese Government acknowledged its inability to arrest the criminals within the territories of the Prince of Satsuma, on the other hand it claimed for the Tycoon a right of sovereignty over the Prince's domains, and stated that it would be an act of hostility on our part if we proceeded ourselves upon Satsuma, who could not be considered an independent Prince.

I added, that this anomalous and unusual situation of affairs could only be dealt with by corresponding proceedings, which were not resorted to under ordinary circumstances.

Finally, I insisted that the indefinite period to which they postponed the arrest of the culprits could not be entertained by me; and the Envoys returned to Yeddo, to return to me in a day or two with a more reasonable project of settlement.

The day now approached for the payment of the first instalment of the indemnities, which in the Conference above referred to was no more alluded to, further than that the Envoys declared their satisfaction that it had been so happily settled and disposed of.

On the 17th instant, the day preceding the payment, I received an official message from the Governor through Mr. Eusden, desiring to be informed at what hour I desired the money, which was all ready at the Custom-house to be brought to this Legation.

One P.M. was affixed for that purpose.

I need hardly enlarge on the astonishment I experienced when a few hours before the appointed time I received a visit from the Governor of this place, who stated that he exceedingly regretted having to communicate that he had received orders from Yeddo not to pay the money. At the same moment I received a despatch from one of the Members of the Gorogio, a copy of which I have the honour to inclose, confirming the Governor's statement, and informing me that he would himself come down to make some communication to me.

I at once broke off all further discussion with the Governor, but, at his earnest request, granted twelve hours to proceed to Yeddo to communicate my decision of placing the solution of matters by coercive measures in the hands of the Admiral, unless the whole of the money, and not only the instalment, were paid into my hands at the expiration of the time I had acceded to await.

The Governor departed in hot haste to Yeddo, and returned to me as the clock struck the hour appointed. He stated the Minister would inevitably be at Yokohama in a few hours, but I replied that under no circumstances would I receive any Japanese authority, whatever might be his rank, unless he came preceded by the indemnities. No Minister, however, arrived from Yeddo, but I received a further written communication, a copy of which is inclosed. Mr. Eusden, the Japanese Secretary of this Legation, was summoned by the Governor to receive a communication, of which he furnished me with a report, herewith inclosed.

And Mr. Winchester, in the meanwhile, reported to me the substance of an interview held by the Governor with the Consular authorities, a copy of which I have also the honour to inclose.

I then, without the slightest hesitation, proceeded to address Admiral Kuper, placing the solution of affairs in his hands. I have the honour to inclose a copy of my despatch.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that the money which had been agreed on to be paid to-morrow the 3rd instant (June 18), cannot be delivered on that day, owing to an unforeseen circumstance. Mr. Eusden to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir,

Yokohama, June 20, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that at the request of the Governor of Kanagawa I called on him this day, as he said he had a communication to make, which, as you had declined to receive any more official visits respecting the indemnity, he wished to be conveyed through me.

The purport of this interview, which lasted two hours, was that the Tycoon's Government had received orders from the Mikado not to pay the indemnity, which order they were bound to carry out, in the first place because it emanated from the Mikado, and secondly, because they feared an outburst of public indignation if not complied with; also if not carried out, the Tycoon might have to pay for it with his life.

The Governor further stated that Ogasawara Jewsio no Kami would enter into more particulars in regard to this matter, when he paid you his intended visit in a few days.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 4 in No. 48.

Consul Winchester to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir,

Kanagawa, June 20, 1863.

THIS morning I received a note from M. de Bellecourt, the French Minister, requesting me to give M. Van der Voo, his Delegate, any assistance which my experience might suggest, at a Conference to which the Governor had called all the foreign Consuls, at 10 A.M.

I assured M. Van der Voo, who presented the note, of my readiness to comply with M. de Bellecourt's request, stating at the same time that as yet I had not received the summons. Thinking it might have been taken to the residence of the Consular Interpreter, I promised to let him know before 10 whether I was to be present or not.

On learning at Mr. Dohmen's that no invitation to the Conference had been received for me there, I went to M. Van der Voo's house, and found he had just left. I called on M. de Bellecourt to inform him of the reason why I was unable to comply with his wishes. M. de Bellecourt, on hearing my statement, at once sent directions to M. Van der Voo to withdraw from a Conference to which the English Consul had not been invited, and on their receipt M. Van der Voo left the Custom-house.

About 11:45 a Government interpreter came to me with a message, to the effect that the Governor had not invited me to the Conference, presuming that I would be fully informed, through you, of the nature of the communication which he was to make to the other Consuls.

I have received from M. von Brandt the following account of the Governor's statement:—

After explaining the terms of the arrangement made with Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires on the 14th, he stated that, on the night of the 17th, he had received commands not to pay the money next day; but to inform the Chargé d'Affaires that Ogasawari Jewsio no Kami, one of the Gorogio, would come down on the 22nd to confer with Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires. That the Chargé d'Affaires was very angry, but had consented to two delays, the last expiring at 9 P.M. yesterday; and that the Governor had gone to Yeddo, but without result.

Yesterday the Gorogio received a letter from the Tycoon commanding them not to pay the money. It being impossible for the Gorogio to communicate with officers of inferior rank, the Governor of Foreign Affairs, Sawa Kansitziro, was directed to convey their wishes through Yohawa, one of the Vice-Governors of Kanagawa, who was then in Yeddo. This Vice-Governor had reported the commands of the Gorogio without delay, and the Governor had at once informed Mr. Eusden of its tenour, which was to the following effect:—

The Tycoon had every intention to pay, but if he did so, would immediately lose his life. The Tycoon was the friend, and the Mikado the enemy of foreigners. The latter had forbidden the Tycoon to pay, and the former was compelled to obey, or lose his position.

He (the Governor) did not know what Ogasawari Jewsio no Kami was to say to Colonel Neale, but in any case the orders were not to pay. Neither was the Governor aware when this member of the Gorogio would come down, for he was sick.

He (the Governor) certainly believed no indemnity would be paid, for the rumour of such an intention had spread through the country, and the loonins and bad people said, "Why pay the money to these poor fools, to these bad foreigners?"

The opinion of the Tycoon's Government was that the money ought to be paid, and the proof of this was that when Mr. Eusden took the ultimatum to Yeddo (6th April) the Tycoon, who was still there, ordered the Gorogio to do so (this extraordinary statement was twice re-affirmed in reply to questions put by M. von Brandt). On the way to Miako, however, the Tycoon had received a communication from his spiritual superior which had made him reflect.

Subsequently a great many things had occurred at Miako.

The Governor thought it his duty to inform the Consuls, because the Japanese Government had done nothing, and he would be very sorry if the British Admiral did anything.

On his return from the Conference, M. von Brandt called a meeting of Prussian subjects, to whom he communicated what had occurred.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 5 in No. 48.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Vice-Admiral Kuper.

Yokohama, June 20, 1863.

AS a happy termination to a long and patient exercise of moderation in my communications with the Japanese Government, upon the subject of the demands I have made upon the Japanese Ministers, under instructions from Her Majesty's Government, I had the honour to inform you by my despatch of the 14th instant, that Envoys sent down from Yeddo had at last definitively and in writing accepted, in the name of the Tycoon's Government, the pecuniary portion of the demands (exclusive of the separate demands on the Prince of Satsuma, left to be settled immediately afterwards); and that in faith of the explicit arrangements entered into, they had signed and sealed an obligatory bond, a copy of which I have transmitted to Her Majesty's Government.

The stipulations of this bond provided that the first instalment, consisting of 140,000 dollars, should be paid on the 18th instant.

It is with deep regret that I have now the honour to inform you that the Japanese Government has not only broken their faith in the most flagrant manner by failing to make any payments whatever up to this date, but that I have received official information through the local Japanese authorities that it is not the intention of the Japanese Government to pay the indemnities which a few days back they had solemnly engaged to liquidate.

All efforts at conciliatory diplomatic action which I have undeviatingly exercised having thus failed, I have the honour, in pursuance of our respective instructions, to request you to adopt such prompt coercive measures of reprisal, and such other measures as you may deem expedient, to punish in the first instance the Tycoon's Government for its flagrant breach of good faith, and calculated to bring them to a due sense of their engagements.

No. 49.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received August 27.)

Yokohama, June 24, 1863.

IN my preceding despatch of the 20th instant by this mail, I had the honour of laying before your Lordship the train of circumstances which conduced to my determination of immediately breaking off diplomatic relations with the Japanese authorities, and of my placing in the hands of Admiral Kuper the enforcement of the demands for reparation I had with so much patience and moderation urged upon the Japanese Ministers, under instructions from Her Majesty's Government.

Before proceeding to relate the proceedings of the Tycoon's Government since the date of my preceding despatch, I hasten at once to announce to your Lordship that I have received within the walls of Her Majesty's Legation the whole amount of the indemnities demanded by Her Majesty's Government from the Government at Yeddo, amounting to 110,000*l.* sterling, represented by 440,000 Mexican dollars; the reparation affixed for the families of the guards murdered at Her Majesty's Legation on the 26th of June is comprised in this amount.

The money is in course of formal delivery, and will occupy four days to count; but the whole is under charge of my own guard, and more than half the amount has already been shipped on board Her Majesty's ships at this anchorage.

The indemnities having been paid, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Ogasawara Jewasio no Kami, referred to, arrived on the 23rd instant from Yeddo; Her Majesty's gun-boat "Havoc" closely following the steamer in which he came. Immediately afterwards I received, in common with my colleagues, the written communication which it devolves upon me here to lay before your Lordship. I annex two other versions of this document from the original Japanese.

I quickly responded to this missive, as did my colleagues of France and of the United States.

I have resolved to deal with the now-declared intention of expelling us from this country as an unmeaning menace, so far as I have the immediate support of Her Majesty's fleet, and so long as Admiral Kuper is uninterruptedly enabled to afford me such support.

I must, however, candidly record that, but for the presence at this anchorage of so powerful a squadron (and the same opinion is doubtless entertained by my colleagues), we should, at the hour at which I write, forcedly have taken our leave of this country, pending the ulterior decisions of the Treaty Powers.

The attitude now assumed by my French colleague and myself is that of a defensive expectancy, while we are resolved to maintain our footing at this the principal port of Japan, where our own trade especially has progressed so prosperously; and I can perceive no immediate reason why we should not be enabled to preserve a continuous hold and footing at this port, with the combined resources of the British and French naval forces, and the small contingent of French land forces which are shortly expected from Shanghai.

I trust to be better enabled by the ensuing mail more accurately to define the present impenetrable situation of affairs, and the degree of peril with which our establishment in Japan is menaced.

I shall in the meanwhile, regardless of all threatening and collateral contingencies however serious, pursue my course to obtain by measures of arrangement or by coercive means the remaining reparation for past outrages which I have been instructed to obtain from the Japanese Government and from the Prince of Satsuma. To that work I shall devote myself so soon as the last dollar of the indemnity now in course of reception is secured on board Her Majesty's ships.

Inclosure 1 in No. 49.

The Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

(Translation from Dutch translation of Japanese despatch.)

I HAVE the honour to inform you that I have received full powers to settle as follows:—

I have been instructed by His Majesty the Tycoon, who is now at Miako, and who received this order from the Mikado, to close the opened ports and to remove the subjects of Treaty Powers, as our nation does not wish to have any relations with them; thus this matter will be discussed with you afterwards.

With respect and consideration,

9th of 5th month of 3rd year of Bung-kew (24th June, 1863).

(Signed) OGASAWARA JEWSIO NO KAMI.

(Translation of the original Despatch in Japanese by M. von Siebold, with the aid of his Teacher.)

I hereby communicate the following in writing:—

Because the feelings of the inhabitants (of Japan) are inimical to foreign intercourse, I have received orders from His Majesty the Tycoon, now residing at Kioto, to remove foreigners and close the ports, leaving the negotiations of it in my hands.

Although I myself intend to communicate the particulars verbally to you, I now communicate this to you beforehand.

With respect and consideration,

9th of 5th month of 3rd year of Bung-kew (24th June, 1863).

(Signed) OGASAWARA JEWSIO NO KAMI.

I communicate with you by a despatch.

The orders of the Tycoon, received from Kioto, are to the effect that the ports are to be closed and the foreigners driven out, because the people of the country do not desire intercourse with foreign countries. The discussion of this has been entirely entrusted to me by His Majesty. I therefore send you this communication first, before holding a Conference respecting the details.

Respectful and humble communication.

Inclosure 2 in No. 49.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs.Yokohama, June 24, 1863.

THE Undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, has received, in common with his colleagues, and with extreme amazement, the extraordinary announcement which, under instructions from His Majesty the Tycoon, his Excellency has addressed to him.

Apart from the audacious nature of this announcement, which is unaccompanied by any explanations whatever, the Undersigned is bound to believe that both the Spiritual and Temporal Sovereigns of this country are totally ignorant of the disastrous consequences which must arise to Japan by their determinations thus conveyed through you to close the opened ports, and to remove therefrom the subjects of the Treaty Powers.

For himself, as Representative of Her Britannic Majesty, the Undersigned has to observe, in the first instance, that the Rulers of this country may perhaps still have it in their power to modify and soften the severe and irresistible measures which will, without the least doubt, be adopted by Great Britain most effectually to maintain and enforce its Treaty obligations with this country, and, more than this, to place them on a far more satisfactory and solid footing than heretofore, by speedily making known and developing any rational and acceptable plans directed to this end, which may be at present concealed by His Majesty the Tycoon or by the Mikado, or by both, to the great and imminent peril of Japan.

It is therefore the duty of the Undersigned solemnly to warn the Rulers of this country that when the decision of Her Majesty's Government, consequent upon the receipt of your Excellency's announcement, shall have in due course been taken, the development of all ulterior determinations now kept back will be of no avail.

The Undersigned in the meanwhile has to inform your Excellency, with a view that you may bring the same to the knowledge of His Majesty the Tycoon, who will doubtless make the same known to the Mikado, that the indiscreet communication now made through your Excellency is unparalleled in the history of all nations, civilized or uncivilized; that it is, in fact, a declaration of war by Japan itself against the whole of the Treaty Powers, and the consequences of which, if not at once arrested, it will have speedily to expiate by the severest and most merited chastisement.

With respect and consideration.

Sir,

Yokohama, June 24, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that this morning, at one hour after midnight, I was verbally informed that the Japanese Government purposed immediately to pay the indemnities, and requesting to be informed at what hour the money might be brought to this Legation.

I replied that I would be prepared to receive the payments at 6 A.M., provided the whole amount of 440,000 dollars was brought together at one time, as the arrangements entered into with regard to its payment by instalments was null and void, and could not be renewed in consequence of breach of good faith of the Japanese Government.

I was assured that the whole amount would now be paid, and at 5 A.M., an hour before the time affixed, several carts arrived laden with dollars, which are in course of due reception. Under these circumstances I hasten to state that it will be desirable that coercive operations on the part of the squadron under your command should be arrested, while I enter upon communications with the Tycoon's Ministers for the satisfactory settlement of the remaining portion of the demands.

I HAVE the satisfaction to inform your Lordship that the whole of the indemnity money, amounting to 110,000*l.* sterling, represented by 440,000 Mexican dollars, which I accepted at the average rate of exchange of 5*s.* per Mexican dollar, has been received and embarked in equal parts on board Her Majesty's ships "Euryalus," "Encounter," and "Pearl." A trifling expenditure has necessarily been incurred in shroffing and preparing the money for embarkation.

I purpose requesting Admiral Kuper to direct the conveyance of the treasure to Hong Kong, there to remain in custody of the Commissary-General until I shall receive your Lordship's instructions respecting its disposal.

I furnished a receipt to the Japanese authorities, of which I have the honour to inclose a copy.

NOTWITHSTANDING the present apparent tranquillity trade does not revive. Large transactions were concluded a few weeks ago, the native traders selling off their stocks of produce at greatly reduced prices, and buying foreign goods, of which they thought it desirable to lay in a supply.

The Treasury showed the example in this proceeding by getting rid of large quantities of produce held in monopoly by them (and so known as Treasury cargo), hitherto sold only to the Chinese Guild, in spite of frequent endeavours on the part of the Consuls to break through the system.

Want of money has unmasked their assertions that they had no more than was necessary to fulfil old contracts with the Chinese, and led them to pass a barrier which neither Treaty stipulations nor desire for profit could before induce them to do. The quantities sold within a few weeks to foreigners have amounted in value to nearly 160,000 dollars.

I inclose a Memorandum (furnished me by a gentleman here) showing the descriptions and quantities sold and on hand. The articles "awabi" and "irico" are shell-fish greatly consumed in China. All efforts to procure copper have been hitherto unavailing.

Foreign Office, September 5, 1863.

YOUR conduct, as detailed in your despatches of the 20th and 24th of June, is approved by the Queen.

The entire payment of the indemnity required by the Tycoon is a proof that the Japanese are not regardless of our friendship.

The punishment of the murderers of Mr. Richardson will, I conclude from your despatch of the 24th of June, have been exacted before this time from Prince Satsuma.

The insolent intimation to foreigners to leave Japan has been properly answered by you, as well as by the Representatives of France and of the United States.

But the mysteries of Japanese intrigue, and of the hostilities which are said to be pretended, and may turn out to be real, cannot be fathomed at this distance, and Her Majesty's Government will not trammel you with needless or unsuitable instructions.

I am glad to find that you have on the spot so friendly and able a colleague as the French Minister, and that the Admiral derives such valuable assistance from the French Admiral.

It is very desirable that all the foreign Representatives should act harmoniously together, whether in peace or war.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received September 14.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, July 11, 1863.

HER Majesty's Consul at Hakodadi has recently transmitted to me two voluminous and interesting reports respecting passing political events and current rumours in this country, drawn up with much zeal and assiduity by Mr. Student Interpreter Lowder.

Press of time impedes my transmitting to your Lordship longer extracts than those which I send by this occasion.

I have, &c.

Inclosure in No. 54.

Extracts from a Report by Mr. Lowder on the present State of Affairs in Japan.

THE merchants and common people in Hakodadi are, for the most part, firm friends of the foreigners. Three years ago they were very much displeased at the arrival of so many "tojins" (foreigners). During these three years, however, they have prospered and made so much money, that they have become strongly attached to us, and if it were not for restraints put upon them by their own Government, trade and mercantile business would be carried on in a way hitherto unsurpassed for profit and friendly feeling.

Those who formerly earned a scanty living by the most menial and degrading services are now the owners of large shops and godowns, and are daily making their fortunes. All this they attribute to intercourse with foreigners.

Nor are these friendly feelings confined to the people actually in Hakodadi. Thirty miles in the country the same opinions are expressed, not openly, as the farmers are afraid of being reported to the Government, but among friends and intimate acquaintances these opinions are freely put forward and discussed; and the good feeling entertained by these poor people towards foreigners has been experienced again and again, and often proved by their readiness to do all in their power to make those foreigners comfortable who go into the country either on pleasure excursions or for botanical purposes.

These friendly feelings have been also professed by several yaconins, who have known foreigners intimately. Many of them are strongly attached to us, our manners and customs, and have even gone so far as to say that in case of a war breaking out between the two nations they would not fight against their friends.

The Japanese are wholly dependent upon rice for their living. The wealth of the Government and of the Daimios depends upon the crops they gather in during the season. For some time past the Government has levied heavy taxes upon the Daimios in order to fortify their country. At the same time the Daimios have been storing up their rice in case of hostilities breaking out. The natural consequence of these deductions is, that their income has been gradually decreasing, and at the present time they complain very bitterly against the Government. They say, "We have given you all you require of us, but we see no improvements. Japan is not fortified, and you tell us you are not ready for war."

This scarcity of rice affects the working classes also no less than the Daimios. In many places the former are almost starved. The lower officials also, after expending a large portion of their small income in clothing (for they are obliged always to appear in silk), find that they have barely sufficient left to provide themselves with daily food.

There are some who attribute these difficulties solely to the Government. Others trace back the primary cause to the arrival of foreigners in Japan, saying that if foreigners had not come there would have been no fear of a war, and consequently no reason for the Daimios to store up their rice. The former, again, argue that the policy pursued by the Japanese Government towards foreigners has been such as to justify a war, and therefore maintain that the Government is responsible for all the present difficulties.

Again, the merchants and some few of the Daimios have gained so much money by their intercourse with European nations that they are very desirous that foreigners should remain in the country, and one or two of the latter have requested the permission of Government to open their ports to foreigners. They have in every case received the permission, but with a conditional clause, viz., that a Government Custom-house shall be established at such a port, and that all trade shall be carried on through the Government officials.

From the foregoing remarks it may be gathered that, of the two factions, that which is favourable to foreigners is by far the most numerous.

On the 9th of the 3rd month Takemoto Kai no Kami (Ometské), Matsdaira Iwami no Kami (Governor of Kanagawa), and Owari Sama, having assembled the members of the Gorogio, met together in Yeddo to discuss what course should be pursued with regard to the demands of the English Government.

Owari Sama, being the first in rank, spoke as follows:—

“We are here assembled to discuss the question of entering upon a foreign war. The English have made a claim upon our Government for 3,000,000 dollars; they say if we do not pay this sum they will fight us. I have received instructions from the Mikado as to the course he wishes us to pursue. All the Daimios are at the present time very poor; and although we might carry on a war of a year or two, after this period our stores would be exhausted.

“It is impossible under these circumstances to begin hostilities with foreign nations. The Americans were the first to make a Treaty with Japan. They profess to have come here for the purpose of trading with our country, and pretend to entertain very friendly feelings towards us. I have therefore been ordered by the Mikado to request the American Minister to represent to the English authorities that we consider their demand upon the Government for indemnity for an outrage committed by Satsuma very unjust; that as nothing has been further from our thoughts than a war with foreign Powers, we are wholly unprepared to fight; and to request that the same friendly intercourse which we have enjoyed since their arrival may long continue to exist between us.

“The Gorogio have been assured by the American Minister that it is his firm opinion that these arguments, coming through him, will avail to delay the English from beginning hostilities.

“We do not know yet whether his conjectures are correct, but he begs us to put faith in his assertions. He may be deceived; the English seem as eager to fight, and as difficult to be restrained, as Satsuma himself.

“Be this as it may, there is no immediate danger of a war. We have been deeply insulted by the English, and must avenge the honour of our nation. Return, therefore, to your countries, and store up as much rice and provisions of all kinds as you can collect. Let no rice leave your territories, and turn all your saleable commodities into money. By this means we shall, in a few years, be enabled to drive the barbarians from our country.

“The Mikado has, moreover, ordained that Yokohama must be closed, and foreigners only permitted to reside at Nagasaki and Hakodadi. To effect this end without a war will be very difficult. Every artifice must be resorted to to induce them to leave. The members of the Gorogio must be careful and wise, and must not give up until they have exhausted every argument they can put forward to bring about the desired end without having recourse to arms.

Yokohama, July 12, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to transmit a copy of a despatch addressed to me by Mr. Consul Winchester, relative to the circumstances attending the firing into a steamer under United States' colours, named the “Pembroke,” by two Japanese armed vessels belonging to the Prince of Nagato.

Matsdaira Daizen no Daiboo, Prince of Nagato, is one of those Daimios of this country who has been consistently inimical to foreigners. He is known as the intimate friend of the Prince of Satsuma, and as the enemy of the reigning Tycoon and his Dynasty. In my despatch of the 23rd of February of this year I had the honour to transmit to your Lordship a copy of a remarkable letter addressed by this Daimio to the Tycoon expressive of his repugnance to foreign intercourse. His territories are situated in the southern extremity of the Island of Nippon; and one of his castles is situated at Hangi Tokuyama, on the sea-coast, and the other at Futziu, in the Straits of Van der Capellen.

Immediately upon this event having been made known to Mr. Pruyn, the United States' sloop of war "Wyoming," which was at this anchorage, is about to leave, ostensibly for Nagasaki, but I am informed, upon the best authority, to the locality where the outrage was committed, with the object of seizing the two vessels which had fired at the "Pembroke."

Sir,

Kanagawa, July 11, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that one of the Governors of Yeddo arrived here yesterday to give information of an event which has taken place in the Inland Sea.

I was requested to be present at the Custom-house this morning at 10 A.M., when the Governor from Yeddo stated that an American ship on the 10th day of the 5th Japanese month (25th June) entered the Bay of Nagato, and was fired into by two men-of-war belonging to the Prince of Nagato; after which the American vessel went away.

A rough report of this occurrence was received from the officers of the Prince of Nagato resident at Simonoséki, and was by the Governor of that town forwarded to Kioto and Yeddo. This occurrence has been communicated to the United States' Minister here, and further inquiry will be at once made into the subject.

It is believed that the vessel was the little American steamer "Pembroke" on her way from this port to Shanghae, via Nagasaki and the Inland Sea.

My Lord,

Yokohama, July 13, 1863.

I HAVE the satisfaction of transmitting herewith to your Lordship the letter of apology addressed to me by the Japanese Government, expressive of regret at the murders and outrages committed in this country upon British subjects during the course of last year.

I transmit this paper in original Japanese, accompanied by a literal translation, as well as by a translation of the Dutch version.

Thus the demands I have been instructed to make upon the Government at Yeddo have been happily brought to a satisfactory and successful issue; not, however, without the most persistent efforts on my part to resist all difficulties and obstructions opposed by the distracted Government of this country at so serious a crisis.

In respect to the apology, however expedient I had deemed it to abstain from being over-exacting as to the terms in which it should be expressed,—especially as the payment at last, without comment, of the indemnity was of itself an acknowledgment of the justice of the reparation demanded,—still I was under the necessity of twice declining to accept two other written apologies tendered to me, as in translation they were obscure and undefined.

The third I conceive to be clear and acceptable; and it remains for me to trust it will be found sufficiently satisfactory by Her Majesty's Government.

Last year at the British Legation in Yeddo a wicked and murderous act took place. Again, on the tokaido a British subject was murdered. Such unfortunate affairs were for us highly to be regretted. Thus we hope that affairs likely to break off the intercourse between the two countries may not again arise. We desire to inform you thus much.

Respectful and humble communication.

Yokohama, July 13, 1863.

THE demands which Her Majesty's Government have made upon the Government at Yeddo as reparation for outrages committed upon British subjects having now been fully satisfied, I have the honour to report to your Lordship that unless any unforeseen incidents should intervene, I purpose, within a few days, to execute my instructions in respect to the Prince of Satsuma, which a combination of circumstances rendered it necessary to retard until the other demands had been acceded to.

Vice-Admiral Kuper has kindly offered to accommodate me and some of the members of this Legation speaking Japanese on board his flag-ship. I have deemed it advisable to be present when communications are opened with the Prince of Satsuma. The veil which has hitherto hidden from us the real sentiments and intentions of this Chief and other powerful Daimios of this Empire, from whom we have been so scrupulously secluded by the Tycoon's Government, will, I trust, in some measure be removed.

The Admiral purposes to proceed with his flag-ship and the greater portion of his squadron, leaving the "Encounter" and two smaller vessels at this anchorage. Yokohama, under the political circumstances which have of late sprung up, by which the Tycoon's and Mikado's parties are fully occupied in their rival contentions, has by a strange anomaly been voluntarily left to be defended by the British and French Admirals, and is at present in no degree menaced with danger from molestation or attack.

Sir,

Foreign Office, September 22, 1863.

HER Majesty's Government accept as satisfactory the apology of the Japanese Government for the murderous outrages committed last year on British subjects, which is inclosed in your despatch of the 13th of July; and they approve your having consented to the terms in which it is drawn up.

Foreign Office, September 22, 1863.

YOUR despatches to the 13th of July have been received and laid before the Queen.

I have the satisfaction of informing you that Her Majesty's Government approve your conduct as reported in these despatches, and that they are glad to find that you have obtained the indemnity and the apology which you were instructed to require.

You will thank the French Admiral and Chargé d'Affaires for their judicious co-operation.

No. 60.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received September 26.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, July 28, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to transmit, for the information of your Lordship, copies of a correspondence which has taken place between Vice-Admiral Kuper and myself upon the subject of the departure of the squadron for the territories of the Prince of Satsuma.

I have, &c.
(Signed) EDWD. ST. JOHN NEALE.

Inclosure 1 in No. 60.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Vice-Admiral Kuper.

Sir,

Yokohama, July 15, 1863.

THE demands which I have been instructed to make upon the Government of the Tycoon at Yeddo, as a penalty upon Japan for murders and outrages committed upon British subjects, having been fully satisfied, it becomes my duty to carry out the remaining portion of my instructions, which relate to the reparation to be sought from the Daimio Prince of Satsuma, whose adherents were in one case the perpetrators of those outrages, but whose subjection to the Tycoon's authority is avowedly restricted.

The moderation and patience which has hitherto attended my relations with the Japanese Government has resulted so far in the successful accomplishment of my instructions; I deem it, however, to be incumbent upon me to lose no further time in discussions with the Japanese Ministers with regard to the dependence or independence with which the Prince of Satsuma may be subjected to or be invested.

I have, therefore, the honour to request you to direct such portion of the squadron under your command as you may deem expedient to proceed, as early as practicable, to the territory of the Prince of Satsuma, with the view that I may be enabled to prefer the demands I have been instructed to make, and, in the event of a refusal on the part of the Prince to accede to those demands, that I may be in a position to call upon you to adopt such coercive measures as you may consider best calculated to enforce their acceptance.

I think it highly desirable that I should be present when the demands are preferred, as the Prince of Satsuma may not improbably make communications of a political character, which, in such case, it would be necessary for me to take into consideration before or during the continuance of coercive operations.

With this view I have the honour to request you to be so good as to direct that accommodation be afforded to me on board the squadron under your command, as well as for four or five members of this Legation, nearly all of whom speak the Japanese language, and might be usefully distributed, as you may deem convenient, over the ships.

I have, &c.

Sir; "Euryalus," at Yokohama, July 17, 1863.
IN reply to your letter of the 15th instant, I have the honour to inform you that arrangements will be made for a portion of the squadron under my command to proceed to the territory of the Prince of Satsuma, and for the reception on board of yourself and such members of the Legation as you may consider necessary to accompany you.

No. 61.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received September 26.)

(Extract.)

Yokohama, July 29, 1863.

AT the close of the last mail I was enabled to address your Lordship for the purpose of transmitting the written apology of the Tycoon's Government for outrages committed during the course of last year upon British subjects. The money indemnities had already been paid, and thus my instructions, as far as they regarded exclusively the Government at Yeddo, had been successfully carried out.

At this moment the most unexpected intelligence was received here that an American merchant steamer proceeding from hence by the Inland Sea to Shanghae had been fired into with heavy artillery, by some armed vessels belonging to the Daimio Prince of Nagato, Matsdaira Daizen no Daiboo, in the narrow straits of Simonoseki. The United States' steam-sloop "Wyoming," Captain Macdougall, at anchor in this harbour, immediately proceeded to the scene of this occurrence, with the intention of boarding and seizing the steamer and brig bearing the Japanese flag above referred to.

At the period that this outrage was enacting, the Netherlands corvette of 16 guns "Medusa," quitted Nagasaki for Yokohama with the Dutch Consul-General on board. Information had been received at Nagasaki of the "Pembroke" having been fired into; but Captain de Cazembroot, commanding the "Medusa," nevertheless determined upon proceeding by the Inland Sea and through the Straits of Van der Capellen or Simonoseki, judging it to be little probable that the Prince of Nagato would venture to fire upon a ship of war, more especially bearing the flag of a nation long allied in terms of friendship with Japan. The "Medusa," however, upon her entry into the Straits received the concentrated fire of eight batteries, and of the armed vessels which had fired into the "Pembroke."

During the interval further intelligence reached Yokohama that the French aviso "Kien-chang," bearing a pennant, and bound from hence to Shanghae, had, when at anchor in the Straits, been fired upon by the same vessels and batteries, and hulled in seven places, narrowly escaping destruction by slipping her cable, and running out by the Bungo Channel.

Upon receipt of this information at Yokohama, the French Admiral Jaurès, within the space of twenty-four hours, departed with his flag-ship the "Semiramis," and gun-boat "Tancrede."

The destruction of one of the batteries, guns, and munitions of war, by the French Admiral, is minutely described in a semi-official letter addressed by the interpreter attached to the flag-ship to the editor of the local paper, upon the return of the "Semiramis," which was absent a week from this anchorage, a copy of which I have the honour likewise to inclose.

In the meanwhile the United States' sloop "Wyoming" returned, having entered the Straits, engaged the batteries and ships, doing much damage to the latter, but obliged, notwithstanding, to return without having accomplished the full object of her mission.

An accurate statement, as I am assured, of the operations of the "Wyoming" is contained in the inclosed extract from the "Commercial News."

Subsequent to the departure of the French Admiral in his flag-ship, Admiral Kuper dispatched Her Majesty's ship "Coquette," on the 20th, to communicate with Admiral Jaurès, and to be at his disposal in case of need. The "Coquette" was not fallen in with, however, by the "Semiramis," on her return, and at the hour at which I am writing has not returned. It is a subject of much speculation, therefore, whether she has entered the Straits, been fired at, and engaged the batteries, thus completing the series of outrages and insults directed against the flags of three of the Treaty Powers.

In the meanwhile it became imperative, in the opinion of my colleagues of France, the United States, the Netherlands, and myself, that we should meet in conference with reference to these events; and the result of our deliberations, unanimously agreeing to suggest a conjoint action on the part of the Naval Commanders, is set forth in the Minutes a copy of which I have the honour to inclose.

In accordance with one of the Resolutions adopted, I have transmitted a copy of our proceedings to the Gorogio at Yeddo, accompanied by some observations on my own part, a copy of which I have likewise the honour herewith to inclose to your Lordship.

In common with my colleagues I feel utterly unable satisfactorily to penetrate the mysterious policy and proceedings of the Tycoon's Government, if, indeed, any defined policy with regard to foreigners is determined upon.

In words, the Tycoon's Envoys have assured my colleagues of France and myself that the Mikado's edict of expulsion, conveyed to the Representatives of the Treaty Powers as a matter of obligation by the Tycoon, was a dead letter with respect to all action in regard to it. The defence of Yokohama has been left to the unrestricted care of the British and French Admirals, so far so, indeed, that the Admirals have been applied to by the local authorities with reference to the changes of post and movements of their own Japanese guards in this vicinity.

Trade is conducted uninterruptedly, and provisions are freely supplied to the fleet at Yokohama and to the foreign inhabitants. Pilots are readily supplied when required by the ships of war which have proceeded to chastise the outrages committed by the Daimio of Nagato. Those pilots have discharged their functions under the destructive fire of the batteries manned by their own countrymen. Public works connected with the foreign Settlements are scrupulously continued without cessation. And finally (though above all), the indemnity money, amounting to the considerable sum which it does, was quietly paid to me without the firing of a shot. And the apology required rendered under no influence of immediate pressure.

On the other hand, the Tycoon's Ministers carefully abstain, on all occasions, to declare or define of whom consist the hostile party. No expression of regret has escaped them in regard to the enormous outrages and insults enacting in the Inland Sea; no assurances that they shall cease; nay, further, when questioned recently by my colleague of France as to the course which would probably be pursued by the Tycoon upon hearing of the outrages which had been committed, the Envoy replied that the Prince of Nagato might very probably have been ordered to fire upon all foreign ships, and that in such case his conduct would be approved, and that, therefore, the Tycoon would be bound to assent to such approval, at least in appearance. Steam-ships and munitions of war continue to be purchased by the Tycoon's Government. Troops are conveyed to Osaka, for the ostensible purpose of protecting the Tycoon himself, but it is not said against what enemies. In general, all confidence with foreign Representatives is withheld.

Amidst these conflicting facts and perplexing circumstances, your Lordship will readily conceive that I cannot possibly or with prudence lay down for my guidance any very defined course of action with respect to the contending parties in Japan. So long as trade is uninterrupted and the Settlements unmolested, I will not evoke or forcedly precipitate the dubious action of the Tycoon's Government at Yeddo, until, at least, it is indubitably hostile.

Inclosure 1 in No. 61.

Extract from the "Japan Herald."

To the Editor of the "Japan Herald."

Dear Sir,

I AM authorized by Admiral Jaurès, Commander-in-chief of the French forces in China and Japan, to communicate to you the following account of the proceedings of His Imperial Majesty's ships "Semiramis" and "Tancrede," and my own experiences in the recent retaliatory visit of those ships to the Straits of Simonoseki.

We left Yokohama on the morning of the 16th, and arrived in the Bungo entrance to the Inland Sea on the morning of Sunday, the 19th. We anchored in the channel and prepared for action.

Early on the morning of Monday we ran, under slow steam, into the entrance of the Simonoseki Channel, looking out for the batteries. When about two miles from the Nagato side of the channel we saw the flashes and smoke of two guns fired from the midst of the trees, and soon after made out Cho-fhoo, the castle of Saki-noski, a member of Matsudaira Daizen no Daiboo's family, and on proceeding a little further on, on the same i.e., northern, or Nagato side, a battery of five 25-pounder guns. The Admiral decided upon the destruction of this battery, and not of the castle. We then came to anchor about three-quarters of a mile from the battery, near the village of Tanoura, in the Province of Bouzen. When anchored, it was found that the current put us stem on to the battery. About half-an-hour was spent in putting springs on our cable, and a hawser to a Japanese junk moored at some distance from us.

During all this time the Japanese gunners remained at their guns, not even pointing them at us; had they done so, they might have raked us fore and aft; we therefore thought that the guns were fixed in the one position, viz., pointed up the narrowest part of the channel, but when we took the battery we found this not to be the case, the guns being perfectly mounted on good European-fashioned carriages. When broadside on, the frigate fired a 60-pounder rifle-ball, which went right over the battery. The second carried right into the middle of the parapet, and sent earthwork and stones, turf and sand-bags, flying around in every direction. Still no answer was returned by the Japanese.

We continued the bombardment till nearly 11 o'clock, sending in the shells every five minutes, and making beautiful practice. I was then sent on shore, in company with M. l'Abbé Girard, to the town of Tanoura to distribute the Proclamation of Admiral Jaurès to the effect that the country people had nothing to fear on that side, that he had come only to punish the Prince of Nagato for having fired into a vessel under the French flag, and inviting them to send provisions on board against payment.

We found our way to the house of the Mayor without difficulty, not being molested in any way by the people, who crowded round us in great numbers, and we were received by this official with all honours and politeness. He thanked us for the Proclamation, and in our presence sent it by a messenger to the Prince of Bouzen.

During this trip on shore I had heard both the frigate and the "Tancrede" recommence their fire, and on going on board I learned that the Admiral had ordered the "Tancrede" to run in towards Simonoseki, and that, when she came into the narrowest part of the passage, the battery opened fire upon her; our guns, however, soon silenced the battery. I saw one gun toppled over by a shell, and two or three Japanese gunners fly into the air. The "Tancrede" was hit in three places; one shot went into her hull, one into the mizen topmast, and one cut away the fore-topmast, which only stood then by the stays.

At noon, after the men's dinner, the Admiral ordered a landing, and I had the good luck to be ordered to accompany Captain Duquilliot, the Commander of the troops. We landed in all 250 men, 180 sailors and 70 Chasseurs of the 3rd Bataillon d'Afrique.

On nearing the shore to the right of the battery, protected from her by a projecting bluff, the boat's rifled gun sent a few shells into the bushes as a precaution, but nobody stirred. We landed in good order, and made, in three divisions, for the battery. After we had well entered into the bushes, we were attacked by the Japanese in several isolated troops of three or four, some with rifles, some with swords, but most with old Brown Bess, of Dutch manufacture. These lay concealed, aiming at us as we approached. They were immediately charged and bayoneted. Some few made a stand, but generally took to immediate flight. I think there must have been about twenty killed this way.

Passing through this brushwood, we came upon the battery. It was quite deserted. The parapet was all ploughed up by our shells. One gun lay upset; another had its truncheons knocked off, and pools of blood in all directions. The dead had all been carried away. In a hollow road behind the battery we found some clothes soaked with blood, and some accoutrements. The guns having been spiked, the Commandant ordered brushwood, mats, and all other inflammable materials to be placed under the gun-carriages, which were then fired. The powder-magazine was found outside the battery, in a very safe position in a hollow road. The powder and all the ammunition was thrown into the sea.

While this was going on in the battery, M. Layrle, Chef d'Etat-Major of Admiral Jaurès, advanced by the right of the battery (keeping up a continual fire with Japanese hid in the bushes) to a village called Aidaga-mome, which was abandoned by the peasants, and evidently used as dwelling-places for the troops belonging to the batteries. In the middle of this town there was a large building a little way up the hill, half temple half palace like, in which there was found a great deal of powder and ammunition, which, having been fired by us, blew up with a tremendous noise just as we were re-embarking.

On entering the battery I went at once to the principal building, where I found a good quantity of Japanese armour and arms, but no one in the house. In looking about I found several Japanese translations of Dutch books on fortification and gunnery, one of which (which I have now in my possession) was marked at the page where it treats of attacking ships that are carried away by the current.

Having thus accomplished our object, destroyed the battery and guns, and also burned the village (the quarters of the soldiers), we re-embarked.

I must not forget to mention that during the re-embarkation the frigate, the "Tancred," and the boats' guns opened a heavy fire on some spot to the right of us, but hidden by the bushes. On going on board I learned that they had seen about 2,000 Regular Infantry, some men on horseback, and even field artillery, coming down upon us from Simonoseki by the road along the shore. They fired a few shells amongst them, which, exploding in their midst, did them considerable damage, and they speedily retreated.

We had in all three men wounded, belonging to the Chasseurs, two by musket-balls and one by a stab of a dagger of a Japanese who was lying wounded on the ground, and stabbed him as he passed by.

It is difficult to arrive at any estimate of the casualties of the Japanese, but there was abundant testimony in the batteries that their loss there must have been very considerable, besides that which the shell-practice, at a range of 3,000 yards, did upon their advancing column.

I remain, &c.

Inclosure 2 in No. 61.

Extract from the "Japan Commercial News" of July 24, 1863.

WE are indebted to the kindness and courtesy of D. de Graeff van Polsbroek, Esq., His Netherlands Majesty's Consul-General in Japan, for the following authentic account of the attack upon the "Medusa" in Simonoseki Bay; and to Captain de Casembroot, of the "Medusa," for the interesting map of the Bay of Simonoseki, which we publish this day for the information and gratification of our readers:—

"On the 9th instant His Netherlands Majesty's steam-ship 'Medusa' (16 guns) left Nagasaki on her way to Kanagawa by the Suo-o Nada or Inland Passage, and at some distance from Nagasaki she met His Imperial Majesty's despatch-boat 'Kien-chan,' Commander Lafond, who informed the 'Medusa' that she had been fired upon by the forts at Simonoseki and by two foreign-built vessels (one under the Japanese flag) lying in that harbour.

"The Captain of the 'Medusa' had previously decided to pass through the Inland Sea, and therefore had a Japanese pilot provided by the Governor of Nagasaki.

"On the morning of the 11th of July the 'Medusa' weighed anchor in the neighbourhood of Ay-sima, where she had awaited daylight to run into Simonoseki Straits. On entering this strait two blank shots were fired from one of the batteries, and were immediately answered by eight similar ones from the brig before the town. As yet the 'Medusa' did not think that these signals would be followed by any hostile act, more especially as the opposite shore of Kiu-siu was lined with native junks. Having approached the brig, she and a barque, without any flag, and a very heavily armed battery on the hill opened fire upon the 'Medusa.' Upon the brig ('Lanrick') flew the flag of the Daimio of Nagato—being a blue flag with three white balls in a triangle and a white stripe above; from the peak no flag flew. The two vessels lay behind a bank in about two fathoms of water, and therefore the 'Medusa' could not possibly approach them nearer than three cables' lengths. The 'Medusa,' after the manner of all ships of war, immediately responded to the forts and the ships with shot and shell.

"Steering slowly up the stream the 'Medusa' kept up a constant fire against the ships and batteries, the latter being all armed with heavy artillery (mostly 24-pounders and 6-inch shells). It was already discovered that there were six batteries at least. The 'Medusa' silenced the biggest of them, which mounted eight very heavy guns, but the others, which were behind trees and rocks on the heights, kept firing away upon her. A few well-directed shots from the 'Medusa' somewhat staggered the firing on board the two ships, but she got it all the heavier from the batteries on shore as she was steaming past within reach of them.

"She being exposed to the cross-fire of four batteries in front of Simonoseki, and the correct aim of the enemy's shot and shell having begun to tell on the hull of the 'Medusa,' the Commander was induced to give up all idea of sinking the two ships, which unfortunately were in too shallow water.

"It became now a matter of impossibility to return with effect the fire of all the batteries which fired on the 'Medusa,' and she being in doubt also as to the intentions of some batteries on the Kiu-siu side, she determined to make a dash through the Straits, firing as quickly as she could all the time. To prevent the great disaster of having her boiler, screw, or rudder hit by the large calibre of the enemies' shot, she determined to steam slowly through, answering the enemies' fire all the time.

"When it is considered that the 'Medusa' was under a heavy fire from seven batteries for an hour and a-half, it is wonderful that she did not sink, and that she has to deplore the loss of so few men killed.

"Of thirty-one enemies' shots, seventeen pierced the hull of the 'Medusa,' the remainder passing through her rigging and funnel; three 8-inch shells of the enemy burst on board. A 30-pounder shot killed three and wounded two men in one battery on board the 'Medusa.' A similar shot soon after struck a sailor of the first class commanding a gun, inflicting a mortal wound on him from which he died soon after. The Consul-General had a very narrow escape from being killed by this ball, which passed quite close to him. Another ball entered the starboard, smashing a pistol-rack and scattering splinters and balls in all directions, and wounding two sailors very severely; those are still in a dangerous state. This particular ball passed between the Captain and Midshipman Wissel, both having a narrow escape, but suffering only slight injuries from splinters. Lieutenant Thurkow and a non-commissioned officer also had a miraculous escape from another ball which entered the ship. The manner in which splinters and bolts flew about the ship was indescribable.

"Considering that three shells had exploded on board, and that seventeen balls had entered the ship and caused her much injury, it is astonishing that only four men were killed and five wounded.

"The orders of the Commander were carried out with the greatest coolness, and the men behaved very well—few of them having ever been under fire before.

"It is impossible to determine the loss of the enemy, but it must be considerable, as they mustered in great force in the batteries, and the 'Medusa's' grape-shot and 8-inch shells told with great effect among them, and must have caused great destruction in the batteries. All her shots which missed the batteries went into the town, whereas all the enemy's shots which missed the 'Medusa' went into the junks beyond her on the Kiu-siu side. In the broadest part the strait is about 1,200 Dutch yards wide, and in the narrowest about 900 yards wide."

We have been furnished the following account of the trip of the United States' steamer "Wyoming," by E. S. Benson, Esq., who was passenger on board:—

"Information having reached Yokohama on the 11th instant that the American steamer 'Pembroke' had been fired into by two Japanese armed vessels, Captain Mc Dougal immediately issued the necessary orders to prepare for sea. Coal and stores having been taken on board, we got under weigh at 5 o'clock on the morning of the 13th instant, entered the Bungo Channel on the 15th, and anchored at the Island of Hime Sima. The next morning (16th instant) we proceeded towards the Straits of Simonoseki, the western entrance of the Inland Sea. On the northern shore of the narrow passage is the Province of Nagato, governed by the Prince of Tchu-shu.

"Within the past year he purchased the steamer 'Lancefield' and brig 'Lanrick,' the former for 125,000 dollars, and the latter for about 25,000 dollars.

"On nearing the Straits a signal gun was fired from a masked battery on the northern shore, which was repeated by two others to the westward towards Simonoseki."

"Rounding the point on the southern side of the entrance, a barque, brig, and steamer were discovered lying at anchor close to the north shore; the steamer and the brig were immediately made out to be the 'Lancefield' and 'Laurick,' the barque's name we did not know. All the vessels were flying the Japanese flag at the peak, and the private colours of the Prince of Nagato at the main. We now steered directly for the vessels, when a battery of three guns on the northern shore, about 50 feet above the level of the sea, opened fire on us, cutting up the rigging between the main and mizen mast. We then ran up the American flag, and, still steaming on, were fired on by a battery of four guns: to this we replied with a broadside.

"We were now rapidly approaching the vessels; the barque was close in-shore; about fifty yards outside of her, and one length ahead, lay the brig another length ahead; and fifty yards outside the brig was the steamer.

"The main channel was outside of all these vessels. Captain McDougal gave orders to run the 'Wyoming' between the steamer and the brig. As we got abreast of the barque she opened a broadside fire from three guns; in less than two minutes we were abreast of the brig and received her fire from four brass 23-pounders. We now had the steamer on our port side, her guns, like the others, being trained on the channel, she fired a few swivels and small arms only. In passing we gave then all our guns on both sides hulling both the brig and steamer. Keeping close round the bows of the steamer we stood over towards the southern shore receiving a constant fire from six batteries, the steamer, brig and barque. We here got aground, but backed off without much difficulty. The steamer 'Lancefield' having steam up, slipped her cable, keeping close along the northern shore, either with the intention of escaping or of running on shore to examine the damage caused by our first shots. The 'Wyoming' was now manœuvred into position and a 11-inch shell was planted in the steamer direct amidships, about one foot above the water line. In an instant, volumes of steam and smoke issued out of her fore and aft; her boiler was exploded. After dropping two more shells into her hull, the order was given to cease firing on the steamer, and to direct the shots upon the different batteries, the barque and the brig, all of which were loading and firing as rapidly as possible. Quite a number of shell exploded in the batteries, and considerable damage was done to the town.

"In passing out of the Straits we delivered a few very effective shots into the brig, and the last seen of her she was fast settling by the stern; the fire from the batteries was kept up throughout, but somewhat slackened on our return.

"By that time we had four men killed outright and seven wounded (one since died). The armament of the 'Wyoming' being only four 32-pounders and two pivot guns, opposed to six shore batteries of an average of three guns each, the barque six, the brig eight, and the steamer two; making in all, thirty-four guns, mostly 32-pounders,—Captain Mc Dougal very wisely concluded to withdraw from so unequal a contest and proceed to Yokohama for more force. The Captain, all his officers, and crew behaved with the utmost coolness and bravery. The 'Wyoming' was run into the midst of the enemy's vessels, receiving and returning broadsides at pistol range, at the same time sustaining a hot and continuous fire from shore batteries. When the successful shot struck the steamer our crew gave three hearty cheers. The action lasted one hour and ten minutes; we were hulled eleven times, and received twenty or thirty shots in the masts, rigging, and smoke-stack.

"One 32-pound shell came through, immediately below the tackles of the forward broadside gun, and exploding, killed one man and wounded five others."

Agreement entered into by the Representatives of France, the United States, Great Britain, and Holland, to take immediate measures for the Reopening of the Inland Sea.

LES Soussignés, Représentants au Japon de la France, des Etats Unis, de l'Angleterre, et des Pays Bas, se sont réunis le 25 Juillet, 1863, à Yokohama, à l'effet d'examiner l'état actuel des choses au Japon, et de prendre à cet égard une résolution.

Après discussion il a été convenu qu'il est indispensable pour le maintien des droits consacrés par les Traités conclus avec le Japon de procéder immédiatement à la réouverture de la Mer Intérieure, toujours pratiquée jusqu'à présent, et dont la libre circulation vient d'être inopinément interrompue par les agressions outrageantes dont le Daimio de Nagato s'est rendu coupable en faisant canonner des batteries érigées sur les côtés de ses États les bâtiments de commerce et de guerre de plusieurs des dites Puissances Contractantes, et qu'en conséquence il y a lieu d'inviter les Amiraux et autres officiers commandants les forces navales des Puissances ci-dessus désignées à prendre toutes mesures qu'il jugeront propres à amener ce résultat.

Dans ce but, aussi bien que dans l'intérêt de la protection de leurs nationaux dans les ports ouverts, les dits Représentants déclarent qu'il leur paraît nécessaire d'établir une action combinée des forces navales et militaires disponibles dans ces mers. Il est en outre convenu que le Gouvernement du Taïcoun sera informé de cette décision afin que ce Gouvernement soit mis à même de prendre immédiatement et activement, s'il le peut, les mesures nécessaires pour effectuer par ses propres moyens les objets seul indiquées, attendu que son action, si elle était aussi énergique et prompte que les circonstances actuelles l'exigent, pourrait dispenser les Agents des Puissances Contractantes de se livrer aux opérations dont les Soussignés ont exposé ci-dessus les motifs.

Inclosure 4 in No. 61.

Yokohama, July 28, 1863.

THE Undersigned has the honour to transmit to your Excellencies a translation of the resolutions arrived at by the Representatives of France, the United States, Great Britain, and the Netherlands in Japan, at a meeting held by them on the 25th July.

The outrages and insults which the Daimio of Nagato, Matsdaira Daizen no Daiboo, has ventured to undertake by firing into the ships of war of France, the United States, and the Netherlands, is looked upon by the Undersigned as an attempt to carry out the edicts of the Mikado, communicated through the Tycoon, for the expulsion of foreigners.

This will be resisted by a force the extent of which cannot at present be contemplated.

No reasonable man in Japan can doubt as to what must be, even in one year, the fate of this country if the outrageous and lawless attempt to cancel solemn Treaties by treacherous and violent acts is not immediately abandoned.

But if there are Daimios in Japan who do not understand that the solemn obligations imposed by Treaties cannot and never have been set aside by violence in any part of the world, the whole people of this country will suffer by the ignorance or unreasonable arrogance of those Daimios.

The Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Tycoon have, however, within the last few days, informed the Minister of France that the Tycoon's Government is able to punish Daimios who commit acts of war or other outrageous deeds. If so, let the Government with all speed destroy the batteries of the Daimio of Nagato and remove his guns.

But it is essential that the Tycoon's Government should perfectly understand that there are certain acts which, according to the law of all civilized nations, must instantly be resented, and above all others is an insult offered to a national flag.

Vessels under the flags of the United States, of France, and the Netherlands, have been successively fired into, and men have been killed and wounded among their crews; and the ships of those nations have inflicted a preliminary punishment upon this Daimio and his vessels and forts. No delay is admissible in the destruction of these batteries. The first foreign vessel fired upon by this Daimio, namely, the American vessel "Pembroke," was on the 26th June; thus thirty days have now elapsed during which the Tycoon's Government might have arrested the outrages of this Daimio if enabled to do so.

With respect and consideration.

My Lord,

Yokohama, August 25, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to transmit a translation of a letter addressed to me by the Tycoon's Ministers, informing me of His Majesty's return to Yeddo.

It is the prevailing belief that the Tycoon left Miako much against the will of the Mikado, and that he eventually resorted to some show of menace by the array of his personal troops and guards before he effected his object of returning to his capital.

Yokohama, August 26, 1863.

I HAD the honour to inform your Lordship, upon closing the last mail, that I was on the point of embarking on board the flag-ship of Vice-Admiral Kuper, and of proceeding with the squadron under his command to Kagosima, the capital of the Prince of Satsuma. I deemed it right to acquaint the Tycoon's Government of my intentions; and I accordingly addressed them a letter, a copy of which I have the honour to inclose. I promptly received a reply, soliciting me, at least, to postpone the projected expedition. I had hardly received this written communication, a copy of which is likewise inclosed, when a Vice-Minister came down from Yeddo and sought an interview with me, on the 5th instant. Far from urging further arguments to dissuade me from the intention of proceeding to the territory of Satsuma, he stated that the Tycoon's Government purposed sending a Japanese steamer with us, having a high official on board. No steamer, however, appeared then or at any subsequent period.

The squadron, consisting of Her Majesty's ships "Euryalus," "Pearl," "Perseus," "Argus," "Coquette," "Racehorse," and "Havoc," weighed from its anchorage at Yokohama on the 6th instant.

I was accompanied by most of the members of Her Majesty's Legation, distributed over Her Majesty's ships,—their more or less proficiency in the Japanese language, it was deemed, might be highly useful, and the result has confirmed this expectation.

Under easy steam and sail Her Majesty's squadron reached the entrance of the Bay of Kagosima on the evening of the 11th instant, and anchoring-ground was found about 10 P.M., after some difficulty, in the extreme depth of water which was found generally to prevail in that noble bay.

Early in the morning of the ensuing day the first boat, containing two officials, came off from the shore to the flag-ship. They inquired the nationality of the ships, whether it was our intention to proceed farther into the bay, whether a native pilot was on board, what number of guns the ship carried, and other questions of this nature, which, having been replied to, the boat returned to Kagosima.

Her Majesty's squadron, a few hours afterwards, weighed and cast anchor off the batteries of the town. A second boat with four other officials came off immediately to the flag-ship, and stated that it was understood to be the intention to deliver a letter addressed to the Prince of Satsuma. My despatch, as originally written, a copy of which I have already had the honour to transmit to your Lordship,* and amended only in respect to the altered dates, together with a supplementary letter announcing the Admiral's arrival with the squadron, and my own presence on board, were delivered to the officials, who undertook to return, with a receipt, copies of both of which, in their amended form, I have the honour to inclose.

This they did in a few hours, and at the same time informed me that the Prince of Satsuma was not at Kagosima, but at a residence inland, about fifty miles distant; the officials again came on board, and stated that they were charged by the three members composing the Prince of Satsuma's Council to request that Admiral Kuper and myself would come on shore, where a building for the reception of foreigners had been specially arranged for our interview. Great anxiety was evinced that we should accede to this proposal; and they urged that it would be impossible to commit to writing all that might be discussed. Admiral Kuper fully concurred with me in replying that the only business which had brought us to Kagosima was fully set forth in the despatch I had presented, and which was clearly conveyed in three languages—English, Japanese, and Dutch. We declined to proceed on shore, or enter into any discussions. The officials departed much disconcerted that we should not land. Viewed by the light of the occurrences which followed, it may be well assumed that treachery and violence was in store for us had we unsuspectingly fallen into their designs.

On the 13th instant several officials, one of whom was stated to be of superior rank, again came alongside the flag-ship, accompanied by numerous two-sworded adherents in several boats. They entered into a long parley before coming on board; requested to know whether I would personally receive the high official; of this they were assured. They then requested permission that he should be accompanied on deck by at least forty of his adherents, which was acceded to by the Admiral, who at the same time directed a guard of marines to be drawn up, with fixed bayonets, facing the gangway by which they entered. Upon reaching the deck these armed retainers of Satsuma were disposed of in single file along the line of guns, and at once assumed their natural position of sitting in a kneeling attitude. The high personage referred to then finally decided upon ascending the ship's side. I received him, the Admiral being present, when he exhibited the utmost agitation and confusion; he was speechless; when one of his attendant officers stated that he was charged to speak for his chief; and that he had to inform me that he was the bearer of the written reply to my despatch, but that they had some serious matters to add in connection with it.

No sooner had he proceeded thus far, when it was found that a boat, waving a flag, had reached the ship and communicated something, which, when made known to the chief official, caused him to rise suddenly and leave the cabin, return to it, and leave it again. Finally, I was informed by him that he must return to the shore immediately, as he had received a message to the effect that a mistake had been made in the despatch, which must be rectified; upon which he hurriedly left with the undelivered despatch, if, indeed, he had been the bearer of any such.

During the interval occupied by these communications the batteries on shore were constantly manned, and the guns diligently trained and pointed at the ships of the squadron, and especially on the flag-ship, the whole of them being within range.

These and other suspicious circumstances induced the Admiral to determine upon shifting the anchorage of the squadron to as convenient a position, though still partially within range, as the extreme depth of the water would admit.

As the Japanese officials were descending the ship's side, the anchors of the squadron were weighing.

Contrary to my expectation, the official last referred to returned late in the evening to the flag-ship at the new anchorage, and delivered into my hands the answer to my despatch preferring the demands. A careful translation of that document I have here the honour to lay before your Lordship. Having no further communication to make to me, the bearer of the letter left the ship.

I deemed the general tone and purport of this reply of Satsuma's Councillors to be utterly unsatisfactory. It raised the question whether, according to the laws of Japan, a Daimio, travelling with his retinue, is not fully justified in beating or thrusting off the road all persons who encounter him on the highway. It raised also the question whether or not the Tycoon was free from blame for not having inserted in the Treaty these assumed and extravagant privileges. The indemnity demanded, it is said in the reply, will be an after consideration, when it had been decided whether the Tycoon or the Daimio was to blame.

* See Inclosure 6 in No. 28.

Such being the general purport of the reply which I had received, I considered it to be my unavoidable and immediate duty to call upon Admiral Kuper at once to resort to such preliminary measures of coercion, by reprisals or otherwise, as he might deem most expedient and best calculated to arouse the Prince of Satsuma to a sense of the serious nature of our mission.

I have the honour to inclose a copy of my despatch addressed in that sense to the Admiral.

A relation of what ensued I can best convey to your Lordship by laying before you the succinct and graphic despatch which Admiral Kuper addressed to me at the close of the operations which were enacted.

It would be unbecoming in me to indulge in expressions of admiration at the able and gallant manner in which the operations, suddenly rendered necessary, were determined upon, and immediately carried out by the ships of Her Majesty's squadron, under the immediate command and direction of Vice-Admiral Kuper, upon whom it devolves to bring to the knowledge of Her Majesty's Government the spirited incidents and all-sufficient results which attended the combat at Kagosima. The strength of the batteries, mounting eighty-one guns, the gale blowing during the action, the comparatively severe loss sustained by us, especially in the untimely fate of those brilliant and deplored officers, Captains Josling and Wilmot, of the flag-ship, will be duly appreciated by Her Majesty's Government.

I did not hesitate to convey to Admiral Kuper my unqualified opinion that enough had been effected to vindicate the outrage committed upon British subjects by the adherents of Satsuma, at least until I had the honour to receive your Lordship's further instructions.

The chief agent of that outrage is generally understood to have been Shimadzoo Saboolo, the father of the Prince: his guards but obeyed his instructions. No power as yet brought to bear upon Japan by Her Majesty's Government is calculated to coerce the Prince of Satsuma to deliver up his father to condign punishment, as the principal perpetrator of the outrage committed.

It was determined upon this to return to Yokohama, when, after a series of severe gales and typhoons prevailing at this season on this dangerous coast, the squadron returned to this anchorage on the 24th instant.

Thus I have the satisfaction to report to your Lordship that the instructions with which I have been charged, onerous as they were palpably and in fact, and having reference to the outrage of last September, have been carried out in letter and in spirit. The indemnities demanded of the Tycoon's Government are afloat on board Her Majesty's ships. I have had the honour to transmit to your Lordship the written apology of the Government of Yeddo; and in respect to the Prince of Satsuma having ill-advisedly sought to evade the specific demands which Her Majesty's Government deemed it advisable to direct me to make upon him, after due consideration of all the circumstances, and after long forbearance, his capital is in ashes, his foundries destroyed, and his steamers burnt.

It remains for me to trust that Her Majesty's Government may deem that my instructions have been thus fulfilled in a manner best adapted to the difficult circumstances with which I have been, and still continue to be, surrounded.

In conclusion, I trust your Lordship will pardon me if I do not resist the natural impulse of desiring to bring under your Lordship's notice the special and unlooked for services rendered on the occasion of the expedition to Satsuma of Messrs. Eusden, Gower, Macdonald, Willis, Fletcher, Von Siebold, and Satow, of this Legation. In their absence all communications with the shore at Kagosima must have failed. Interpreters from the shore were held back and never appeared; an attempt to impede all explanations rendered nugatory by a ready knowledge of their own language, which they found on board. Nor shall I have accomplished my duty were I to omit to solicit your Lordship's favourable notice to the devotion with which these members of Her Majesty's Civil Service exposed themselves to the anticipated perils of naval combat, unaccompanied by any ostensible prospect of the ordinary honours and rewards attending the exposure of life in the profession of arms.

P.S.—I have the honour to annex to this despatch memoranda of interviews held on board Her Majesty's ship "Euryalus" with the officers of the Prince of Satsuma.

Inclosure 1 in No. 63.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.Yokohama, August 3, 1863.

SO far back as the month of April last, the Undersigned informed the Gorogio that, under all the circumstances attending the peculiar relations between the Tycoon's Government and the Daimio Prince of Satsuma, the Government of Her Britannic Majesty had determined to seek, directly, reparation from that Daimio, in respect to the condign punishment of the actual perpetrators of the murder of Mr. Richardson, on the 14th September last, on the tokaido near Kanagawa, and the payment of an indemnity for the benefit of the relations of the persons murdered and injured by his adherents.

The execution of this portion of the instructions which the Undersigned received from his Government has been deferred, chiefly out of consideration for the political difficulties of the Tycoon's Government, which has itself adopted the course of avoiding further reference to the subject.

The Undersigned, moved by the same sentiments of consideration which four months ago induced him to inform the Gorogio of the demands about to be made on the Prince of Satsuma, now also informs your Excellencies that within the period of three days the Undersigned will proceed with a large portion of the squadron under the command of Vice-Admiral Kuper to the Prince of Satsuma's territories to prefer the demands, and to adopt coercive measures against this Prince, should he refuse to comply with those demands, or should himself adopt a hostile attitude from the forts and batteries he assumes the independent right to erect.

The immediate settlement of this matter has now become peremptorily necessary.

To mark the friendly disposition which the Undersigned entertains on behalf of his Government towards that of the Tycoon,—although those relations, on the part of the Tycoon's Ministers, the Undersigned is bound to add, are involved in mystery and undefined,—the Undersigned again writes to the Gorogio to take the commands of His Majesty the Tycoon, in respect to sending a functionary of the Government on board the squadron, to accompany it to the territories of the Prince of Satsuma, should it be so deemed to be expedient.

A serious and urgent communication.

The Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

(Translation.)

Yeddo, August 4, 1863.

ON receipt of your despatch of the 3rd August, we have fully understood that you intended to go, within three days, to the territory of the Prince of Satsuma, with the men-of-war now lying in the Bay of Yokohama, in order to demand satisfaction for the murder of a British merchant on the tokaido last year. But owing to the present unsettled state of affairs in our Empire, which you witness and hear of, we are in great trouble, and intend to carry out several plans. Supposing now something untoward were to happen, then all the trouble and care both you and we have taken would have been in vain and fruitless; therefore we request the said departure may be delayed for the present.

With respect and consideration.

Inclosure 3 in No. 63.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Prince of Satsuma, or, in his absence, to the Regent or other High Officer for the time being administering the Government of the Prince of Satsuma, Hiuga Ohosumi, and the Loo Choo Islands.

Your Highness,

Yokohama, August 1, 1863.

IT is well known to you that a barbarous murder of an unarmed and unoffending British subject and merchant was perpetrated on the 14th of the month of September last (21st day of 8th month of 2nd year of Bung-kew of Japanese reckoning), upon the Tokaido, near Kanagawa, by persons attending the procession and surrounding the norimon of Shimadzoo Saboolo, who, I am informed, is the father of your Highness.

It is equally known to you that a murderous assault was made at the same time by the same retinue upon a lady and two other gentlemen, British subjects, by whom he was accompanied, the two gentlemen having been severely and seriously wounded, and the lady escaping by a miracle.

The names of the British subjects here referred to, are as follows:—

Charles Lenox Richardson, murdered.

Mrs. Borradaile.

Mr. William Clarke, severely wounded.

Mr. William Marshall, severely wounded.

This event filled with great and just indignation the British Government and people, and excited the sympathy of and produced a painful impression upon all civilized countries.

Impressed with friendly and considerate feelings towards the Government of the Tycoon, with whom the Queen of Great Britain, my august Sovereign, is in relations by Treaty of peace and amity, I acted with proper consideration for the Tycoon's Government by leaving in its hands the legitimate means of speedily arresting and bringing to capital punishment the murderers from among Shimadzoo Saboolo's retinue.

This necessary forbearance on my part has been entirely approved of by my Government, and appreciated and acknowledged by the Government of the Tycoon.

A different course proposed at the moment to be adopted in the excitement attending this barbarous outrage might have resulted in the capture, and perhaps death, by summary retribution, of Shimadzoo Saboolo himself.

Ten months have now elapsed since the perpetration of this unprovoked outrage, during which period my Government has been duly informed by me of the circumstances attending it, while the Tycoon's Ministers have held out to me from time to time assurances and hopes that the murderers would be given up by your Highness, according to the Tycoon's desire, and sent to Yeddô for trial and execution.

But I have had occasion to report to my Government, that removed in your distant domain from the direct influence of the Supreme Government, and shielded also by certain privileges and immunities which belong to Daimios of this Empire, you had utterly disregarded all orders or decrees of the Japanese Government calling upon you to afford justice by sending the real criminals to Yeddô. They have not been arrested nor sent; and no redress has consequently been afforded by the Tycoon's Government, however desirous it may be of doing so.

In the meanwhile, I have received the explicit instructions of my own Government how to act in this matter.

The Tycoon's Government may be impeded by the laws of the country, and more especially by political embarrassments, from enforcing its desires upon Daimios of the Empire in regard to criminal acts committed by their adherents; but when British subjects are the victims of those acts, Japan, as a nation, must through its Government pay a penalty and disavow the misdeeds of its subjects, to whatever rank they may belong.

Under instructions from my Government, I demanded from the Tycoon's Government an apology and the payment of a considerable penalty, for permitting the murderous attack made by your retainers on British subjects passing on a road open to them by Treaty. Both these demands have been acceded to.

But the British Government has also decided that those circumstances constitute no reason why the real delinquents and actual murderers should be shielded by your Highness, or by any means escape the condign punishment which they merit, and which they would be subjected to for great crimes, such as they have committed, in all other parts of the world.

It has thereupon been determined by my Government, and I am instructed to demand of your Highness, as follows:—

First. The immediate trial and execution, in the presence of one or more of Her Majesty's naval officers, of the chief perpetrators of the murder of Mr. Richardson, and of the murderous assault upon the lady and the gentlemen who accompanied him.

Secondly. The payment of 25,000*l.* sterling, to be distributed to the relations of the murdered man, and to those who escaped with their lives the swords of the assassins on that occasion.

These demands are required by Her Majesty's Government to be acceded to by your Highness immediately upon their being made known to you. And upon your refusing, neglecting, or evading to do so, the Admiral commanding the British forces in these seas will adopt such coercive measures, increasing in their severity, as he may deem expedient to obtain the required satisfaction. *

The commander of Her Majesty's ship of war charged with the delivery of this letter is made acquainted with the specific demands which I have the honour to communicate to you in this letter, and, according as they are accepted or refused, he has received instructions either to carry out and witness their execution, within a period of days, which will be named, or in the event of a refusal, to commence at once coercive operations pending the arrival of additional forces.

Your Highness is therefore earnestly requested seriously to consider the course you will adopt upon receipt of this communication, the terms of which it is not in my power to modify, alter, or discuss.

I avail, &c.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Prince of Satsuma.

Your Highness,

"Euryalus," August 12, 1863.

THE letter which I have addressed to your Highness, and which accompanies this, has been written some time ago, and its purport communicated to my Government. But it now becomes necessary for me to inform your Highness that I have myself arrived at this anchorage with the British Admiral, and a portion of the squadron under his command, and hope to receive a satisfactory communication in reply to my letter. If within the space of twenty-four hours no such satisfactory communication is received, I shall be under the necessity of calling upon the Admiral Commanding-in-chief to adopt such coercive measures as he may deem expedient, until the necessary satisfaction is obtained.

Inclosure 5 in No. 63.

Kawakami Tujima, Minister of the Prince of Satsuma, to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

(Translation.)

IT is just that a man who has killed another should be arrested and punished by death, as there is nothing more sacred than human life, and although we should like to secure them (the murderers), as we have endeavoured to do so since last year, it is impossible for us to do so, owing to the political differences at present existing between the Daimios of Japan, some of whom even hide and protect such people: besides this, the murderers are not one, but several persons, and therefore find easier means of escape.

The journey to Yeddo (undertaken by Shimadzu Saboolo) was not with the object of committing murders, but to conciliate the two Courts of Yeddo and Kioto; and you will easily, therefore, believe that our master (Shimadzu) could not have ordered it (the murder). Great offenders against the laws of their country (Japan), who escape, are liable to capital punishment. If, therefore, we can detect those in question, and, after examination, find them to be guilty, they shall be punished, and we will then inform the Commanders of your men-of-war at Nagasaki, or at Yokohama, in order that they may come to witness their execution. You must, therefore, consent to the unavoidable delay which is necessary to carry out these measures. If we were to execute criminals condemned for other offences, and told you that they were the offenders (above referred to), you would not be able to recognize them; and this would be deceiving you, and not acting in accordance with the spirit of our ancestors.

The (Provincial) Governments of Japan are subordinate to the Yeddo Government, and, as you are well aware, are subservient to the orders received from it.

We have heard something about a Treaty having been negotiated in which a certain limit was assigned to foreigners to move about in; but we have not heard of any stipulation by which they are authorized to impede the passage of a road.

Supposing this happened in your country, travelling with a large number of retainers as we do here, would you not chastise (push out of the way and beat) any one thus disregarding and breaking the existing laws of the country? If this were neglected Princes could no longer travel. We repeat that we agree with you that the taking of human life is a very grave matter. On the other hand, the insufficiency of the Yeddo Government, who govern and direct everything, is shown by their neglecting to insert in the Treaty (with foreigners) the laws of the country (in respect to these matters) which have existed from ancient times. You will, therefore, be able to judge yourself whether the Yeddo Government (for not inserting these laws) or my master (for carrying them out) is to be blamed.

To decide on this important matter, a high official of the Yeddo Government, and one of our Government, ought to discuss it before you, and find out who is in the right.

After the above question has thus been judged and settled, the money indemnity shall be arranged.

We have not received from the Tycoon any orders or communications by steamer that your men-of-war were coming here. Such statements are probably made with the object of representing us in a bad light. If it were not with this object you would certainly have them in writing from the Gorogio; and if so we request you to let us see them.

In consequence of such mis-statements great misunderstandings are caused.

All this surprises us much. Does it not surprise you?

Our Government acts in everything according to the orders of the Yeddo Government.

This is our open-hearted reply to the different subjects mentioned in your despatch. 29th day of the 6th month of the 3rd year of Bung-kew (13th August, 1863).

(Signed) KAWAKAMI TAJIMA SHISSEI, Minister.

Inclosure 6 in No. 63.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Vice-Admiral Kaper.

Sir,

"Euryalus," off Kagosima, August 14, 1863.

HAVING embarked at Yokohama, as arranged, on the 6th instant, with some of Her Majesty's Legation on board the squadron under your command, we arrived on the 12th instant at this anchorage, and I availed myself of the immediate opportunity offered to me, by some officials of the Prince of Satsuma coming off to your flag-ship, to deliver to them the despatch which I had addressed to the Prince, embodying the demands I had been instructed to make upon him by Her Majesty's Government, and the nature of which I have already had the honour to make known to you.

This has been followed by further verbal communications from the shore; some for the purpose of soliciting an extension of the term accorded for a reply to my despatch, which I have acceded to; and some with the object of earnestly engaging yourself and myself, under very suspicious circumstances, to go on shore, and hold an interview with some of Satsuma's officials. This proposal we have rejected, as in all respects unbecoming and inexpedient.

For your more complete information and guidance, I have the honour to annex copies of minutes, taken at the time by the officers of this Legation, of the purport of these several communications and interviews.

But the formal reply of the Prince of Satsuma, through his Principal Minister, has now reached me. A careful translation of this document I have the honour to inclose. I deem this communication to be in every respect evasive of the point at issue, as confirming rather than repudiating the outrage for which redress has been long sought, and, in short, a virtual refusal and setting aside of the demands.

Under these circumstances, I have the honour to request you to enter upon such measures of coercion, by reprisals or otherwise, as you may deem expedient and best calculated to awaken the Prince of Satsuma to a sense of the serious nature of the determinations which have brought Her Majesty's squadron to this anchorage.

I have, &c.

(Signed) EDWD. ST. JOHN NEALE.

Inclosure 7 in No. 63.

Vice-Admiral Kuper to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir,

"Euryalus," in the Bay of Kagosima, August 17, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 14th instant, in which you request me to enter upon such measures of coercion as I may deem expedient and best calculated to awaken the Prince of Satsuma to a sense of the serious nature of the determinations which have brought Her Majesty's squadron to this anchorage.

I immediately directed Captain Borlase, of the "Pearl," to proceed at daylight on the following morning with a portion of the squadron, to a bay to the northward of Kagosima, for the purpose of seizing and bringing to our anchorage three steamers, the property of the Prince, which had been previously ascertained to be lying there; Captain Borlase was also desired to avoid, as much as possible, all unnecessary bloodshed or active hostility. This service was executed with much zeal and discretion by Captain Borlase; and the three steamers mentioned in the margin* arrived at the anchorage during the forenoon of the 15th instant, lashed alongside three of Her Majesty's ships: the object I had in view, being the detention of these vessels as reprisals, until such time as the Prince of Satsuma should either comply with the demands made upon him, or should make advances with a view to their settlement.

These considerations were, however, suddenly and unexpectedly set aside by the assumption of hostilities on the part of the Japanese; for at noon of the same day, the batteries opened fire with shot and shell on the squadron, an act which it became necessary immediately to resent, in vindication of the honour of the flag, and as a punishment for the outrage; and as it was impossible for the small force at my command to carry out the requisite operations, and at the same time to retain possession of the three steamers in question, I gave orders that they should be set on fire and destroyed, which was accordingly done.

The squadron then, as you are aware, proceeded to engage the batteries on Kagosima, advancing in line of battle (the "Euryalus" leading) from the northernmost battery, along the whole line, and finally attacking the southernmost or spit battery, after which I deemed it advisable, in order to ensure the safety of Her Majesty's ships, to direct them to seek an anchorage; the weather, which had been threatening for a gale, becoming at this time most unfavourable, and, as night was approaching, the signal was made to discontinue the action, and the squadron returned to an anchorage under Sakura Sima.

It was impossible to ascertain precisely the extent of the injury inflicted upon the batteries; but, considering the heavy fire which was kept up from the ships, at point-blank range, the effect must have been considerable, many guns were observed to be dismounted, the batteries were several times cleared, and the explosion of various magazines gave evidence of the destructive effects of our shell; one half of the town was in flames and entirely destroyed, as well as a very extensive arsenal or factory, and gun-foundry, and five large Loo-Choo junks, the property of the Prince, in addition to the three steamers already described.

A heavy typhoon blew during the night, and the conflagration increasing in proportion to the height of the storm, illuminated the entire bay.

On the following afternoon, the gale having moderated, and as I deemed it necessary to remove the squadron to a safer anchorage than the great depth of water opposite Kagosima afforded, and having also observed the Japanese at work erecting batteries on the hill immediately above the little bay where the small vessels were at anchor, close to the shore, we weighed, and passing in line between the batteries of Kagosima, steamed out and anchored to the southward of the Island. This opportunity was taken advantage of to shell the batteries on the Sakura Sima side, which had not been previously engaged, and also the palace of the Prince in Kagosima. These operations were attended with complete success: there is every reason to suppose that the palace has been destroyed, as many shells were seen to burst in it, and the fire, which is still raging, affords reasonable ground for believing that the entire town of Kagosima is now a mass of ruins.

Thus having accomplished every act of retribution and punishment within the scope of operations of a small naval force, and having received from yourself the verbal expression of your satisfaction with the extent of these operations, I purpose returning with the squadron to Yokohama, immediately the partial refit which is now in progress shall admit of our putting to sea.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 8 in No. 63.

Memorandum of Interviews held with the Officials of the Prince of Satsuma on board Her Majesty's ship "Euryalus," at Kagosima.

ON the 14th August, about 9 A.M., two officials came on board Her Majesty's ship "Euryalus," and said they had been sent for a receipt for the reply from Satsuma's Government, which had been delivered the previous evening, and also to explain, verbally, what the representatives of Satsuma on shore would have told the British Representative had he gone to hold an interview with them, as requested.

They then proceeded to state that when at Kioto, the Stotsbashi (Vice-Tycoon), and two members of the Gorogio distinctly ordered Shimadzu Saboolo not to take any steps respecting the murder of foreigners (of Mr. Richardson) by his retainers, as the Tycoon's Government would settle that matter themselves; and that, therefore, as already written in their reply, their Prince must obey these instructions. That all the particulars of the murder on the tokaido had been duly reported by them to the Gorogio, who understood them perfectly. That they therefore supposed, as promised, that the whole question had been settled at Yeddo.

According to Japanese laws they could not settle it themselves, nor could they accept or refuse the demands, as all must be referred to the Yeddo Government.

That since the beginning of this year they had heard nothing from Yeddo on this subject, and that therefore they could not at first imagine the cause which brought our men-of-war to Kagosima. All this they desired to say verbally, as it was too difficult to explain in writing.

The reply made by Colonel Neale to the foregoing was communicated to the officers, and written down by them, for the information of their Chief. Verbal communications are of no value in this country. Written communications alone are eventually referred to by the Japanese authorities. The letter sent in last night represents the matter in a totally different light to the statement now verbally made. In the formal written answer to my despatch it is stated that according to the laws of the country Shimadzu Saboolo was in the right to resort to violence to foreign travellers on the road. And we are come to show that no such right can possibly be admitted by British subjects. It is said in the verbal communication now made that the Tycoon's Ministers at Kioto had assured the Prince of Satsuma, or his agents, that they would settle the matter. But the Tycoon's Government have taken no steps to settle the matter, and have informed Colonel Neale that the Prince of Satsuma was not only informed of the demands, but that even every Conference held by him with the Tycoon's Envoys upon the subject had been communicated to the Prince. After long patience, we have been obliged to come here and carry out the instructions of the British Government. If the Tycoon's Government is in fault, or has deceived the Prince, he will have to seek redress at the hands of the Tycoon's Government for whatever disaster may befall him. The Tycoon's Ministers have over and over again informed me that the Tycoon had no power to act in this territory, but that they had called upon the Prince to do so. Eleven months have passed, and the British Government has determined to act itself. And this must be done. Satisfaction must here be immediately obtained, or measures of coercion will be resorted to. But even after such measures have been commenced, the Prince will do wisely to make proposals which can be accepted; it is useless to say that nothing can be done here, when after eleven months it has been found nothing can be done in Yeddo. The Tycoon's Government have been aware of our intention of coming here for five months, and, finally, had three days' notice of our departure from Yokohama. In writing, the Tycoon's Ministers expressed a hope that we should not go to Kagosima, but did not add one word about settling this matter themselves. Immediately following this they verbally communicated to me by a Vice-Minister that the Tycoon's Government desired to send a steamer with the British squadron, with a high officer on board, no longer repeating the request that the squadron should not go to Kagosima; but although the ships proceeded under sail very leisurely no steamer of the Tycoon appeared.

The Tycoon's Government has acknowledged the outrage committed upon British subjects by paying a penalty four times as great in amount as that which is demanded of Satsuma, and they have moreover made an apology for the acts committed. We have thus no more to ask of the Tycoon's Government, and must carry out our instructions with regard to the Prince, who will now understand our position and act accordingly.

These officers more than once stated that the Tycoon's Government did not speak the truth.

They were further told that Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires considered the reply delivered the previous evening a refusal to our just demands, and that therefore they were to inform their Prince that from that period no further time was allowed, and that we should proceed to enter upon coercive measures whenever the Admiral might deem it convenient to do so. That every moment being of consequence he had better go on shore and explain all this to the authorities, and that if his Prince had proposals to make which could be accepted, he might communicate such, even during hostilities, by a boat flying a white flag, which would not be molested, and that on our side we expected the same.

ON the 14th August, late in the evening, the same officers came on board the flag-ship to deliver the written reply to the demands.

Having received them Colonel Neale said :—Your arrival at this hour is quite unexpected ; what is the object of it ?

Japanese.—We have brought the reply of the Prince's Government, and come to explain that we misinformed you to-day in stating that we were recalled on shore to correct an error in the despatch ; we were apparently only required to return immediately after having delivered it.

Colonel Neale.—Do you desire to state anything verbally to me before delivering the despatch ?

Japanese.—Nothing.

Colonel Neale.—Why is there no Dutch or English translation ? We know you have interpreters on shore.

Japanese.—We do not know why this is so.

Colonel Neale.—We have the means of translating ; but I wish you to state to your Government that if this reply is not satisfactory I shall consider it as a refusal and act accordingly. It is now eleven months since your Prince became aware of what occurred. When lately I told the Tycoon's Government that perhaps your Prince had not been officially informed of the demands to be preferred upon him, they assured me that they had even sent him copies of every Conference which had taken place on the subject.

Japanese.—We know nothing about this.

Colonel Neale.—I have come here to settle the question amicably, if possible ; we have not therefore entered upon any hostilities, but this matter can no longer be left undetermined.

Japanese.—We will communicate what you now state.

Colonel Neale.—That is what I wish you to do.

Admiral Kuper.—The settlement of this matter can no longer be delayed. Kago-sima is at my mercy ; hostilities once commenced, your town would be destroyed, and I shall stop your trade both here and at the Loo-choo Islands.

Colonel Neale.—Such is not our wish ; but if you compel us to do so, it will be your own fault.

Japanese.—We will report all this.

Admiral Kuper.—You must remember that we are one of the first nations in the world, who, instead of meeting civilized people as you think yourselves, in reality encounter barbarians.

Japanese.—We cannot discuss these subjects ; but we will report all this to our Government.

Colonel Neale.—Evasion or delay can no longer be submitted to.

(Japanese rise to leave.)

Colonel Neale.—You had better listen to what we state for the sake of your Government, that it may be thoroughly informed of our determination.

Japanese.—We know nothing of these matters.

Colonel Neale.—I will then inform you that when this murder was committed, the Tycoon's Government declared to me that they could not arrest any one in Satsuma's territory, or assure me that any satisfaction could be obtained ; at the time, the foreign community wished that Shimadzu Saboolo and his cortège should be attacked, but this was averted by the authorities, with a view that full redress might be obtained through the proper channels. The Gorogio replied that they had written to your Prince, and would write urgently and constantly until your Prince sent the murderers to Yeddo for trial. Your Prince has not done so.

In the meanwhile, instructions have reached me from my Government to the effect that specific demands should be preferred :—

1st. Upon the Tycoon's Government, which has fully satisfied those demands.

2ndly. Upon the Prince of Satsuma, whose adherents had actually perpetrated the murder.

The Tycoon has suffered severely by the acts of your Prince's adherents, for the Tycoon's Ministers had really nothing to do with Shimadzu Saboolo's orders to murder British subjects.

Japanese.—We know nothing of all these matters.

Colonel Neale.—But I wish to inform you respecting them, that you may report what I say to your Prince.

Admiral Kuper.—Colonel Neale wishes to settle the question with you amicably; and if by to-morrow at 10 o'clock A.M. you do not do so, the matter will be handed over into my hands, when I shall commence by not allowing a single boat to pass.

(The Japanese officials rose to leave.)

Colonel Neale.—Your reply, which may be a refusal, having been delivered, do you propose further to communicate with us?

Admiral Kuper.—We wish you to communicate with us again to-morrow before 10 A.M., your boat flying a white flag.

Japanese.—Perhaps we will send before 10 to-morrow morning.

Admiral Kuper.—That would be better.

Colonel Neale.—Your Envoys and boats will not be molested whatever may be the nature of your despatch.

(The Japanese then left.)

No. 64.

Earl Russell to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

(Extract.)

Foreign Office, November 10, 1863.

I HAVE received and laid before the Queen your despatches dated Yokohama, August 25 and 26.

In my despatch of the 24th December, 1862, I directed you to obtain reparation for the murder of Mr. Richardson, and the murderous assault on a lady and two gentlemen who, with Mr. Richardson, were riding on a public road open by Treaty, and who drew up on the side of the road to allow the relation and retainers of a great Daimio to pass. For this barbarous and unprovoked attack you were directed to require from the Government of the Tycoon the payment of 100,000*l.*, and an ample apology. You were further directed to require from the Prince of Satsuma the execution of the actual murderers, and the payment of 25,000*l.* as indemnity to the relatives of the murdered man and to the sufferers from the murderous assault.

With respect to the Tycoon's Government, the demands you were instructed to make have been complied with. The sum of 100,000*l.* has been paid, and a satisfactory apology has been made by the Tycoon's Ministers.

Her Majesty has been pleased, in testimony of the patience, good temper, and firmness with which you conducted this negotiation, to confer upon you the Companionship of the Order of the Bath.

The accomplishment of the remainder of your instructions has been found more difficult. Ten months having elapsed without the trial or even the arrest of the murderers, you thought yourself under the necessity to ask the assistance of Admiral Kuper, and to proceed with him to Kagosima, the capital of the Prince of Satsuma.

In your letters of August 1 and August 12, both delivered on the 12th, you communicated to the Minister of the Prince of Satsuma the demands you were instructed to make.

In the answer of the Minister of the Prince of Satsuma, dated the 13th of August, it is stated that it is just that a man who has killed another should be arrested and punished by death; that if the murderers in question can be detected, they shall be punished; and that it is not right to impede the passage of a Chief with a large body of retainers on a public road.

These answers, in reference to a murder committed by the retainers of the Prince in full daylight, ten months before, upon a person who had not in any way impeded the passage of a public road, showed a fixed determination to afford no redress. Vice-Admiral Kuper then directed that three steamers belonging to the Prince should be taken and detained by pay of reprisals. But before any further communication could take place, hostilities were commenced by the Japanese, and Her Majesty's ships were fired upon from the batteries with shot and shell,—an act which it became necessary immediately to resent. The steamers taken were burnt. The batteries were fired upon from point-blank range; many guns were dismounted and various magazines exploded.

It is much to be lamented that as the batteries were apparently situated in and about the town, the consequence of firing with shot and shell upon the batteries and magazines should have been to set fire to the town, which Admiral Kuper says has been burnt. Many innocent persons have thus unfortunately been injured.

At the same time it is obvious that if Admiral Kuper had not returned the fire of the batteries, Her Majesty's squadron would have suffered a defeat, and fresh murders of British subjects by the cruel and insolent Daimios would have been perpetrated.

Her Majesty will express, through the proper Department, her admiration of the gallantry of her naval forces.

It is my duty to request you to express to the civil servants of the Crown who accompanied you, Her Majesty's approbation of their coolness and courage. Their knowledge of the Japanese language was no doubt of great value, both to you and to the Naval Commander-in-chief.

For the present the situation appears to be this. The Yeddo Government, who, in the terms of the despatch of the Prince of Satsuma's Minister, "govern and direct everything," have made and ratified Treaties of Commerce with Great Britain and other European Powers.

These Treaties have proved very advantageous to the main body of the Japanese people, who feel the benefits of a profitable trade with foreigners, and wish that trade to continue. But a powerful feudal aristocracy, finding silk and rice, and other produce, dearer in the market, and their own privileges less valuable, wish to expel all foreigners, and have obtained a decree from the Mikado to that effect. French, American, and Dutch ships have been fired upon with a view to accomplish this object. But the European nations cannot submit to be thus deprived of an intercourse sanctioned by Treaty, and very beneficial to the mass of the Japanese people, as well as to European nations.

You will, therefore, call upon the Admiral in any cases where British persons, ships, or property are attacked, to resent such outrage.

In this way security for the time may be obtained. But I must wait for your further accounts before complete instructions can be given as to our policy in Japan.

No. 65.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received November 16.)

(Extract.)

Yokohama, September 11, 1863.

AMIDST the serious situation of affairs which prevails in our political relations with this country, and the issue of which it is impossible to predict, it appears to me of much importance that Her Majesty's Government should be correctly informed of the actual position and extent of the commercial operations which the Treaty Powers in their relative proportions tenaciously maintain at the open ports under the auspices of the Tycoon's Government.

The inclosed Returns of British trade furnished to me by Mr. Consul Winchester are of themselves descriptive of the astonishing degree of progress which that trade has reached during the very period (the half-year ended the 30th of June last) when the situation of affairs has been more menacing and alarming than at any previous period.

Your Lordship will observe that the value of the export trade in British vessels has increased during the period referred to, from 253,337*l.* of the corresponding period last year, to 561,120*l.* for the first six months of this year. And yet during those same six months, the succession of events which have transpired of an alarming and exciting character, were calculated in an unparalleled degree altogether to paralyze and arrest any trading operations whatever.

In imports we have in the first six months of this year 111,470*l.* against 68,981*l.* for the same period of last year, being an excess of 42,489*l.*

I beg leave also to draw your Lordship's attention to the fact, that in this year's Returns, raw cotton figures for the first time as an article of export, to the extent of 795,207 lbs.

In respect to the foreign trade in general of Yokohama engaged in by the subjects of all the Treaty Powers, I inclose for your Lordship's information an excellent and very accurate Report extracted from a local paper.

It is impossible satisfactorily to account for these anomalous results of our intercourse with this country,—obstructed political relations, an edict for the expulsion of foreigners still unretracted, pressure on our part to obtain redress for outrages, and the actual exaction of considerable indemnities, recurring panics, and imminent danger of violence apparently threatening the communities, on the one hand, and, on the other, a steadily progressing and prosperous trade.

But this latter fact, ignored or altogether overlooked as it may be in Europe by those who are anxious or interested in the events of a threatening character which are enacting in this country, I cannot but keep steadily and constantly in view. To maintain our commercial relations through a very storm of political turmoil, and I may now add even through actual conflict with one of the most redoubtable Chiefs of this Empire, has been the fixed and prevailing object of attainment which has influenced my whole course of action.

Upon broad principles ample and sufficient justification may be deemed to exist for an open rupture with the Government of this country; an edict of expulsion in letter, if not in spirit, still hangs over us, the residence at Yeddo has been rendered impracticable to the foreign Legations, and the navigation of the Inland Sea is obstructed.

Yet, inasmuch as we maintain our footing at the open ports, and as our commercial relations with this country progress, and do not retrograde, I deem it to be my duty to avoid all initiative measures of hostility, calculated to precipitate to a state of war, until the views and untrammelled decisions of Her Majesty's Government with respect to the thorough and unrestricted enforcement of the rights acquired by Treaty are made manifest. On the other hand the hidden and mysterious, though not actually aggressive policy of the Tycoon's Government may become suddenly so developed in a hostile direction, that in self-defence and in support of national dignity and our fundamental Treaty rights, it may be imperatively necessary for me to fall back upon the powerful aid of Her Majesty's squadron, and urge upon Admiral Kuper the expediency of entering upon a systematic and serious series of hostilities.

Newspaper Extract.

HAVING in our last completed a short and hurried revue of the past twelve months' political doings of Japan, we now proceed, according to promise, concisely to gather together, at this appropriate season, a few of the leading facts and statistics in reference to commercial matters. The sketch will of necessity be but short and imperfect, but we shall return to the different heads of the subject as time and opportunity may afford.

Imports.

The month of July (1862) opened with a pretty brisk market in this branch, several large transactions in $6\frac{1}{2}$ cattie grey shirtings, and considerable business in camlets reported. The demand for tin had been good, and recent arrivals to the extent of about 2,000 piculs disposed of. This general activity continued, with slight variations, to the end of the year. Tin and lead advanced, and good business was done at prices ranging from 38 dollars to 42 dollars for No. 1, and 25 dollars to 32 dollars for No. 2 of the former, and 8 dollars to 10 dollars for the latter. The estimated settlements of lead about 37,000 piculs, of tin, say 36 piculs; camlets 29,000, and grey shirtings 141,000 pieces. At the commencement of the year 1863 this branch of trade began to slacken, and the transactions in most of the above principal articles were, comparatively with the preceding months, very trivial. An improvement was looked for after the turn of the Japanese holidays, and in April more business was done, cotton and woollen goods showing a slight advance. Tin greatly declined and became unsaleable. At the end of May, owing to the disturbed aspect of political affairs, business came almost to a stand-still, and so continued until the settlement of the money-portion of the demands of Great Britain, when disposition for business was early evinced by the Japanese merchants, though but few transactions in cotton goods are reported, business in camlets only to some extent being noticeable.

Silk.—We now proceed to take a retrospective view of this our principal staple, for the season just ended. At this time last year the markets in Europe were extremely buoyant; the demand for Japan silk had since the beginning of 1862 assumed a remarkable activity, owing probably to a peculiarity of its nature which offered for certain purposes considerable advantages to manufacturers, and gave it on that account a decided superiority over most of the other descriptions of silk known hitherto. We refer especially to the property which Japan silk possesses in an eminent degree of imbibing a large proportion of dye-stuff, and which renders it invaluable for the manufacture of black goods, which were the prevailing fashion in Europe throughout the last year, under the French term "trame Japon."

The market for the season 1862-63 opened with a slight rise on the prices that had been ruling for the latter part of the season 1861-62; there was still a margin left on the rates that were current in Europe, and this margin, in connection with the increasing favour with which Japan silk was received, resulted in large orders being sent to this market. They met with a supply fully equal to the demand, the crop of 1862-63 having been since known to be nearly double that of 1861-62; indeed, from the end of August to the middle of November prices had given way 5 to 10 per cent. below those of July. When it was ascertained in China, towards the latter end of 1862, that the produce of that country for the season 1862-63 would fall short of the preceding campaign, the merchants of Shanghai and Europe turned their attention to Japan, the growing capabilities of which were becoming more and more apparent. From the month of December the demand assumed a fresh start, and for three or four months continued unabated, so that prices rose gradually to an unprecedented point. The political events of April did not materially check the activity of the market. Money was then tolerably abundant, and the chance of impending hostilities induced the foreign houses to convert as much as they could of their goods and property in exportable articles; on their own side the Japanese dealers were not slow to avail themselves of this new turn of affairs, and so long as they did not consider themselves in danger, sustained firmly the prices of their commodities.

In the beginning of May a panic set in among them; all at once they became eager sellers, and large quantities of silk were disposed of at a reduction of 70 dollars, and in some instances even 100 dollars. This state of things, however, did not last beyond a few days. Reassured, as well by their own authorities as by the readiness with which the foreign houses met their offers, the native dealers very soon showed more firmness and prices returned to their former point. But from that moment to the end of the season the arrivals from the interior became very limited, possibly from the gradual exhaustion of the stock in the country, perhaps also from natural apprehensions so long as political affairs remained threatening and unsettled.

Fortunately the fears which had at one time been seriously entertained about the maintenance of peace have passed away, at least as far as this place is concerned, and from the reports of the Japanese dealers themselves we are led to believe that they are encouraged by their own authorities to continue and extend their transactions with the foreign community of Yokohama.

The present season (of 1863-64) has just opened under very auspicious circumstances. The new crop was favoured with fine weather, and there is every reason to believe, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding, that the result has been most satisfactory. Indeed the large profits which the Japanese dealers and growers have realized, especially throughout the last year, in this staple, must have acted as a powerful incentive to a largely increased cultivation of the mulberry tree, and there is no doubt, in our mind, that anticipations in that respect will be fully borne out by facts hereafter. If, after the above sketch, we pass from the purely commercial to moral considerations, we cannot but be powerfully struck with the following remarks.

It is now just four years since Japan was opened by Treaty to the foreign trade. Centuries had elapsed during which no intercourse had taken place with the "hated barbarians," except upon the smallest scale at Nagasaki; and that with one European nation only. When it was ascertained that silk was grown in this country (a fact put beyond doubt by the first importation of that article into England towards the middle of 1859), the attention of consumers was awakened to it, and experiments made which convinced them at once that this new produce would soon prove highly interesting. We need not remind our readers that for some few years before the opening of Japan, the production of France and of Italy had been considerably curtailed by a new disease of the silkworm, which has lasted since without intermission. The diminution of the European crop had mainly induced the continental manufacturers to use China silk, to which they had previously shown a material reluctance. It cannot therefore be considered surprising that when the first bales of Japan silk appeared on the London market, a general curiosity arose with regard to a produce at once so new to the manufacturing world, and so much wanted. When it was ascertained that this new article possessed intrinsic qualities far superior, not only to Bengal and China silk, but even to anything until then known in Europe, a gradual demand sprung up for it, which has hitherto led to astonishing results, and promises to go much further still. To speak in round numbers, the exportation of Japan silk amounted in 1859-60 to 6,000 bales, in 1860-61 to 10,000 bales, in 1861-62 to 12,000 bales, and in the season 1862-63, just ended, to 26,000 bales.

The lowest average value here of a bale of Japan silk of 85 catties, including export duty, commission, and other charges, may be estimated for the last season at 370 dollars, which gives for 26,000 bales, 9,620,000 dollars; or, at 5s. for the dollar, upwards of 2,400,000*l*.

We read with wonder some months ago in the columns of a London contemporary, that "the trade with Japan is barely sufficient to pay the expenses of the agencies established here by the great China houses."

We, on the contrary, believe that there are few examples in the commercial world of so rapid a development of trade; and this is the more startling as Japan had been isolated for centuries from intercourse with all outsiders. But when we come to consider that the staple upon which we are now remarking, is the most costly of all commodities, with the exception of gems and precious metals, we cannot refrain from enlarging upon the growing importance of a country which has, in so short a time, increased its capabilities more than fourfold, with every appearance of further progress. Nay, if we compare Japan to China for silk only, we have it on the most undoubted authority that the latter country, within the space of four years after the conclusion of the Treaty of Nankin, remained a good deal behind what Japan has achieved with regard to the quantity and value of silk exported; and yet China had at that time enjoyed for 100 years or more, constant relations with foreigners at Canton, whereas our connection with Japan is yet in its infancy.

It is also worthy of notice that the production of silk in China has been getting gradually less for the last two or three years. Should this decrease continue, the deficiency will most fortunately be filled up by the produce of this country; and in the contrary case we are content to leave the commerce of Yokohama to its natural development, stimulated as it will be by the self-interest of all parties concerned.

Japan silk has now taken a firm hold in the markets of Europe; the demand for it goes on increasing yearly, owing to its own peculiar and intrinsic merit, which renders it independent of all competition, and we are fully assured, as far as all human foresight can go, that ere many years are over, the silk trade of this place will stand second to none other.

Tea.—The season of this staple opened with a brisk market, and with quotations 1 to 2 dollars in advance of preceding rates for medium description. Quotations standing thus: medium (old), 16 to 22 dollars, ditto (new), 20 to 24 dollars; good to fine (old), 24 to 29 dollars, ditto (new), 25 to 31 dollars. For some weeks these prices were fully maintained, but in the month of September there was some falling off in sales owing to the extreme rates asked by the teamen. The few sales made were at a further advance of 1 to 2 dollars for the medium kinds. In the following month there was a still further advance for the same kinds of from 2 to 3 dollars. Business during the months of November and December was very fluctuating, tending, in consequence of the extreme rates demanded by the teamen, towards dulness, but at the end of the year the prices became somewhat easier and a considerable number of settlements were made. In the month of January a further advance of 1 to 2 dollars was submitted to; prices then standing about thus—common 14 to 20 dollars; medium 21 to 28 dollars; fine 29 to 33 dollars. Business then began to fall away, and notwithstanding that the teamen showed some inclination to submit to some decline, no great demand existing, but little was done. In the months of February and March a small business only was done, that principally for the American market. In the month of April, in consequence of the disturbed aspect of political affairs, the Japanese merchants took alarm, and eager to work off their stocks previous to their intended departure, consented to very considerable reduction; indeed, at this period the changes were so great and so frequent that quotations were not obtainable. At the end of the season there was a slight improvement in business, stocks light and appearing likely so to continue until confidence in political matters be restored.

The new season, however, considering the unsettled state of affairs, opened with tolerable activity, the new crop of medium coming in pretty freely, but none of a really fine quality. The promise of the incoming season is said to be of fair average quality and amount. We refer to our standing Tables for information as to the details of the past season's campaign. The grand total showing 5,796,388 lbs., against 5,847,133 in season 1861-62.

General Exports.

In other produce the business of the same period seems to have been very small; the market continuing bare and few transactions reported until the commencement of October, when a new staple—cotton—began to be brought in pretty freely,—say to the extent of about 3,000 piculs, which found a ready market at about 14 dollars 50 cents to 16 dollars 50 cents per picul for the superior qualities. Since that time but little was done in it until towards the end of March, when some revival took place. The exports in the new staple up to the end of June was 8,648 bales. It is matter for great astonishment, when we consider that so very recently this article was grown in quantities barely sufficient for the wants of home consumption, and that the knowledge of the foreign demand could only have transpired just before the last year's crop was reaped, that we should be able to quote the above figure of its export. Surely this is great and conclusive evidence of the elasticity with which this country's produce could be extended towards the bearing its fair share in the supply of the wants of that world from the rest of which it has hitherto been so secluded. Before closing our remarks on this article we may say, generally as to quality, that there have been various kinds brought in, which, although all good, have differed slightly in value. All its several kinds have been well appreciated at home, and have sold at prices considerably over China cotton. The period closed with a good demand.

Timber at the commencement of the year was in pretty brisk demand, and was exported principally to Shanghae, in considerable quantities. It has since this been much neglected.

In copper there has been very little done during the year, owing to the extreme prices demanded.

No. 66.

Earl Russell to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir,

Foreign Office, November 18, 1863.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 10th instant, I inclose, for your information, a copy of a letter which I have addressed to the Board of Admiralty relative to the affairs of Japan.

I am, &c.
(Signed) RUSSELL.

Inclosure in No: 66.

Earl Russell to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.

My Lords,

Foreign Office, November 14, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordships that I have instructed Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan, that in any cases where British persons, ships, or property are attacked, he should call upon the Admiral commanding Her Majesty's naval forces in Japan to resent such outrages; and I have to request that the Admiral may receive such orders from your Lordships as will authorize him to act to that effect, as far as the means at his disposal may admit of his doing so.

The Secretary of State for War some time ago gave orders for increasing Her Majesty's land forces in China by 1,000 men, so that in case of need the Admiral will doubtless be able to obtain the support of a body of troops from China; and if with such assistance a force of 500 soldiers and marines should be available for service on shore in Japan, the batteries which may fire on British ships, and which are armed by the Feudal Chiefs for the purpose of annoying and interrupting foreign trade, may probably be destroyed, and security be obtained for the peaceful commerce of nations with Japan.

Her Majesty's Government are especially desirous that while British persons and property are effectually protected, no injury should be inflicted upon the Japanese population.

With this view it will be incumbent upon the Admiral or Senior Officer in command on the Japanese waters to endeavour to confine hostilities undertaken by him, as far as possible, consistently with due protection to British subjects, their property, and their commerce, to forts and batteries not surrounded by the dwellings and places of the non-combatant inhabitants.

It is of course part of the duty of the officers in command of ships to return the fire of hostile batteries wherever they may be situated, but, in planning expeditions to stations on the coast, the difference between forts placed to disturb commerce and batteries erected for the defence of populous towns should always be borne in mind, and the first-mentioned of these two classes of forts should be the object of attack, in all cases where there is no absolute necessity to attack batteries of the second class.

I am, &c.

My Lord,

Yokohama, October 1, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith, for the information of your Lordship, a copy of a despatch I have addressed yesterday to the Japanese Ministers. The situation of affairs is fully described in the statement I have made to them, and there is nothing of a more explicit character which I am enabled to add in respect to passing events by this occasion.

Inclosure in No. 67.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.

Yokohama, September 30, 1863.

I ADDRESS this letter to your Excellencies in an amicable and friendly spirit. I write as briefly as the subject will admit, because I desire to engage and arrest the serious attention of the Tycoon's Government to what I now submit for its solemn consideration. On this occasion I pass over details affecting the breach or non-observance of Treaty stipulations. The situation of affairs,—that is, the prospect of peace or war,—is far more serious, and requires immediate attention. If conflict and civil war is not actually raging amongst the parties opposed to each other in Japan, it is well known to all that bitter animosities and feelings, and even aggressive acts against the Tycoon's authority, are now enacting. The letter addressed by the authority of the Tycoon's Government to the foreign Representatives, conveying the Mikado's desire that foreigners should be expelled, remains uncanceled. The trade of foreigners with native merchants has been of late obstructed. Some native traders have left Yokohama, and one or more have been beheaded at Kioto because they were in trading relations with foreigners. Extraordinary and unmistakeable activity prevails both on the part of the Tycoon's Government and on the part of the agents of hostile Daimios to obtain cannon, rifles, and munitions of war, and large orders, it is well known, have been given by the Tycoon's Government for the purchase of arms and vessels of war in America; and proposals for similar supplies are constantly and urgently pressed upon merchants of other nations. Large conscriptions of all persons capable of bearing arms are in progress, and drilling is practised even at night. The navigation of the Inland Sea is obstructed; batteries are constructing there in every available position, as well as at Yeddo, Uruga, and elsewhere. Some of these acts are those of hostile Daimios, but some are also those of the Tycoon's Government.

In the midst of these alarming indications of hostility directed undeniably and evidently against foreigners, the Tycoon's Government preserves a most ominous and alarming silence in its relations with foreign Representatives. No knowledge is conveyed to them in the slightest degree of the hopes or fears entertained by it in regard to the situation of foreigners. All is involved in darkness and mystery,—accompanied, meanwhile, by hostile preparations.

Now in this situation of affairs, actuated by the best feelings towards Japan, and acting especially in accordance with the friendly and amicable feelings of consideration entertained by the British Government towards the Tycoon and Government of Japan and the Japanese people, it becomes my duty solemnly to draw the attention of the Government of Yeddo to the fact that as a matter of reason and necessity the Representatives of foreign States having Treaties with Japan, and having subjects of their respective States residing here, must report mail by mail to their Governments the condition of affairs which I have described; and I leave it to the judgment of the Tycoon's Ministers and High Councils to reflect whether, after a knowledge of these indications of hostility and absence of all assurances or declarations on the part of the Tycoon's Government as to its intended policy and action towards foreigners, the Governments of the Treaty Powers will not adopt defensive measures on a great scale, while they will inevitably insist at any cost upon the execution of Treaty rights. Such measures will be a serious and regrettable necessity. They will be costly probably beyond the knowledge or imagination of the Tycoon's Government. Armaments such as I refer to, with all their transports and appliances, when dispatched and eventually arrived to vindicate the harmless rights acquired by Treaty of residence and trade, cannot be dissolved and sent back because at the last moment the Tycoon's Government offer pacific and friendly assurances. The cost of such expedition, forced upon us against our will and desire in consequence of the threatening attitude of the rulers and chiefs of this country towards foreigners, must be defrayed by Japan. This menacing line of action and policy has been directed against the most powerful States in the world, who on their part have exhibited no indications of hostility save while seeking redress for murders and unprovoked outrages.

In conclusion I earnestly call upon your Excellencies to look upon this communication as a friendly warning, which, if no sincere and friendly feeling prevailed on my part, need not be made at all. Your Excellencies are also earnestly called upon to reply to this letter at your earliest convenience, lest by delay any good fruits it may bear become unavailing.

With assurances of respect and consideration.

No. 68.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received December 12.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, October 14, 1863.

OUR trade at this the principal port open in Japan is persistently maintained, although it is undoubtedly in the hands of the Tycoon's Government to stop it at any moment by the expression even of an indirect mandate to that effect, communicated to the native merchants. This subject alone has occasioned me very serious anxiety. Within the last fortnight a strong impression prevailed among the foreign mercantile community at Yokohama, that the trade in the staple product of silk was being gradually restricted to extinction by the direct, though disavowed, action of the Government at Yeddo. A large supply of silk brought down by the producers was stated to have been stopped at Yeddo, and the quantity available for the markets at this port to be restricted to fifty bales a day, which fell short of the expected average. I deemed it accordingly to be my duty to write in urgent terms regarding this matter to the Japanese Ministers, and I have the honour to lay before your Lordship a copy of my despatch, and of the reply which I have received from the Gorogio.

Whatever may have been the cause which induced the temporary obstruction of the supply of silk to this market, an undoubted improvement has taken place since I received the assurances of the Japanese Ministers. From very particular inquiries which I have instituted through Her Majesty's Consul, I have ascertained that from the 2nd to the 11th instant, a period of ten days, 1,000 bales of silk have been bought by foreign traders for exportation, thus averaging 100 bales each day; a quantity which, should it be continued throughout the season, would afford 10,000 bales over and above the large amount of 26,000 bales exported during the season ending the 30th of June last. Thus to all outward appearances the Tycoon's Government has preserved good faith, baffling however all speculations as to how long such may be continued, and ill-according, moreover, with its general attitude and reserve in its political relations with the Treaty Powers.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 1 in No. 68.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.

Yokohama, September 26, 1863.

THE matter respecting the restricted arrivals of silk being now well known to be occasioned by no accident or want of that material, but by a systematic arrangement of a few principal silk-dealers or monopolisers at Yeddo, great uneasiness and alarm prevails among the mercantile community at Yokohama. Two millions of dollars have been brought here for the purchase of silk, and are lying idle. Steamers arrive from China to ship the silk expected to have been ready for exportation, and return comparatively empty, thus occasioning great loss. The native merchants are suffering extremely, and some have shut up their establishments at Yokohama, and have left the place; and finally it is currently reported that three or four other merchants of Yokohama have been arrested or are about to be arrested at Kioto, and that one has lost his life because he pleaded to be allowed to sell silk.

I lose no time, therefore, in requesting your Excellencies to communicate with me at your earliest convenience the real situation of this matter and the actual intentions of the Tycoon's Government. So serious a matter cannot remain in suspense, and if no communication is made very shortly reassuring to the commercial community, I must adopt other measures, and proceed to Yeddo more effectually to seek explanations from your Excellencies.

With respect and consideration.

Inclosure 2 in No. 68.

The Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Yeddo, October 4, 1863.

WE have received your despatch dated 26th September, and have fully understood what you have communicated respecting the scarcity of silk.

An order has been given to the different departments regarding the export thereof, and thus there is no reason whatever there should be any restriction, as you make mention of in your despatch for any article at all.

But as the trade in silk is flourishing from day to day, we are of opinion that it is a ruse of some person (or persons), who in order to make large profits has bought up all the silk, and then by spreading such reports as you mention, unsettled the foreigners and thus expect to gain their object.

Whatever may be the cause, we have taken the above into mature consideration and have given the necessary instructions to the proper authorities, and we therefore think that the sale of silk will shortly take place in a proper way, and that either yesterday or to-day there will have been some signs of it.

We now trust that you will believe that what we have stated is true.

With respect and consideration.

No. 69.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received December 14.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, October 14, 1863.

THE Tycoon's Government having expressed a strong desire to obtain from me a written statement regarding the operations of Her Majesty's squadron at Kagosima, and comprising my communications with the Prince of Satsuma previous to the adoption of coercive measures, I had no hesitation in complying with this request, and availed myself of the opportunity of reminding the Ministers at Yeddo that an opportunity was again offered to them of satisfying the demands of Her Majesty's Government.

I directed their attention to the fact that the Prince of Satsuma had explicitly declared that he was bound to obey the orders of the Tycoon. This declaration was, it is true, too tardy, and the Tycoon's Government was too secret and evasive in its communications with me, to save the Prince from coercive measures of reprisal and severe chastisement inflicted by Her Majesty's squadron. But the specific demands upon the Prince yet remained unrequited, and I have warned the Tycoon's Government that if it relapses into silence and inaction as before in respect to this matter, I should be under the necessity of calling upon the Admiral to re-open hostilities against the territories of the Prince.

I have the honour to inclose a copy of my letter to the Gorogio, to which* I have not as yet received a reply.

I have, &c.

Inclosure in No. 69.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.

Yokohama, September 24, 1863.

IMMEDIATELY after my return with Her Majesty's squadron from Kagosima, I communicated verbally to the Governors for Foreign Affairs, for the information of the Tycoon's Government, the particulars of all which had transpired. A copy of the reply addressed to me by the Chief Minister (Caro) of Satsuma, in reply to the demands which I had been instructed to make, was also handed to the Governors.

I have now the honour to inclose to your Excellencies, in writing, a statement of what occurred, in order that you may more conveniently refer to the same.

Your Excellencies will observe that the Prince of Satsuma states that he can do nothing without the orders of the Tycoon's Government. This would imply that the Prince of Satsuma has not been directed by His Majesty to comply with the demands I have been instructed to prefer upon the Prince of Satsuma, and which have since been communicated by me and known to the Tycoon's Government.

I have also recently been informed from various reliable sources that the Prince of Satsuma is most desirous that these demands, as yet unsatisfied, notwithstanding all which has occurred at Kagosima, should not remain unsettled, and be thereby a continued source of danger to him. The intervention of the Tycoon's Government is therefore essential, but the Tycoon's Government, as before, takes no step in the matter beyond asking for the statement I now send, but which has during a month been well known to it. I have therefore earnestly to call the attention of the Tycoon's Government to the fact that if, as before, your Excellencies preserve silence and adopt no measures whatever in respect to a satisfactory arrangement, no remedy is left in my hands but to engage the Admiral again to proceed with his fleet to the territory of Satsuma, and continue, much against our desire, the hostilities which have momentarily been suspended in order that the Tycoon's Government should again have itself the opportunity of satisfactorily terminated this matter.

With respect and consideration.

No. 70.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received December 14.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, October 14, 1863.

AT the moment of closing this mail a most distressing outrage has once more occurred of which a French subject is the victim. Lieutenant de Camus, of the 3rd battalion of the Chasseurs d'Afrique, riding out this afternoon in this immediate neighbourhood, not on the tokaido or high road, but on a country road hitherto considered to be comparatively secure, was barbarously attacked and murdered by Japanese assassins. He was unfortunately alone, and thus I fear no positive information will ever be obtained respecting the circumstances tending this barbarous act. The unfortunate officer was totally unarmed and could have offered no possible provocation to his sanguinary assailants. His body, which was conveyed to Yokohama, escorted by the French and English escorts, the latter under Lieutenant Applin, the French, British and other foreign Consuls, with several of the foreign community, was frightfully mutilated by sabre cuts, every one of which was pronounced by the medical attendant, Dr. Jenkins, to have been a mortal wound.

Writing immediately after this disastrous occurrence, I am unable to state to your Lordship what may be the action which the French authorities will adopt under the circumstances, but in truth nothing is within our reach but energetic remonstrances and an urgent demand upon the Tycoon's Government for the discovery of the perpetrators of this barbarous act.

Yokohama, October 30, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to lay before your Lordship copies of a correspondence which has passed between the Gorogio and me, with reference to the still unsatisfied demands preferred upon the Prince of Satsuma under instructions from Her Majesty's Government.

Your Lordship will observe the equivocal nature of the replies addressed to me by the Japanese Ministers, inspired doubtless by their political embarrassments, and probably also by their hostile and ulterior designs in regard to foreigners.

Inclosure 1 in No. 71.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.

Your Excellencies,

Yokohama, October 21, 1862.

ON the 24th of September (twenty-eight days ago) I had the honour to address your Excellencies upon the important subject of the demands preferred upon the Prince of Satsuma by Her Britannic Majesty's Government; to that letter I have received no reply.

The Government of the Tycoon is aware that those demands have not been satisfied, and that from motives of high consideration for His Majesty the Tycoon, the hostile proceedings adopted against Kagosima, arising out of the conduct of Satsuma and his Councillors, have been suspended, in order that His Majesty the Tycoon and his Government might, if they really desire it, avert serious and continued hostilities being directed against that Prince. On the first occasion the Government of the Tycoon fell into silence and inaction respecting this subject, and necessitated the departure of the British squadron for Kagosima. The Tycoon's Government sent an Envoy on the eve of the departure of the squadron and declared the intention of the Tycoon's Government to send a steamer with a personage on board to accompany the British squadron, but neither the steamer nor the Envoy appeared to accomplish their mission.

It now therefore becomes my duty to declare to your Excellencies that unless within a few days I receive a communication from the Tycoon's Government of a satisfactory nature, I shall deem that the Government of the Tycoon prefers that the British diplomatic and naval authorities adopt the course of entering upon direct measures with the Prince with a view of causing him to accede to the demands of Her Majesty's Government, which cannot longer remain unsatisfied.

With respect and consideration.

(Signed)

EDWD. ST. JOHN NEALE.

P.S. This letter having been written previous to the receipt of your letter informing me that you will reply to me in regard to the Prince of Satsuma when you have received accurate details from that Prince, I have therefore to inform you that I do not understand what this statement may mean, but whatever may be its meaning I have to call the attention of the Tycoon's Government to what I have written in this despatch.

WE have received your despatch of the 24th of September, giving a Report of what occurred in the Bay of Kagosima during your stay there.

We have understood your several communications regarding what happened to the British men-of-war at Kagosima.

But as we do not know the real state of affairs at that place, we will send you an answer after we have obtained every detail accurately from Sinlinotayu (Satsuma).

Your Excellencies,

Yokohama, October 25, 1863.

WITH reference to my despatches of the 24th September and the 21st of October, relative to the demands made upon the Prince of Satsuma by Her Majesty's Government, I have to state that I omitted to observe to you that a few days previous to the transmission of the first-mentioned despatch to your Excellencies, Mr. Eusden, Japanese Secretary of this Legation, was requested to attend at the Custom-house, and was informed by the Governor Coombono Kami, that the Prince of Satsuma, having already reported to the Tycoon's Government regarding the events which occurred at Kagosima during the visit of the British squadron, the Gorogio was anxious to receive in writing a statement from myself of what took place on that occasion in order that the two versions might be compared. This being the case, your Excellencies will better understand that I am surprised and at a loss to comprehend the meaning of the reply made to me by your Excellencies in which you state that no report had been received from the Prince of Satsuma of the events referred to, and that it was therefore necessary to await its receipt.

It only remains for me to add that I am in daily expectation of a categorical communication from the Tycoon's Government respecting the matter in question.

With respect and consideration.

WE have received your despatch dated October 21, and have fully understood that, by order of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, you will again go the territory of Satsuma, to enforce the demands made on Matsdaira Sinlinotayu.

As regards (this question) it is necessary we should likewise investigate it, as we lately stated in our reply to your despatch; and some of the retainers of Sinlinotayu, who were witnesses on the spot of what took place, have lately arrived in this town. Thus we are continuing the investigation, and (when completed) will communicate the same to you. Therefore it is to be hoped you will delay your intention for some time, and we trust you will comply with our request.

No. 72.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received January 9, 1864.)

(Extract.)

Yokohama, October 31, 1863

BY my despatch of the 1st instant I had the honour to transmit to your Lordship a copy of a letter I had addressed to the Japanese Ministers on the 30th of September, calling their earnest attention to the serious situation of their relations with the foreign Treaty Powers, and warning them of the inevitable consequences should such a line of conduct be persisted in.

To that letter I have to this date received no reply.

On the 25th instant, however, my colleagues of the United States and of the Netherlands called upon me separately.

My colleague of the Netherlands simply informed that he was proceeding to Yeddo, but Mr. Pruyn was so obliging as to inform me that he had received a special invitation from the Gorogio to proceed to Yeddo for the purpose of holding an interview with the members of the highest Council, when an important communication would be made to him.

Mr. Pruyn expressed himself as totally unable to form a conception of the nature of the communication which was about to be made to him, but deemed that it must necessarily be of a most important character, as the Gorogio had at first proposed that some of their members should come down to Yokohama (a means of communication they had never before adopted), and subsequently had requested his presence at Yeddo, alleging as a reason that it was very desirable that the whole of the Gorogio and members of the First Council should be present.

Mr. Pruyn and M. de Graeff van Polsbroek accordingly proceeded to Yeddo, and were received by the Gorogio, and held an interview with the assembled Ministers at a building adjoining the landing-place, and not within the city as heretofore had been the custom, at the residence of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs, thus at once ominously implying that the presence of even the foreign Representatives within the official quarter of the city was interdicted.

Upon the return of my colleagues on the following day they did my French colleague and myself the honour of informing us of the purport of the unexpected communication.

Immediately preceding its receipt, I received an invitation to proceed to Yeddo, similar to that which had been addressed to the Minister of the United States and to the Dutch Consul-General; and with a knowledge of the purport of the communication to be made to me, I deemed it to be incumbent upon me to reply to the Gorogio declining their invitation upon the grounds stated in my letter, a copy of which I have the honour to inclose.

My colleague of France received simultaneously a similar invitation, which he equally declined to accept.

Inclosure 1 in No. 72.

Communication made to the Minister of the United States and the Consul-General of the Netherlands by the Gorogio, in the presence of the Members of the Second Council of the Governors for Foreign Affairs, and other officials of rank, at Yeddo, on the 26th October, 1863.

THE Japanese Government being extremely desirous that the friendship between the United States and Holland with Japan should not be interrupted, has invited you, as the Representatives of these Powers, to this Conference for the purpose of making an important communication, and this important communication will render many Conferences necessary in order that you should hear all its reasons and fully be acquainted with its views, and we, the Gorogio, have therefore appointed two Commissioners for this purpose, namely Takemoto Kai no Kami and Ikido Sinri.

The unsettled state of things in our realm is increasing; we are apparently approaching a revolution; there may be a general uprising among the people, who hate foreigners; and to our shame we must confess that we have no power to suppress this insurrectionary movement.

It is principally owing to the opening of Yokohama to trade that this deplorable state of things exists.

If a continuance of trade at Yokohama be persisted in, this state of affairs will grow worse; trade will suffer and no doubt disappear in consequence, and then the friendship will be destroyed. It was to establish friendly relations that the Treaties were made, and may be seen in the heading to each of them.

Friendship is the corner-stone; trade is subordinate to friendship. We have always considered that the framers of the Treaty intended it as an experiment, to last as long as it would not prove injurious to Japan.

In order to perpetuate this friendship it is of the highest mutual interest that the port of Yokohama be closed to trade, and in our opinion this is the only way to allay the prevailing excitement.

We request you to inform your Governments that the Notification of Ogasawara Dusio no Kami relating to the expulsion of foreigners will be withdrawn, and to ask their consent to have the trade transferred to Nagasaki and Hakodadi.

We do not desire any further alteration in the Treaty.

Inclosure 2 in No. 72.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.

Your Excellencies,

Yokohama, October 28, 1863.

I HAVE received your letter inviting me to proceed to Yeddo to hold an interview with your Excellencies on the 31st instant, upon a subject regarding which you wish to enter on a discussion with me.

My colleagues the Minister of the United States and the Consul-General of the Netherlands have informed me that in like manner you invited them two days ago to repair to Yeddo to confer with you upon an important matter, which you did not specify, and that upon their arrival at Yeddo the purport of your communication amounted to the total subversion of Treaty rights.

Without further entering into the particulars of your communication, and of which my colleagues have informed me, I have to state to your Excellencies that, as the Representative of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, I decline to respond to your invitation by repairing to Yeddo for the purpose of discussing any such unheard-of communications, or to receive any Envoys charged with similar communications.

The utmost measure I will adopt, under the circumstances, is to report to my Government what you may communicate to me in writing, and in becoming terms. I have, therefore, to engage your Excellencies to state to me by letter explicitly and categorically what the Government of the Tycoon proposes, and wishes me to convey to Her Britannic Majesty's Government; and it only remains for me to add that, inspired on my part as the Representative of Great Britain, with no hostile feelings or designs against this country, I trust that the Government of the Tycoon will duly weigh and consider the sense and probable consequences of the communication which it may desire me to make to the powerful nation I have the honour to represent.

It is also my duty to add that, pending the reference of any such unusual and extraordinary communications (made to me in writing) to Her Britannic Majesty's Government, should hostile or aggressive acts be committed by the Government of the Tycoon, or by any Daimio of this Empire against the relations of amity and commerce established by Treaty, made and duly ratified by Great Britain and Japan, such will be resented by corresponding acts of retribution by Her Majesty's forces in defence of the national honour and of the Treaty rights which I am placed here to maintain and to protect.

With respect and consideration.

My Lord,

Yokohama, November 16, 1863.

I HAD occasion some time since to draw the attention of Admiral Kuper to the reported intention of the Japanese authorities to erect a line of batteries at the bottom of this harbour and directed against the ships in port.

In course of time this intelligence was confirmed by the receipt of a letter addressed to Her Majesty's Consul by the Governor of Kanagawa informing him that a battery was about to be erected in the situation I have described, for our mutual protection, and that it was desirable that foreign subjects should be warned not to approach the works while in progress.

The purport of this communication was made known to the Admiral, who informed the Governor that he should prevent the construction of any such works, and they have accordingly been abandoned.

I have the honour to inclose a copy of the Admiral's letter to the Governor respecting this subject.

Vice-Admiral Kuper to the Governor of Kanagawa.

Sir,

"Euryalus," Yokohama, November 6, 1863.

HER Britannic Majesty's Consul at this port has forwarded to me the copy of your Excellency's despatch of yesterday's date, in which you announce the intention of the Japanese Government to erect a fort or battery on the side of Benten at the place called Zagahama for our mutual protection.

It is little more than a week since the Government communicated to the United States' Minister and the Netherlands Consul-General its determination to close the port of Yokohama altogether; and it is now proposed to erect batteries for our mutual protection—a project which appears to me to be quite as unnecessary as the first mentioned resolution is inadmissible.

The defence of Yokohama having been placed by the Government of the Tycoon in the hands of Rear-Admiral Jaurès and myself in conjunction with your Excellency, I beg leave to acquaint you that it will be my duty to prevent the construction of any battery at the point named in your Excellency's despatch, as well as in any other position which would command the anchorage or town of Yokohama.

The port of Yokohama having been appropriated solely to commercial purposes for those Western nations having Treaties with Japan, there can be no necessity that it should be defended against them, whilst nothing but an aggressive act or repudiation of Treaty rights on the part of the Japanese need render it necessary for them to defend themselves from external enemies for many years to come.

I have, &c.

(Signed)

AUGUSTUS L. KUPER.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received January 9, 1864.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, November 16, 1863.

I HAVE the honour and great satisfaction to inform your Lordship that since the departure of the last mail the Tycoon's Ministers have voluntarily adopted the unexpected course of informing me officially, and in writing, that the Government of Yeddo having changed its policy, desire that I should return to them the letter relative to the Decree for the expulsion of foreigners from Japan.

My colleagues of the Treaty Powers received simultaneously a similar communication.

I have the honour to lay before your Lordship a copy of the Gorogio's letter, as well as of my reply acknowledging its receipt.

It would be premature for me to convey to your Lordship any confident assurance of belief on my part that with this announcement of the Tycoon's Government our prospective obstructions and difficulties have necessarily ceased to be probable: but I do entertain hopes of a respite from the extreme anxiety and overpowering danger which has so unceasingly hung over our relations with this country.

The motives which may have influenced the Councils of the Tycoon's Ministers can at present alone afford subject for surmise. Intestine disputes and rivalries prevailing among the Tycoon, the Mikado, and the Daimios, have very possibly induced the adoption of a conciliatory policy in its relations with foreign States. The pressure to which this Government had become exposed in the enforcement of redress by Her Majesty's Government for injuries sustained by British subjects, and still urged with increased intensity so far as regards the Prince of Satsuma, coupled with the continued presence of a formidable British fleet, can hardly be sustained, while the energies and resources of the Tycoon have been, as of late, directed to acquire the alliance of Satsuma himself against the Prince of Nagato, of Mito, and other rebellious Chiefs who menace the stability of his Throne.

On the other hand, the Tycoon's Government may in truth still find it essential to stay our anticipated action, and thus gain time for the accomplishment of their warlike armaments destined to be directed against ourselves. It will be to me an extreme subject of rejoicing when the time arrives that I am enabled to report to your Lordship unmistakeable signs of the permanent abandonment of all hostile or obstructive action on the part of the Yeddo Government, but this I cannot in any case speedily expect, for it is a marked characteristic of this people to be as tardy in their declaration of peaceful sentiments as of inimical feelings or designs.

The progress of time and events can alone, with any certainty, develop our prospects of amicable relations with this country. In the meanwhile I content myself with informing your Lordship that as the first apparent fruits of the new policy announced, trade has within the last few days considerably revived, and in some cases native traders have applied to our merchants for advances on account of produce, which they stated they hoped to bring down unrestrictedly from the country; and from the same source I learn that considerable quantities of British imports have been unexpectedly disposed of.

I have, &c.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to the Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.

Yokohama, November 14, 1863.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellencies' letter dated 1st of 10th month (11th November), informing me that the Government of the Tycoon had, for the present, changed its policy; and requesting that the letter addressed to me (as well as to the other Representatives of the Treaty Powers) by Ogasawara, regarding the closing of the ports, be returned to you.

I have to assure your Excellencies of my extreme satisfaction at learning that the Tycoon's Government has changed its policy with regard to foreign relations; and this intelligence, which I shall immediately communicate to my Government, will doubtless produce a conciliatory influence, and abate the painful and indignant impressions produced by the course hitherto pursued by the Tycoon's Ministers.

But your Excellencies have not informed me of what nature will be the new policy to be adopted; and the offending letter of Ogasawara, respecting the closing of the ports, has not only already reached the hands of the British Government, but has produced an impression tending to disturb all belief in the good faith of the Tycoon's Government. I cannot, therefore, predict what instructions may, in consequence, be addressed to me.

The policy which may now be adopted by the Tycoon's Ministers in regard to foreign relations will hereafter be exhibited and understood by its demeanour and acts, which will form the subject of my most anxious observation and attention. The policy of Her Majesty's Government, in the meanwhile, is invariably the same, namely, the maintenance of rights entered into by solemn Treaty with Japan, accompanied by a due consideration for the difficulties of the Tycoon's Government and its yet early relations with foreign States.

The letter of Ogasawara, to which your Excellencies refer, I now accordingly understand and record to have been withdrawn, cancelled, and retracted; its absolute return your Excellencies can hardly desire: should this be otherwise, I have no objection to return the letter in question.

With respect and consideration.

No. 75.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received January 9, 1864.)

(Extract.)

Yokohama, November 17, 1863.

WITH reference to my preceding despatch by this mail, your Lordship will be less surprised to learn that the Prince of Satsuma hastened to a sense of the increasing danger attending his obstinacy in withholding the redress and reparation sought at his hands, and by the urgent declarations I have of late addressed to the Tycoon's Government respecting a renewal of hostilities, has himself come forward and through his Envoys sought to terminate the difficulties into which he had fallen with Her Majesty's Government.

I had no scruples in respect to receiving the Prince's Envoys, more especially as they were accompanied by two of the Tycoon's officers, and I have the satisfaction to inform your Lordship that after long and protracted discussions extending over three days, the result has terminated in the agreement to make immediate payment of the indemnity, in an earnest written engagement not to relax in constant search for the murderers of Mr. Richardson, and to subject them to capital punishment in the presence of one or more British officers when arrested.

I could hardly hesitate to accept these engagements, for it would have amounted to an unceasing and indefinite protraction of hostile action to have insisted upon the immediate arrest and execution of the malefactors, while their power and ability to find or arrest them I was in no condition to assert or to prove.

That the Prince of Satsuma should acknowledge the perpetrators of the murder to be deserving of death, and that he should engage not to relax in his efforts to bring them to justice, are of themselves guarantees for the future, while these admissions will moreover be suspended in terrorem over him should he fail in this or any other matter to act with good faith in regard to British subjects or British interests.

The immediate departure of the mail precludes my offering any further observations upon this unexpectedly sudden and satisfactory termination of a most difficult transaction. I cannot, however, omit to acquaint your Lordship that the information which has reached us from various sources, including some of the officers of the Prince of Satsuma, establishes the fact that the losses sustained by the Prince and the punishment inflicted by Her Majesty's squadron at Kagosima were very considerable. The destruction of property is estimated at 1,000,000*l.* sterling, and the number of Satsuma's adherents killed and wounded is stated to have been 1,500.

No. 76.

Earl Russell to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir,

Foreign Office, January 11, 1864.

I HAVE received your despatches of the 16th and 17th of November, the one reporting the withdrawal by the Government of the Tycoon of the order for the expulsion of foreigners, the other giving an account of your communications with the agents of the Prince of Satsuma, which terminated in an agreement that the Prince should pay the indemnity demanded of him for the sufferers on the 14th of September, 1862, and should endeavour to the utmost to discover the murderers of Mr. Richardson, and should cause them, when discovered, to be executed in the presence of British officers as witnesses of the execution.

Her Majesty's Government have received with the greatest satisfaction this intelligence of the termination of the pressing difficulties with Japan, and I have to convey to you their entire approval of the conciliatory and judicious manner in which you have conducted yourself generally in these matters.

Her Majesty's Government trust that they may now look forward to British intercourse with Japan being carried on without giving occasion for future collision. It is their earnest desire that nothing should occur to interfere with peaceful commerce, and they are prepared to make full allowance for the peculiar character of the Japanese Government. In short, the employment of measures of coercion or retaliation could only be warranted, in their opinion, by the necessity of prompt interference for the protection of the lives and properties of British subjects, or for the vindication of the honour of the British flag if assailed by wanton attacks on the part of the Government or influential nobles.

Her Majesty's Government are glad to find that the return of friendly relations has been quickly followed by an increased trade; but Her Majesty's Government approve your interference with the Japanese Government, as reported in your despatch of the 16th of November, to prevent the erection of batteries which would have placed foreign shipping at Yokohama in a disadvantageous position in case of any difference with the Japanese Government.

I am, &c.

Correspondence respecting Affairs in Japan.

No. 1.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received March 13, 1864.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, December 17, 1863.

BY the mail which left this on the 2nd instant, I had the honour to acquaint your Lordship that the Envoys of the Prince of Satsuma had failed to carry out the arrangements which had been agreed upon. It now affords me extreme satisfaction to state that the whole of the stipulations have been definitely settled and determined.

On the 9th instant the Envoys returned from Yeddo to Yokohama, and held an interview with me lasting several hours, at which endeavours were resorted to on their part to soften and smooth down the terms and circumstances under which the demands were originally preferred by me upon the Prince of Satsuma, in accordance with my instructions. They desired that the money which they were about to pay over to me should be considered in the light of a deposit, the absolute payment of which might take place hereafter, and that they accordingly only required a simple or temporary receipt. These obstacles and objections, pertinaciously urged during some hours, were utterly rejected by me, and as good-humouredly one by one abandoned by the Envoys. The indemnity money was brought to the Legation and the sum of 100,000 dollars duly paid, that sum being the equivalent of 25,000*l.* sterling at the current rate of exchange. It will, I trust, be obvious to your Lordship that I could hardly have imposed other terms in respect to the value of the dollar.

While the money was in course of counting and of shroffing, I received from the Envoys a written engagement in respect to the pursuit, and execution when arrested, of the principal perpetrators of the murder of Mr. Richardson. Your Lordship will observe that this document, a copy of which I have the honour to inclose, is countersigned by two of the Tycoon's officers as attesting witnesses. The agents of Satsuma now expressed a desire that I should furnish them with a written promise to facilitate the purchase of a ship of war in England. I saw no material objection to this, if the terms in which such promise was conveyed were expressed with a view to all contingencies, and I accordingly furnished them with a memorandum, a copy of which I have the honour to inclose, and with which they expressed themselves entirely satisfied.

Thus, my Lord, I have the honour and satisfaction to report to your Lordship by this occasion the final accomplishment of my instructions. They involved demands of a serious nature—at one period invoked a crisis which presented the prospect of absolute war with this country. Patience and perseverance, coupled with the uninterrupted presence of a powerful British squadron, and greatly aided by the episode which ended in the hard blows struck at Kagosima, have brought about these results. I have every reason to believe that the salutary impression they have produced upon the Government and Daimios of Japan will be as lasting as they will be valuable to ourselves during the course of our future relations with this country. Nor can I resist the expression of the satisfaction I have derived at the accomplishment of my unabating endeavours to avert even a partial or momentary cessation of our commercial relations with Japan throughout these difficulties. Grave as were the complications, those relations have not only uninterruptedly continued, but have increased in value and extent.

With respect to the present general aspect of our position in this country I had hardly anticipated being in a position to refer to any conciliatory expressions of goodwill on the part of the Tycoon's Government, which so lately renewed the desire repelled by me to discuss the subject of the abandonment of Yokohama by foreigners; and yet hardly have the agents of Satsuma acquitted themselves of their voluntary mission of pacification when most unexpectedly I received a congratulatory despatch from the Tycoon's Ministers, accompanied by words of goodwill and promise for the future, a copy of which I have the satisfaction to lay before your Lordship. Holding in view, however, the internal situation of this country, agitated by strife and powerful rivalries, amidst which an anti-foreign element is so conspicuous, I cannot at present venture to hazard any expression of absolute belief in the friendly policy likely to be pursued by the Tycoon's Government in respect to its foreign relations. But the knowledge that a military force within certain limits has been rendered available to me by Her Majesty's Government and the continued presence of the squadron sufficiently ensures the communities against all danger of violence. In the meanwhile so long as our actual situation in this country continues in its present position and in the absence of further instructions from your Lordship, I do not propose to call upon the Major-General commanding Her Majesty's forces in China to send over to Japan any other troops than the small body of 150 men daily expected, and for whose reception every arrangement has been completed by me without the slightest expression of opposition or dissent on the part of the Tycoon's Government.

I have, &c.

Yokohama, December 11, 1863.

THE money demanded by the British Government having been paid by the officers of Shimadzu Awadzi no Kami, a branch of the family of Satsuma, we hereby promise as follows:—

The persons who last autumn, in the eighth month (14th September, 1862), killed and wounded your countrymen at Namamugi, on the tokaïdo, have escaped from that place, and although we have diligently searched for them their place of abode has not been found out.

And as also some time has passed, it is not possible to state with certainty whether they are still alive, but we will use every diligence in searching for them, and as soon as arrested punish the same with death, in the presence of your country's officers.

As a promise for the future we sign this.

Memorandum.

British Legation in Japan, December 11, 1863.

THE basis of goodwill and amity being established by the settlement of the demands preferred on the Prince of Satsuma and the agents of the Prince of Satsuma having preferred to the Undersigned, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, a request in presence of officers of the Tycoon, and as a token of friendly feeling re-established, that he would facilitate the desire of the Prince of Satsuma to purchase a ship of war in England, Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires does hereby engage to represent such request when formally and specifically preferred to Her Majesty's Government, provided that at the period when such request is made or in course of execution the relations of the Tycoon's Government with Great Britain in general, and the proceedings and disposition of the Prince of Satsuma in particular, are not inimical or directed against the rights acquired by Treaties now existing between the Tycoon of Japan, Great Britain, and other friendly States.

Given at Yokohama, this 11th day of December, 1863.

(Signed)

EDWD. ST. JOHN NEALE,

Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires.

Inclosure 3 in No. 1.

The Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Yeddo, December 13, 1863.

WE beg to make the following communication to your Excellency.

With respect to the murder which was committed last year upon a British merchant at Namamugi, on the tokaido, the subjects of Matsudaïra Soori no Daiboo and Shimadzu Awadzi no Kami, of the family of Satsuma, have lately had an interview with you, and the negotiation was of a peaceful nature, thus affording a proof that the subjects of Soori no Daiboo (Satsuma) will search for and punish the murderer, as by their written engagement. The indemnity money was moreover handed over by the subjects of Awadzi no Kami of the family of Satsuma, and also as a proof of peace, the engagement entered into by you to facilitate the purchase of a man-of-war in terms of the writing was given, and everything ended satisfactorily, which we have fully understood from the communication received from our Government officers who were present.

It gives us great pleasure, as it is a sign of the continuance of a lasting friendship between the two countries.

With respect and consideration.

The 3rd day of the 11th month of the 3rd year of Bungkew (December 13, 1863.)

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received March 13, 1864.)

My Lord, Yokohama, December 17, 1863.

I HAVE herewith the honour to transmit to your Lordship copies of a despatch which I have addressed to Admiral Kuper acquainting him of the settlement of the differences with the Prince of Satsuma and of the Admiral's reply.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 1 in No. 2.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Vice-Admiral Kuper.

Sir, Yokohama, December 14, 1863.

IT is with the utmost satisfaction I am enabled officially to acquaint you that the demands I preferred upon the Prince of Satsuma, under instructions from Her Majesty's Government, have at length been acceded to and acquitted, so far as such has been practicable or possible.

The money indemnity demanded (25,000*l.*) has been paid over to this Legation, and in respect to the arrest and punishment of the actual perpetrators of the murder of Mr. Richardson, I have the honour to inclose for your information a copy of the written engagement by which the Prince of Satsuma, through his Agents, binds himself to cause a diligent pursuit to be continued to be made for them, coupled with the distinct assurance that they shall be executed when arrested in the presence of British officers. You will observe that two of the Tycoon's officers are attesting witnesses to these engagements.

I need hardly refer to the extreme difficulties, obstructions, episodes, and incidents which have attended the execution of the instructions addressed to us in regard to this matter. They have been carried out by our uninterrupted mutual accordance and co-operation during nine eventful months, and it only remains for me to trust that the result of our efforts may be viewed with satisfaction and approval by Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 2 in No. 2.

Vice-Admiral Kuper to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir,

"Euryalus," at Yokohama, December 15, 1863.

IN acknowledging the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, communicating the payment, by the agents of the Prince of Satsuma, of the indemnity of 25,000*l.*, and covering the copy of a document in which those agents engage to cause diligent pursuit to be made for the murderers of Mr. Richardson, &c., I desire to express to you my gratification at the successful termination of the tedious and difficult negotiations which have resulted from the duties of enforcing the demands in accordance with our respective instructions.

Although much unavoidable delay has ensued in carrying out those instructions, I cannot but feel assured that the result attained, and the exertions and arguments which have been used to bring it about, will be viewed with entire approbation by Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.

(Signed) AUGUSTUS L. KUPER.

No. 3.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received March 13, 1864.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, December 30, 1863.

BY the last mail I had the honour to report to your Lordship the successful termination of our pending differences with the Prince of Satsuma. The voluntary submission of the Prince to the pressure brought to bear upon him, the payment of the money indemnity demanded, and the entry into a formal engagement on his part through his agents to bring to condign punishment the principal perpetrators of the murder of Mr. Richardson, when arrested, accomplish the object of our demands.

I may add that the evident aim and solicitude of the agents of Satsuma in their interviews with me was to avert by all means in their power the probability of a revisitation of the Prince's territory by Her Majesty's naval forces, so great had been the extent of the chastisement and destruction inflicted upon the recent occasion. The Prince of Satsuma and his adherents will not again, I am well assured, offend the British Government by outrages committed upon British subjects; nor was the settlement of the past accompanied by a sullen acquiescence to political necessities. The agents of Satsuma, acting on behalf of their Prince, and in the presence of the Tycoon's officers, acknowledged in conversation with the members of this Legation the irresistible superiority of our power and their desire to remain with us on friendly terms. While so expressing themselves, they concluded their last interview with me by offering some trifling presents, not the less significant of goodwill, to the Admiral, myself, and other officers, among which I would especially remark some baskets of fruit, which they desired might be presented to the crew of the flag-ship.

Thus for the present was terminated our immediate differences with one of the most powerful of the Daimios of Japan, accomplished by circumstances which, I venture to apprehend, cannot but influence the solution of any conflict into which in the course of events we may happen to be drawn with other feudal Chiefs striving to resist our Treaty relations with this country.

I have, &c.

My Lord,

Yokohama, December 31, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to transmit, for the information of your Lordship, a copy of a despatch addressed to me by Her Majesty's Consul at Kanagawa-Yokohama, reporting on the state and condition of foreign trade at this date within his Consular district.

I have, &c.

Inclosure in No. 4.

Consul Winchester to Lieutenant-Colonel Neale.

Sir,

British Consulate, Kanagawa, December 24, 1863.

SINCE I had the honour to address you in my despatch of the 9th instant, respecting some interruption in the conveyance of cattle to the settlement, I have had no further complaint from any of the provisioners on that score.

There has been some deficiency in the supply and a consequent rise in the price of poultry, game, and other articles; but this is partly to be attributed to the large demand for such articles incidental to the festivities of the season at a port where there is so large a squadron of war vessels.

A number of curio-shops in the main street are shut up. Various causes are given as accounting for this. The principals of these establishments are said to have been either killed or threatened in the recent disturbances at Yeddo, excited against Japanese engaged in foreign trade. Other statements refer to forbidden operations connected with the currency market here as the reason for the closure of these shops, while in one case it is believed that the disposal to a foreign merchant of gold cobangs stolen from the Tycoon's palace during the last fire has been the cause of trouble.

A system of terror involving the lives of several Japanese merchants has been unscrupulously instituted at Yeddo; but to what extent the Tycoon's Government are implicated in these proceedings either by direct order, secret instigation, or tacit sanction, it is impossible to say.

Reflection on the extraordinary rise in the value of silk and cotton, the articles so eagerly sought for by foreigners, is scarcely necessary to convince one that the extension of foreign trade is likely to create much discontent among large classes of Japanese, not deriving immediate and visible benefit from foreign trade. Raw cotton, so universally employed for the garments of the poorer classes, sold formerly at five to six dollars per picul all over Japan. Its value in the Yokohama market to-day is thirty-five dollars for the same weight.

One of the demands of the party inimical to foreign trade is stated to have been the distribution of large gratuities to the poorer classes of the capital.

Indeed there is some reason to think, looking to the fact that there has been little or no interruption to the trade of the settlement, that the whole of these proceedings have been set on foot with no other intention than to extort a large share of the profits of the native dealers.

However this may be, there is no lack either of silk or cotton in the market; and I am informed that the stock of imports in foreign hands is almost quite exhausted.

I have, &c.

(Signed) CHARLES A. WINCHESTER.

No. 5.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neale to Earl Russell.—(Received March 13.)

My Lord,

Yokohama, January 16, 1864.

THE misconceptions which appear to have influenced the remarks of some of the public journals in England, in respect to the proceedings at Kagosima, as published in the "London Gazette," I venture to conceive renders it proper that I should place upon record a series of facts, the official recital of which did not seem to me at the time to be of urgent necessity.

The statements of the Prince of Satsuma's agents herewith inclosed, were made in free and friendly conversation with the members of this Legation, while the indemnity money was in course of counting and reception.

I deem it desirable to add that the population of Kagosima at no period exceeded 40,000 inhabitants, far less 180,000, as has been strangely imagined, to serve as a more striking text for comments; and further, that those 40,000 souls—men, women, and children—withdrew, while their huts and paper houses incurred the risks attendant upon stray shot and shell from a British squadron, audaciously fired upon by numerous batteries because it had signalled its intention to obtain redress for a barbarous murder and outrage committed upon British subjects, for which all redress had been evaded.

Subsequent events, the voluntary payment of the indemnity demanded, the formal obligation entered into to execute the murderers of Mr. Richardson when arrested, the professions of friendship cheerfully expressed by Satsuma's Envoys on behalf of their Chief, their desire to cultivate friendly and social intercourse with the British nation, and their good humour and graceful offerings (of fruit) to the crew of the flag-ship of the British Admiral, after the facts of Kagosima—would all imply that the agents of Her Majesty displayed a degree of caution and moderation duly appreciated by those most deeply interested.

I have, &c.

(Signed) EDWD. ST. JOHN NEALE.

Inclosure in No. 5.

Purport of the Conversation and Statements of the Agents of the Prince of Satsuma on the occasion of the Payment of the Indemnity Money at Her Majesty's Legation on the 11th day of December, 1863.

THE agents for the payment of the indemnity stated that they had taken advantage of a coming typhoon at Kagosima to fire on the squadron, but that the typhoon had been the cause of the extent of the conflagration, and in consequence of there being no people in the town to put it out.

That the number of soldiers collected in and about the batteries was 6,000.

That immediately upon the appearance of the squadron, and even previously (as they had heard through Nagasaki it was coming), the Prince of Satsuma had ordered the inhabitants to retire into the villages, and that therefore no harm had happened to the people.

That if we returned to Kagosima we should find the town nearly restored to its original state.

That reserves of soldiers were kept outside the batteries, but that it was difficult to get them to go into them to supply the place of those who were killed.

That immediately upon our taking the steamers a horseman had been despatched at full speed to ask the Prince of Satsuma what should be done, when he directed that the batteries should immediately open fire upon the squadron.

RETURN to an Address of the Honourable the House of Commons, dated February 15, 1864;
for—

“A Copy of the Agreement with the Persian Government, arranged by Mr. Eastwick in December 1862, for the purpose of constructing a Line of Telegraph through Persia, and of all Correspondence relating thereto.”

No. 1.

Mr. Merivale to Lord Wodehouse.—(Received May 18.)

My Lord,

India Office, May 17, 1861.

I AM directed by Sir Charles Wood to forward, herewith, for Lord John Russell's information, the copy of a letter and its inclosure which has been addressed to the Persian Ambassador at this Court, regarding a proposed agreement between the Indian and the Persian Governments for constructing a line of telegraph through Persia to India.

I have, &c.

(Signed) HERMAN MERIVALE.

Inclosure 1 in No. 1.

Sir C. Wood to Meerza Djaaffer Khan.

Sir,

India Office, May 17, 1861.

IN accordance with the understanding at the last interview which I had the pleasure of having with your Excellency, I beg to forward to you a Memorandum of the terms on which I am of opinion that an agreement might be made between the Persian and Indian Governments for the construction of a line of telegraph from the Turkish frontier through Persia to Bunder Abbas, which shall form a component part of a line of telegraph from this country to India; and, in doing so, I request that your Excellency will express to His Majesty the Shah the gratification with which Her Majesty's Government will co-operate with His Majesty in establishing a system of communication which cannot fail to be of mutual advantage to both countries.

In order to save the next season for work, it would be necessary to take immediate measures for providing the stores which must be sent from this country. I have therefore to enquire whether, in the opinion of your Excellency, His Majesty the Shah will concur in the expediency of commencing operations in October next.

I have, &c.

(Signed) C. WOOD.

Inclosure 2 in No. 1.

Memorandum of proposed Terms of Agreement.

1. That the line should commence at Bagdad, proceed from thence to Tehran and, from that city, vid Ispahan and Sheraz, to Bunder Abbas.

2. That the expense of constructing the work should be shared equally by the two countries.*

3. That the line should be executed under the superintendence of British officers, to be selected by the Secretary of State for India.

* In carrying out this condition it should be understood that the Persian Government will provide the timber posts, the inland carriage, and the labour; the Indian Government supplying the iron wire, insulators, &c., at such ports as may be decided on.

4. That the line should consist of two wires, one of which should be for the exclusive use of the Persian and British Governments respectively. If either wire should become unserviceable, the one in good order should be available for both Governments.

5. That the expense of working and maintaining the line be divided between the two Governments; but that each Government should be entitled to be repaid the amount of this charge from the value of the messages sent by them respectively according to the rates specified in a tariff to be determined on.

6. As the line, when finished, will be the property of the Persian Government, the sums advanced by the British Government for the construction of the line should be repaid to them by the value of the messages sent by them beyond that required for defraying their share of the maintenance and working the line, calculated as above.

7. In the event of the line being destroyed by subjects of the Shah, or in the event of the British and Indian Governments being deprived of its use by the act of a subject of the Persian Government, before the British Government is repaid under Clause 6, the sum due to the British Government should be repaid to them by the Government of Persia.

No. 2.

Earl Russell to Mr. Alison.

Sir,

Foreign Office, May 28, 1861.

I TRANSMIT for your information a copy of a letter from the India Office,* inclosing a communication which Secretary Sir Charles Wood has addressed to the Persian Ambassador at this Court, respecting a projected agreement between the Persian and Indian Governments for the construction of a telegraph through Persia to India.

I shall be glad to receive any observations which you may have to make upon this subject.

I am, &c.

(Signed) RUSSELL.

India Office, June 1, 1861.

IN continuation of my letter dated the 17th instant, I have to forward herewith, by desire of Sir Charles Wood, copy of a letter which has been received from the Persian Ambassador at this Court, and of the reply thereto, regarding the construction of a line of telegraph through Persia.

Claridge's Hotel, May 20, 1861.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th of May, and as I find that certain matters contained in it are not exactly in conformity with the wishes which I expressed to you at our recent interview, I beg to trouble you with the following observations on the points at issue.

The Persian Government is not in itself at all anxious about the construction of telegraphs in the Persian territory, because it feels that there are many other branches of public expenditure that are of more importance to the country; and if His Majesty the Shah could be thus induced to support such an undertaking, it would be mainly with a view of thereby securing the friendship and good feeling of the English Government. It appears to me that two modes of proceeding, in regard to the telegraph, offer themselves for consideration.

Firstly.—The British Government might obtain the sanction of Persia to the construction of a telegraphic line upon Persian soil from Bagdad towards Kurrachee by whatever route might be thought advisable, the Persian Government being granted in return the privilege of transmitting a certain number of words daily through the telegraph, free of expense; and the telegraph and its revenues becoming the property of the Persian Government, after remaining for a certain number of years in the hands of the British constructors (a proposition to this effect has indeed been already made from Paris to the Government of Persia); and the Persian Government would on its part engage that the material required from the country for the use of the telegraph should be supplied at the market rates, and would further use all due exertion in protecting the line.

The other mode of proceeding would lie in the construction of a telegraph from the Bagdad frontier (not from the city of Bagdad) to Bunder Abbas, at the joint expense of the English and Persian Governments, under certain conditions which I previously mentioned, and which I have now the honour to repeat: namely, that as there is really no public call for a telegraph in Persia itself, nor any possibility of the results obtained from it in the country being at all commensurate with the expense of making it, it would be necessary, in order to interest His Majesty the Shah in the undertaking, and to induce him to join in the construction of the line, that there should be a handsome bonus offered by the British Government, such as the supply of wire without deducting its expense from the value of messages transmitted, or the direct allowance of a sum of money independently of all joint outlay.

India Office, May 31, 1861.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's letter, dated the 20th instant, and with regard to the modified arrangements which you have proposed for taking the line of telegraph from this country to India through Persia, I have to state that, if instead of the proposed plan submitted with my letter of the 17th instant, His Majesty the Shah would prefer that the line from the frontier near Bagdad to Bunder Abbas should be altogether constructed and worked by British officers, and at the expense of the Indian Government. Her Majesty's Government will not object to the arrangement, upon the condition that the line should remain in the hands of the Indian Government for a certain number of years, say twenty-five, all expenses being paid and all receipts being retained by them, and that after this period, during which the Persian Government should have the privilege of transmitting a certain number of words daily free of expense, the telegraph and its revenues should become the property of the Persian Government, all expense attending the working and maintaining it being then, of course, borne by that Government, who should undertake to keep it in perfect working order and to convey the messages of the British and Indian Governments at a rate to be mutually agreed on.

Earl Russell to Mr. Alison.

Foreign Office, June 6, 1861.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 28th ultimo, I transmit for your information a copy of a letter from the India Office,* inclosing further correspondence which has passed between the Secretary of State and Meerza Djaaffer Khan on the proposed construction of a telegraph through Persia to India.

You will perceive that the Persian Ambassador has proposed to modify the terms of agreement with regard to this projected telegraph which were communicated to his Excellency on the 17th of May, and that Sir Charles Wood has stated in his letter to the Persian Ambassador of the 31st ultimo the conditional modification to which he would agree, in the event of the non-acceptance of his original proposal by the Persian Government.

The Persian Ambassador is now on his way back to Persia, and will probably reach Tehran soon after my present instruction, and it is not, therefore, likely that much time would be lost, by waiting for his arrival, in obtaining decision with regard to the proposed telegraphic line.

No. 5.

Mr. Merivale to Lord Wodehouse.—(Received June 7.)

My Lord,

India Office, June 6, 1861.

WITH reference to my letters of the 17th May and 1st June, regarding the negotiations which have been going on for taking a line of telegraph from Turkey through Persia to India, I am desired by Sir Charles Wood to request that Sir Henry Bulwer may be instructed by Lord John Russell to tell Colonel Kemball that he is not to adopt measures for continuing the line from Bagdad to Bussorah, or any other place, without further orders from the Government.

It would at the same time be desirable that Sir Henry Bulwer should be asked to ascertain whether, in the event of the line from Bagdad to India, by Bussorah and the Persian Gulf, being superseded by one overland through Persia and Beloochistan, the Turkish Government would not consider that the Indian Government had fulfilled their engagement by connecting Bagdad with the proposed Persian line at the frontier near that place, instead of taking the line on to Bussorah.

No. 6.

Mr. Alison to Earl Russell.—(Received October. 17.)

My Lord,

Camp near Tehran, September 4, 1861.

I RECEIVED the letter inclosed, in copy, from the Musheer-ed-Dowleh, on the 24th ultimo.

I was encouraged to hope, from the tenour of this communication, that the Government of the Shah was prepared to enter upon the subject of the telegraph line to India through Persia; but I was informed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs that it was the King's intention to wait for the arrival of Meerza Djafer Khan from Tabreez, and, under the instruction from your Lordship's office, I have assented to this course.

Meanwhile much valuable time is being lost by the dilatory movements of the ex-Ambassador; and, although he has been summoned by telegraph to proceed hither forthwith, I learn by a telegraphic despatch received yesterday, that he has not yet left Tabreez, and cannot, therefore, be expected to arrive here under twenty days at least.

I elicit from the Minister for Foreign Affairs that the Shah's Government has some misgivings as to its ability to protect the proposed line to Bunder Abbas, unless the British Government should consent to defray the expense.

His Excellency observed, "to protect the Tabreez line, which is on the safest route in Persia, we are obliged to employ 200 horsemen. To afford equal protection to the Bunder Abbas line would require nearly 2,000, and surely the Musheer-ed-Dowleh could not have meant that the expense of maintaining these should be defrayed by Persia."

These remarks, however, have reference only to the clause suggesting that the line should be constructed by and reserved for the exclusive use of the Indian Government for a certain number of years.

In this case the advantage to be derived by Persia, of having a certain number of words conveyed daily free of expense, would not compensate for the heavy expense attending the protection of the line.

I think it would be desirable that a gentleman conversant with the subject of telegraphic communication in all its details, should be attached to this Mission pending the negotiations.

I have, &c.

August 10, 1861.

THANK God, I have reached Tabreez in good health on my return from London. It was my intention to proceed without delay to the capital. But, owing to the non-arrival of the baggage of this Embassy, and with a view to the arrangement of certain matters connected with this Province, it became necessary that I should remain some time at Tabreez.

The British Government, being desirous that a telegraph should be extended from Bagdad to Kurrachee, and that an arrangement to that effect should be made as soon as possible with the Persian Ministers, and also that the necessary materials should this year be conveyed to Bunder Abbas, I gave a promise to Sir Charles Wood that I should do everything in my power to reach Tehran soon.

If you deem it expedient that no more time should be lost, you might, without waiting to hear further from me, begin to discuss the settlement of this question with the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Meerza Saeed Khan.

Please God, this important affair will, through your good exertions and zeal for the interests of both Governments and for the welfare of Persia, be brought to a speedy and satisfactory result.

It is not improbable that I may reach Tehran before the termination of your negotiations.

Sir,

Foreign Office, November 8, 1861.

I AM directed by Earl Russell to transmit to you, to be laid before the Secretary of State for India, copies of a despatch and of its inclosure from Her Majesty's Minister in Persia,* respecting the proposed line of telegraph through that country to India. Mr. Alison suggests that some person conversant with the subject of telegraphic communication in all its details should be sent out to Tehran, to remain there during the negotiations with the Persian Government; and I am to state that Lord Russell would be glad to know whether Sir Charles Wood deems it expedient to act upon this suggestion by appointing such a person to proceed to the Persian capital.

No. 10.

Mr. Alison to Earl Russell.—(Received December 14.)

(Extract.)

Tehran, November 5, 1861.

ON the 24th ultimo the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs called upon me on the part of the Meerza Saeed Khan, and stated that the Persian Government accepted the proposals made on the part of Her Majesty's Government for the construction of the telegraph, with certain additional conditions, viz :—

1. That in case of England being at war with some other state, and Persia being induced by that state to stop the working of the line, then Persia should pay to England the whole expense incurred in the construction and working of the line, deducting the amount which may have been received up to that time for messages.

2. That every person employed for the protection of the line, whether Agent, Gholaum, or Sarbaz, that is, mounted or foot patrol, should be paid by the British Government.

3. That there being a tract of country in the direction of Scinde over which Persia claimed authority, but which would not pay for holding, the English should for the present protect the line in that tract of territory, but give to Persia a paper setting forth that the claim of Persia to that tract was not invalidated, and if Persia should hereafter be strong enough to protect the line, then the British Government would resign the protection of it into the hands of Persia.

The first part of these conditions, the Under Secretary states, had been proposed by the Musheer-ed-Dowleh to Sir Charles Wood, and accepted by him, although it does not appear in the correspondence from the India Office forwarded to me by your Lordship.

With respect to the second condition, it might be impolitic on the part of Her Majesty's Government to refuse to contribute in a liberal spirit towards the protection of the line, for such a course might serve as an excuse for its frequent interruption. But it will be necessary to come to a full understanding on this subject, more particularly as the insertion of the word "Sarbaz," or soldier, would seem to imply an intention on the part of the Persian Government to provide for a certain number of its troops.

The Musheer-ed-Dowleh thinks that 6,000*l.* per annum will cover all expenses.

With respect to the third additional clause, I think it is immaterial whether Her Majesty's Government agree to it or not.

With the view of affording Her Majesty's Government the fullest information on this subject, as well as to state with indisputable accuracy the text of the proposed additions, I have endeavoured to procure them in writing, and in a more developed state, from the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs ; but, although promised to me several times, the paper will not be forthcoming, I fear, in time to go by this messenger.

The Musheer-ed-Dowleh, in the mean time, called upon me with the evident intention of committing me to an acceptance of the proposed additions ; but I told him that it was impossible for me to form a just appreciation of them, unless I received them in writing.

In the event of Her Majesty's Government being able to come to a decision on the information thus far conveyed to it, I would suggest that a draft of Convention, or Agreement, be prepared at the Foreign Office, and sent out by a gentleman conversant with the details of the telegraphic system.

No. 11.

Mr. Alison to Earl Russell.—(Received December 14.)

My Lord,

Tehran, November 6, 1861.

WITH reference to my despatch of yesterday's date, respecting the proposed telegraphic line through Persia, I have the honour to inclose copy and translation of a paper which has been just sent to me by the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The report of the First Meerza, conveying his Excellency's message, is also enclosed in translation.

This Memorandum contains the additional articles stipulated for by Persia, as already reported, in a more stringent form, with an additional article, by which Persia may at any time purchase the line, and take upon itself the expense of protecting it ; and which, if ever carried into effect, would annul the right of the British Government to maintain possession for twenty-five years.

There is no time before the departure of the messenger to see the Minister for Foreign Affairs on this subject, but I shall inform his Excellency that I have referred the question to the decision of Her Majesty's Government.

Inclosure 1 in No. 11.

Memorandum.(Translation.) Tehran, November 6, 1861.

WITH regard to the carrying the line of telegraph from Bagdad to the Port of Kurrachee through the Persian territory, the following conditions have been proposed:—

1st. The expenses of construction shall be defrayed by the English Government from first to last.

2ndly. The line shall remain in the hands of persons appointed by the said English Government, without the interference of any other party, for twenty-five years, and during the said period the profits of the line shall be received by the English Government.

3rdly. The Persian Government shall have the right to transmit a number of words, which shall be agreed upon, to any place it may desire, in the form of question and answer, without payment.

4thly. The Persian Government shall issue a stringent order that in every province the materials for the telegraph shall be sold to the English officers at the current price of the day, and no higher price shall be demanded.

5thly. The Persian Government shall use its utmost endeavour to protect the line.

6thly. If the English Government shall be at war with a foreign Government, and the Persian Government through the influence and at the instigation of that foreign Power shall stop (the extension of) the telegraph line through its own territories, then the Persian Government shall be bound to pay, after deducting the profits, the balance of expenses incurred by the English Government for the line.

The above conditions have been submitted to His Majesty the Shah, and, in accordance with his decision, the Persian Government will accept them with the following additional provisos:—

That the English Government shall pay the expenses of protecting the line as far as the Persian Government has the power and authority to protect it.

Also that the English Government shall engage that whatever power and authority, and proprietary right the Persian Government from former times to the present day possessed and possesses, from Bunder Abbas to the frontier of Scinde, shall remain in statu quo, without augmentation or diminution.

Also that whenever the Persian Government shall, from any cause whatever, desire to increase its power in those territories, the English Government shall in no way whatever either overtly or secretly oppose the same.

Also, that if the Persian Government, through the increase of its authority and power, should be able to undertake the protection of the line in those its territories, then the expense of protecting the line there also shall be defrayed by the English Government.

If the Persian Government should at any time consider it desirable to reimburse the English Government for the expenses of the telegraph from Khanakeen to the other extremity of its territories, after deducting the profits received during the intervening period, and shall not require the expenses for protecting the line, then the telegraph from Khanakeen to the aforesaid point, both as regards the property and the profits, shall belong to the Persian Government.

Minor points, which do not require to be specified at present, shall be settled between the agents of the two Governments when the work is commenced.

Inclosure 2 in No. 11.

Meerza Sultan Khan to Mr. Alison.(Translation.) November 6, 1861.

THE Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs having this day sent for me, gave me the Memorandum which had been written regarding the telegraph, and said that His Majesty the Shah had requested that the British Minister should have the Memorandum clearly translated and sent to the English Government.

If the English Government had given to the British Minister such full powers as that he did not require a second permission, then it might be arranged that the contract be concluded. If not, the British Minister might communicate the matter to the British Government, and after obtaining the sanction of his Government, the Persian Government was ready to conclude the contract, in accordance with the conditions specified in the Memorandum.

Wood, a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran, reporting the nature of these additional conditions, and giving his opinion with respect to them.

No. 13.

Mr. Alison to Earl Russell.—(Received January 23, 1862.)

(Extract.)

Tehran, November 19, 1861.

FERROOKH KHAN called upon me a few days ago, and dwelt much on the subject of the projected telegraph through Persia. He expressed an anxious desire that it should be carried out.

I observed to his Excellency, that it was a pity the proposals made by Her Majesty's Government had not been accepted unconditionally by Persia.

On my observing that, though I had tried to elicit a clear answer, I was still kept in the dark as to the probable cost of protecting the line, Ferrookh Khan assured me that Her Majesty's Government need not trouble their minds on this score. The expense of protecting the line now established between Tehran and Tabreez could at any moment be ascertained and taken as a basis whereon to reckon the cost of protecting the line between Khanakeen and Bunder Abbas. The amount would not, in his opinion, exceed, at the utmost, 30,000 tomans, (14,500*l.*) a-year.

I then took occasion to remark, that it would have been better had the conditions relative to the country between Bunder Abbas and Scinde been altogether left out; for these might require consideration and involve a delay of some time; while, if the telegraph was to be made, no time should be lost.

Ferrookh Khan thought that Persia ought not to be blamed for making some allusion to, and thus avoid future misunderstanding respecting a country which undoubtedly belonged to her, but over which she was not at present prepared to exercise a direct control.

He concluded by expressing a strong hope that I would do my utmost to induce Her Majesty's Government to adhere to their intention of extending the telegraphic line through Persia, which he looked upon as a matter of great importance to England, and as an immense boon to this country.

Subsequently to this interview I received a message from the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs, that little weight need be attached to the stipulation regarding Persia's right to buy up the line at any time. Persia was never likely, his Excellency said, to pay the large sum requisite for this purpose. He added, that it was also very unlikely that action would ever be taken on the stipulation referring to Beloochistan.

The result of my inquiries respecting the telegraph between Tehran and Tabreez is, that its construction cost about 36,000 tomans (17,000*l.*); that, besides the persons employed at its four stations, about 39 in number, it is protected by 200 mounted guards, two for every "farsakh" or four miles; that half of these guards, being exempted from taxes, cost about 1,200*l.* a-year, and the other half about 2,500*l.*, besides the usual subsistence-allowance of a few pence a-day to every man. The posts on this line are made of poplar, and cost about 8*s.* 6*d.* each. Those on which the bells are fixed cost about 4*l.* each.

The person who superintends this line thinks that the construction of one from Khanakeen to Bunder Abbas would cost at least 50,000*l.*; and that it would be a very important precaution to have a Persian Commissioner of high rank appointed, who should have the charge of supplying us with all requisite materials.

No. 14.

Mr. Baring to Mr. Hammond.—(Received January 23.)

Sir, India Office, January 22, 1862.

I AM directed by Sir Charles Wood to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th ultimo, with its inclosures from Mr. Alison, announcing the conditions upon which the Persian Government has consented to accept the proposals made for the construction of a line of telegraph through Persia.

These conditions were embodied by the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs in the Memorandum, a translation of which Mr. Alison has forwarded as Inclosure No. 1 of his letter of the 6th November last.

I am to offer the following observations upon the new Articles proposed by the Persian Government, which commence with that numbered 6 in the Memorandum.

Sir Charles Wood cannot anticipate that the Persian Government will ever act in so unfriendly a manner towards Her Majesty's Government as to interrupt the communication by telegraph through Persia to India, at the instigation of a foreign Power, whilst friendly relations between Great Britain and Persia are continued. In such a case, however, Her Majesty's Government would clearly be entitled to demand that the net expenses incurred by the Government of India in the construction and defence of the line should be paid by the Persian Government, and Sir Charles Wood does not see any objection to the insertion of an article in which the Persian Government admits this liability.

Sir Charles Wood cannot agree to the next new Article, which stipulates that the whole expenses of protecting the line shall be borne by the English Government. No reliable estimate of the cost of protection has been furnished; but the Secretary of State for India in Council will undertake to pay half the total expense to be incurred by the Persian Government for the protection of the line between Khanakeen and Bunder Abbas, a distance of about 1,300 miles, provided that the contribution does not exceed 6,000*l.* per annum, that payment is to cease if the communication is interrupted from want of efficient protection, and that the cost of repairing any damages or injury to the line, resulting from the want of protection, shall be deducted from the next payments.

With regard to the third condition, Sir Charles Wood is quite ready to agree to a stipulation that whatever claims the Persian Government may possess to the territory between Bunder Abbas and the frontier of Scinde, shall not be affected by any arrangement for the construction of the telegraph between those points; but he must decline to enter into any prospective arrangement as to the protection of the line through that country.

Sir Charles Wood has no objection to offer to the remaining new article, under which the Persian Government may at any time obtain possession of the telegraph by payment of the net expenses of its construction and defence.

Sir Charles Wood is disposed to agree with the suggestion contained in Mr. Alison's letter of the 19th November, that it would very much facilitate the construction of the line of telegraph if a Persian Commissioner of high rank is appointed who shall have charge of supplying all the requisite materials.

With reference to the concluding paragraph of Mr. Alison's letter of the 5th November, I am directed to acquaint you that Sir Charles Wood has suggested to the Government of India to depute Major Patrick Stewart, late Officiating Superintendent of the Indian Telegraphs, to Persia, in order to supply Mr. Alison with the technical information required by him.

No. 15.

Earl Russell to Mr. Alison.

Sir, Foreign Office, February 18, 1862.

HER Majesty's Government have had under their consideration your despatches of the 5th, 6th, and 19th of November last, respecting the conditions upon which the Persian Government consents to accept the proposals of the British Government for the construction of a telegraphic line through Persia.

These conditions were embodied by the Persian Foreign Minister in a Memorandum which was inclosed in your despatch of the 6th of November.

I have now to state to you as regards the new articles proposed by the Persian Government, which commence with that numbered 6 in the above-named Memorandum, that Her Majesty's Government cannot anticipate that the Persian Government will ever act in so unfriendly a manner towards this country as to interrupt the communication by telegraph through Persia to India at the instigation of any foreign Power whilst friendly relations exist between Persia and Great Britain.

In such a case, however, Her Majesty's Government would clearly be entitled to demand that the net expenses incurred by the Government of India in the construction and defence of the line should be paid by the Persian Government, and there does not appear to be any objection to the insertion of an article in which the Persian Government admits this liability.

Her Majesty's Government cannot agree to the next new article, which stipulates that the whole expenses of protecting the telegraphic line shall be borne by the English Government.

No reliable estimate of the cost of protection has been furnished; but the Secretary of State for India in Council will undertake to pay half the total expense to be incurred by the Persian Government for the protection of the line between Khanakeen and Bunder Abbas, a distance of about 1,300 miles, provided that the sum to be contributed by the Indian Government does not exceed 6,000*l.* per annum, that payment is to cease if the communication be interrupted from want of sufficient protection, and that the cost of repairing any damages or injury resulting to the line from the want of protection shall be deducted from the next payments.

With regard to the 3rd condition, Her Majesty's Government are quite ready to agree to a stipulation that whatever claims the Persian Government may possess to the territory between Bunder Abbas and the frontier of Scinde shall not be affected by any arrangement for the construction of the telegraph between those points; but Her Majesty's Government must decline to enter into any prospective engagement as to the protection of the line through that country.

Her Majesty's Government have no objection to the remaining new article, under which the Persian Government may at any time obtain possession of the telegraph by paying the net expenses of its construction and defence; and they are disposed to agree with the suggestion made in your despatch of the 19th of November, that it would very much facilitate the construction of the line if a Commissioner of high rank were appointed, who should have the charge of supplying all the requisite materials.

I have to add, that the Secretary of State has suggested to the Government of India to depute Major Patrick Stewart, late Officiating Superintendent of Indian Telegraphs, to Persia, in order to supply you with the technical information which you require.

My Lord,

Tehran, January 17, 1862.

THE Ottoman Minister has mentioned to me that, at an audience which he had of the Shah a few days ago, His Majesty expressed a great desire for the establishment of an electric telegraph between Tehran and Bagdad; indeed, that the King seemed so earnest on the subject, that he assured Hayder Effendi that if the Porte began the extension of its wire from Bagdad at once, he would be ready to join it at Khanakeen on the frontier.

So far back as the 13th of October, 1860, I conveyed, at the King's desire, a message of a similar nature through Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople; but, although the reply was favourable, no further step was taken in the matter here.

Looking to the number of Persian merchants and other subjects established throughout Turkey, and of pilgrims of all ranks who resort to the shrines of Kerbela and Mecca, it is anticipated that the establishment of such a line would be amply remunerative.

Mr Alison to Earl Russell.—(Received May 23.)

My Lord, Tehran, April 25, 1862.

YOUR Lordship's despatch, of the 18th of February, respecting the construction of the proposed telegraphic line through Persia reached me on the 12th instant, and I lost no time in communicating its contents to the Persian Government.

On the 22nd of April I received a message to the following purport from the Minister for Foreign Affairs, which was confirmed to me personally by his Excellency on the following day:—

“The Persian Government being on the most friendly terms with that of England, was anxious to meet the wishes of the latter as far as might be regarding the proposed line of telegraph. The Paper of Conditions sent by the Persian Government to Mr. Alison had been framed in that spirit, and was all that Persia could possibly agree to in return for the concession of permission to construct the telegraph. The English Government seemed to think that Persia had not gone so far as she might be induced to do, and therefore in Lord Russell's despatch various modifications of the Persian conditions had been proposed. The Shah was, therefore, obliged to say that he could not consent to any alteration whatever of the said conditions, nor could he agree to undertake anything which, perhaps, might be found difficult for him to carry out.

“There were many public works of utility which it would be desirable to carry out besides the telegraph; but looking to the calls for military matters, &c., the resources of Persia were not adequate to meet them; and indeed the King had been surprised that the British Government should have limited the sum to be appropriated by it for the protection of the line, before it has ascertained what the expense of protection would be.”

The subject of the telegraph may thus be considered to be completely disposed of for the present.

I AM informed by the Turkish Minister, that having received full powers from the Porte to conclude a Convention for the establishment of the telegraphic line between Bagdad and Tehran, in pursuance of a strong desire expressed on the part of the King, as reported in my despatch of the 17th January, he lost no time in communicating with the Persian Government on the subject.

Haidar Effendi was not a little surprised at being informed in reply that the King had changed his mind, and now meditated establishing a telegraphic line between Resht and Tehran.

I learn that it is the intention of the Russian Government to complete their telegraphic line to Tiflis, and to extend it, if possible, to Tabreez.

India Office, September 10, 1862.

IT is evident that a second line from Bagdad, through Persia, to a suitable place on the coast, where it might be joined to the line through the Persian Gulf, would be of great value whether as an alternative or auxiliary line; and the most convenient place for such purpose would be Bushire. The great objection to the line hitherto proposed through Tehran, Ispahan, Shiraz, and Bunder Abbas, was owing to the great insecurity and consequent difficulty of providing for the protection of the last section of the route; but no such objection offers to a line to Bushire. The latter is the chief Persian seaport, and the country between it and Shiraz is perfectly tranquil.

Sir Charles Wood would therefore recommend that Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran be instructed to re-open negotiations with the Persian Government, with the view of ascertaining whether they are disposed to sanction the construction of a line of telegraph from Bagdad to Bushire, through Tehran, Ispahan, and Shiraz, such a line would offer greater advantages to Persia than one to Bunder Abbas, and would be free from the difficulties, political or otherwise, attending the latter. It may be expected, therefore, that proposals regarding it would be favourably received, but Mr. Alison might be directed to enquire on what conditions its construction would be likely to be sanctioned, and to submit the same for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government before committing himself by any formal offer.

Foreign Office, September 11, 1862.

I TRANSMIT for your information a copy of a letter from the India Office, stating that it would be very desirable to have a second line from Bagdad through Persia, to a suitable place on the coast, where it might be joined to the line through the Persian Gulf. I have accordingly to instruct you to re-open negotiations with the Persian Government, with the view of carrying out the wishes of Her Majesty's Government, as set forth in the India Office letter.

Mr. Melvill to Mr. Hammond.—(Received October 18.)

Sir,

India Office, October 17, 1862.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State for India to inform you that it has been determined to effect telegraphic communication with India, in the first instance, by means of a cable to be laid down the Persian Gulf, and that it is intended to establish a station at Bushire, and, if necessary, at or near Bunder Abbas. I have accordingly to request that Earl Russell may be moved to issue instructions to Her Majesty's Envoy at Tehran to obtain the necessary permission from the Government of the Shah for that purpose.

Mr. Alison to Earl Russell.—(Received December 16.)

(Extract.)

Tehran, November 4, 1862.

WITH reference to your Lordship's despatch of the 11th of September, respecting a line of telegraph from Bagdad to Tehran and the Persian Gulf, I have the honour to report that I have recommended the subject to the favourable consideration of His Majesty the Shah, and that I have directed Mr. Thomson to communicate more fully on this matter with the Persian Ministers.

I take this opportunity of acquainting your Lordship that the Shah is making arrangements to carry out a line of telegraph to the Turkish frontier near Bagdad, the cost of which is to be defrayed out of the Government Treasury, and that a company is now being formed to lay down a telegraphic wire from the Capital to Shiraz. The Porte on its part prolongs its telegraph to meet the Persian line.

It must be always borne in mind that telegraphic lines in Persia are always getting out of order.

No. 26.

Mr. Thomson to Earl Russell.—(Received January 3, 1863.)

(Extract.)

Tehran, December 3, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to report that I have to-day received a formal assurance from the Shah, conveyed to me verbally through the Minister for Foreign Affairs, that His Majesty had decided upon at once undertaking, at his own expense, the construction of a line of telegraph from Khanakeen, on the Bagdad frontier, to Bushire, through Tehran, Ispahan, and Shiraz, which is intended to be in connexion with the proposed telegraph to India through the Persian Gulf.

Since Mr. Alison's departure, I have had frequent interviews with the Persian Ministers, with a view to ascertaining from them the most reasonable terms upon which they would sanction the construction of a telegraph on this line by the English Government; and at length, after a good deal of discussion, they stated to me the conditions which the Persian Government would be disposed to accept in such an arrangement. Although these terms have now been set aside by the resolution subsequently adopted by the Shah, it may not be uninteresting to your Lordship to learn what they were; and I therefore inclose, for your Lordship's information, a Memorandum in which they are embodied.

To-day I received a note from Meerza Saeed Khan, of which a translation is inclosed, announcing that he had received orders from the Shah to make a communication to me on the part of His Majesty, and I accordingly waited upon his Excellency during the afternoon. He stated that the terms which it was proposed to offer to Her Majesty's Government had yesterday been submitted to the Council of Ministers, who had approved of them and recommended His Majesty to sanction their being forwarded to England. The Shah had, however, said, that an arrangement of this nature, if really carried out, would probably lead to endless embarrassing discussions hereafter between the Persian Government and the English Mission; and that he was therefore of opinion that it would be better and more convenient for both parties if he caused the line to be constructed at his own expense, and undertook all the responsibility of working and guarding it himself. This proposition, the Minister of Foreign Affairs continued, had been fully discussed by the King and his Ministers, and, it having been agreed to, His Majesty had ordered him to inform me officially of the determination arrived at, in order that I might communicate the same to Her Majesty's Government. His Excellency added, that the Shah had estimated the expenses of constructing this line at 100,000 tomans, but that a larger sum would not be objected to in order to insure its being of a permanent and durable character; that orders had already been given by His Majesty to commence at once purchasing and collecting the materials which were procurable in this country, and that no time would be lost in obtaining the necessary wire and other articles required from Europe.

I took an opportunity, while asking for additional particulars regarding the number of wires to be laid down, and the period at which the line would be likely to be completed, to request his Excellency to transmit this message to me in writing, in order that I might forward a translation of it to your Lordship, and he promised to consult His Majesty on the subject, and send me a reply after doing so.

As it appears in the letter from the India Office, which formed the inclosure to your Lordship's despatch of September 11th, that the telegraph through Persia is only desired as an alternative or auxiliary line to that which is now being carried out between Bagdad and Bussorah, it may be considered preferable, I imagine, by your Lordship that the Persian Government should itself undertake the construction of the line without the English Government being committed to any engagements with Persia, or involved in any pecuniary liability with respect to this measure.

When this line is completed, should the Turkish Government carry out their intention of extending their telegraph from Sivas to Erzeroum, from which place they might be induced to bring it up to the Persian frontier, there would be little difficulty in persuading the Shah to carry on the telegraph which now exists between Tehran and Tabreez to meet the Turkish line, and by this means the English Government would be enabled to avail themselves of two distinct and separate lines all the way from Sivas to Bushire, between which points the real danger of interruption to our telegraphic communication with India is to be apprehended.

Inclosure 1 in No. 26.

Memorandum of Terms which the Persian Ministers had agreed to offer to the English Government, previous to the determination of the Shah to construct the Line between Khanakeen and Bushire at his own expense.

1. THE expenses of construction of the whole line to be defrayed by the English Government from first to last.
2. The line to remain in the hands of persons appointed by the English Government, without the interference of any other party, for a period of twenty-five years from the completion of the line, and during the said period the profits of the line to be received by the English Government; and after this period the telegraph and its revenues to become the property of the Persian Government, all expenses attending the working and maintaining it being then borne by the Persian Government, who undertake to keep it in perfect working order, and to convey the messages of the British Government at the rates usually charged on this line.
3. During the above period of twenty-five years the Persian Government to have the right to transmit free of charge to any station within its own territories messages to the extent of 500 words per diem.
4. The Persian Government to agree to provide the materials for the construction of this line of telegraph to the English officers in every province at the current price of the day.
5. The Persian Government to undertake to protect this line of telegraph from the frontier at Khanakeen, to Bushire, in consideration of receiving from the British Government the sum of 25,000 tomans annually. This payment to cease so long as the communication may be interrupted from want of sufficient protection, and the cost of repairing any damages or injuries resulting to the line from the want of protection to be deducted from the next payment.
6. The Persian Government to issue an edict making the possession of such English telegraphic stores as can be identified a penal offence.

IT is necessary that I should meet you to-day, in order to convey to you a communication from his Majesty the Shah. I therefore beg to trouble you with the request that you will do me the pleasure to call upon me this afternoon, should you not be otherwise engaged, when I will state to you the message which His Majesty has been pleased, in consideration of the friendship subsisting between the two Governments, to send you.

Mr. Eastwick to Earl Russell.—(Received January 31, 1863.)

(Extract.)

Tehran, December 19, 1862.

THE state of the negotiations as regards the telegraph from Khanakeen to Tehran, and thence to Bushire, at the date of my arrival at Tehran was as follows. On the 4th of November, just before his departure, Mr. Alison had informed your Lordship that the Shah was arranging to carry a line from Tehran to Khanakeen, and that a Company was being formed to construct one from Tehran to Shiraz. Mr. Alison added with much truth "that "telegraphic lines in Persia," that is, made and managed by Persians, "are always getting out of order."

After Mr. Alison had gone, Mr. Thomson, as instructed, communicated more fully regarding the telegraph with the Persian Ministers. On the 3rd of this month Mr. Thomson informed your Lordship of the final determination of the Persian Government to construct the line themselves. On the 8th, Meerza Saeed Khan assured Mr. Thomson that the line would be constructed as strongly and durably as possible; but he at the same time pointed out that that perfection must not be looked for which is found in European lines.

In reply to an application made by Mr. Thomson, in obedience to your Lordship's despatch of October 18th, respecting stations at Bushire and Bunder Abbas, for what may be called the English line from Bagdad to India, the Minister for Foreign Affairs transmitted a letter, of which a copy is inclosed, and which appears to me to be a polite refusal.

On a consideration of all these circumstances, I could not regard the negotiation as at all in a promising state.

The general assurances of the Persian Government as to the proper construction and speedy completion of the line, could not be regarded as forming any guarantee whatever, and the scheme adopted to-day might be abandoned to-morrow. It was almost certain that, as Mr. Alison anticipated, the line would be badly made and faultily worked if left entirely to Persian management, and it seemed more than probable that there would be great difficulty in arranging for the carrying out the plans of Her Majesty's Government as regards the English stations at Bushire and Bunder Abbas. I therefore determined to attempt at once to put things on a more certain and satisfactory footing, and spoke both to Meerza Saeed Khan and the Amin-ed-Dowleh, and having ascertained that they would give me their cordial support, I wrote out a short Convention. The Ameen-ed-Dowleh made some alterations in this, and I then took the paper to the King, and read it to His Majesty at my private audience. The King declared himself satisfied with it; but he made a number of autograph alterations, and returned it to me in a few hours. I trust that, in the form in which the Convention is now drawn out, it will be satisfactory to Her Majesty's Government. It seems to me to possess all the advantages with none of the disadvantages of the original agreement between Sir C. Wood and the Musheer-ed-Dowleh. It is certain that the line will be well constructed and worked under Colonel Stewart, and the expense to Her Majesty's Government will only be that officer's, or his successor's, pay. Even this might be taken out in messages, and I had inserted an article to that effect, but the Amin-ed-Dowleh recommended me not to press it. I had also inserted that the quarterly audit should be attended by the Ameen-ed-Dowleh and the English Minister, with a view to protect Colonel Stewart against any annoyance. The Shah, however, struck this out, and the Ameen-ed-Dowleh explained to me that, as Colonel Stewart would order what he wanted, but would not make payments, no responsibility as regards money could attach to him.

I have only to add, that if your Lordship should think it advisable, I could get any not very important alterations made in the Convention by obtaining the Shah's permission to allow the Ameen-ed-Dowleh and Meerza Saeed Khan to discuss and frame such alterations with me, without the intervention of other parties.

Should your Lordship approve of the Convention, I would respectfully request that, to prevent any delays or vacillation, I may be informed of the acceptance of the articles by electric telegraph through Bagdad. At the same time, perhaps, it would be well if I were made acquainted with the scale of payments for messages to which Her Majesty's Government would assent.

December 8, 1862.

MR. THOMSON desired to be informed at what time the Persian Government intended to commence the construction of the telegraph, and when it would be completed. The reply is, that hitherto the Persian Ministers had not proposed to themselves to extend the telegraph to Bushire, but had simply intended to lay down a line from Tehran to Khanakeen. Two months ago they sent a special agent to Europe to purchase and forward to Persia the necessary wire, which he is now engaged in doing. Reckoning the time usually required for loads coming from Trebizond to Tehran, and considering the severe season now set in, it may be expected that these materials will arrive at the capital, if no accidents occur, about Now-Roos (March 21st), and whenever it arrives, in the commencement of spring, the work of laying down the wire from Tehran to Khanakeen will be begun, and in three months it will be completed. But with regard to that portion of the line from Tehran to Bushire, the wire has not yet been procured, nor have the necessary materials been prepared. Now, however, in compliance with the Shah's orders, another special agent will be sent to Europe with money to obtain the necessary wire; and steps will likewise be taken to get ready the materials in this country, so that the moment the wire is received operations will at once be commenced, and from the date of its reaching Tehran, in the space of four months, please God, the line to Bushire will be completed.

2. As to the question of how many wires it was proposed to lay down, it is evident that messages can be transmitted both ways by the same wire, and that it is not absolutely requisite to have two wires, one for the question, the other for the answer. The Persian Government would, therefore, consider this matter, and the requirements of the case. Should they perceive that one is insufficient for the number of communications, and that two wires would be more advantageous, they will not object to add to the number of wires; but in the event of one wire proving to be sufficient, and perhaps even there not being any necessity for using it the whole twenty-four hours, then, of course, the telegraph will remain with only one wire.

3. It was asked what description of wire and materials would be used in the construction of this line, and whether it was intended to carry out the work in a substantial manner, calculated to render it permanent, and diminish the risk of communications being interrupted, or whether it was proposed to construct the line similar to those now existing between Tehran, Tabreez, and Resht. Now it is certain that the Persian Government will endeavour to the utmost not to throw away its money, but to construct a telegraph which will be strong and durable, and not easily injured; but it is possible that accidents may occur, as elsewhere, either from violent storms of rain or snow, by which the line might be damaged, however solidly constructed, as sometimes occurs even in Europe. This is quite another question, and no one can feel certain that such accidents may not happen. The Tabreez and Resht wires, however, have never been injured in this way, and are in perfect working order. If they have ever suffered from these causes no real injury has been done to them. Telegraphs in Persia differ from those in Europe thus far: in European countries, the wire is carried along a straight and level road by the side of the railway, but in this country it has to be taken by most difficult and wild tracts, and at one time over a mountain of great height, and at another through a valley of considerable depth. This adds much to the difficulty both of the construction and protection of the telegraph.

December 9, 1862.

I HAVE received your letter dated the 5th instant. You state therein that a station was required at Bushire, and also, if necessary, at Bunder Abbas, for the telegraph which was, in the first instance, to be laid down in the Persian Gulf, in order to communicate with India, and you requested me to obtain the necessary permission for this purpose.

I have, in compliance with your request, represented the matter to the Shah, and His Majesty replied that the Persian Government would lay down a telegraphic wire on land to the sea-side, and all that was requisite for forwarding communications, &c., would be prepared at that station; and that, under these circumstances, it would be unnecessary for the English Government to make any preparations on land at Bushire or Bunder Abbas which would become useless after the Persian Government had completed its telegraph, with all that was requisite, thus entailing on the British Government a certain pecuniary loss.

Inclosure 3 in No. 27.

Articles of Convention respecting the Construction of a Telegraph between Khanakeen and Bushire, proposed by Mr. Eastwick to the Shah at a private audience on Wednesday the 17th of December, 1862, subject to the approval of the British Government, and accepted by the Persian Government on the same condition.

ARTICLE I.

THE exalted Government of Persia considers it necessary to construct a line of telegraph without delay from Khanakeen to the capital, Tehran, and from Tehran to the port of Bushire, and consents that, whenever the British Government may require to communicate by that telegraph it shall communicate accordingly by the said telegraph, paying for the same at rates to be fixed hereafter.

ARTICLE II.

The Persian Government will assign the sum sufficient for this telegraph,—that is, for laying it down and the purchase of such materials as are not procurable in Persia, or are better obtainable in Europe.

ARTICLE III.

The Persian Government agrees to purchase the materials which are better procurable in Europe of the English Government, and the English Government agrees to furnish the said materials at reasonable rates.

ARTICLE IV.

In order that this line of telegraph may be constructed in the best possible way, and may be efficiently worked, the Persian Government is willing to intrust it to the superintendence and direction of an English Engineer officer, who will be paid by his own Government; and the Persian Government will also fix a period for the employment of the said officer, in order that he may show how to construct and work the line. And his Royal Highness the Itizad-oo-Sultaneh, who is the Minister for Public Works, and his Excellency the Amin-ed-Dowleh, will have cognizance of what the said officer does.

ARTICLE V.

The said officer will be fully empowered to call upon the Persian authorities to supply any materials that he may think requisite for this work, and the said authorities will make no alteration in his requisitions unless in the case when it is impossible to get the thing wanted. But a Persian officer will always accompany the said Superintendent, who is to be informed of what he does, and of the price of the materials called for, and the accounts shall be audited by the aforesaid Prince and his Excellency the Amin-ed-Dowleh, and the audit shall be taken quarterly, and a report of it shall be drawn up and printed in the Tehran Gazette.

ARTICLE VI.

In order to increase the friendship between the two Governments and carry out this work, the English Government engages to convey to the Persian frontier such materials as, with the approval of the Persian Minister to the Court of St. James's, shall be purchased of the English Government, and to receive the purchase-money for the said articles from the Persian Government, by five instalments, in five years.

Written at the Bottom in the autograph of the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The Persian Government agrees to this Convention if the English Government is willing, and the line will be commenced immediately, according to the above stipulations.

Mr. Merivale to Mr. Hammond.—(Received February 6.)

Sir, India Office, February 6, 1863.

WITH reference to Mr. Eastwick's despatch to Lord Russell, dated 19th December last, of which a copy has been forwarded to this office, I am directed by Secretary Sir Charles Wood to state that the Convention with respect to a telegraph from Khanakeen, via Tehran, to Bushire, therein reported to have been conditionally agreed to by the Shah, ought, in his opinion, to be at once accepted by the British Government; and I am to request that his Lordship may be moved to telegraph to the Chargé d'Affaires at Tehran, advising him accordingly of its acceptance.*

Mr. Baring to Mr. Hammond:—(Received February 20.

(Extract.)

India Office, February 19, 1863.

I AM directed to request that you will move Earl Russell to communicate the following particulars to Her Majesty's Minister in Persia:—Arrangements detailed in a separate Memorandum, herewith inclosed, will be immediately made for providing stores for a line which in the first instance will have a single wire only, but will eventually require a second.

English superintendence of the line should be continued for a period of five years.

Colonel Stewart will not be able personally to superintend the land line until the cable shall have been laid down in the Persian Gulf.

Lieutenant Champain has already been directed to proceed to England, but will return to Persia, accompanied by a suitable staff, by the time his services will be required in that country.

The Superintendent will require four superior assistants, and ten or twelve of the class of non-commissioned officers or trained artificers, or one for about every 100 miles.

The charge for messages from Bagdad, via Tehran, to Bushire may be fixed at first at 10s. 6d. for twenty words, though hereafter it may be found advisable to reduce it as low as 6s. 6d. for the same number of words.

In the Memorandum alluded to above, and which Sir Charles Wood requests may be sent in extenso to the Minister at Tehran, full information is furnished as to all the operations that will become necessary during the next six months, or till the European staff will be on the spot.

Inclosure in No. 29.

Memorandum of Proposed Persian Telegraphs from Khanakeen to Tehran and Bushire.

AGREEABLY to the terms of the Convention recently concluded, the European stores required for the whole extent of the line (including wire, insulators, tools, and instruments) shall be at once procured in this country for despatch to Persia. The actual extent of line is computed at 1,090 miles. But it is desirable to allow for such contingencies as loss, waste, or breakage of stores; and it is therefore proposed to supply them in quantities sufficient for 1200 miles of line. The greater part of these stores must be sent by sea to Bushire and Bussorah; those sent to the latter port, being intended for part of the line from Khanakeen towards Tehran, must be forwarded by river steamer to Bagdad. Two months may be required for the manufacture and shipment of these stores, and four months at least must be allowed for the voyage to the Persian Gulf. It is therefore improbable that they will be delivered at Bushire before August, or at Bagdad before September next. The delay likely to be thus caused makes it desirable to supply a larger proportion of the stores by the Trebizond and Tabreez route than the simple consideration of comparative cost of transport would seem to indicate. On these grounds it is proposed to send, via the Black Sea to Trebizond, stores sufficient for the line from Tehran to Hamadan (about 200 miles), and from Tehran to Kashan (about 170 miles), and the proportional distribution to the different ports would then be—

	Miles.
To Trebizond stores for	375
To Bushire	575
To Bussorah (for Bagdad)	250
Total Miles	1,200

* A telegram to that effect was accordingly sent through Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople.

The weight per mile of the stores may be taken as follows :—

Wire No. 6, B. W. G.	..	..	..	..	..	..	lbs.
Insulators, Screws, &c.	..	..	..	..	..	..	560
Proportion of Tools, &c.	..	..	..	..	..	..	120
Total per statute mile,							700 lbs.

The stores will be subdivided and packed with special reference to facility of transport on baggage animals.

The stores sent via Trebizond may be looked for at that port towards the end of May.

Operations may, however, be commenced at once in Persia by procuring and distributing strong timber posts along the whole line.

It will probably be found advantageous to complete the arrangements for the supply of the whole of the supports, and for their transport to convenient depôts at short intervals along the line, before commencing to erect any of them. The disadvantages of using perfectly "green" and undried timber will thus be in some degree lessened. Further, when the timber for erecting the posts shall have arrived, this work should be commenced in the more level, open, and straight portions of the route, leaving till the arrival of European assistants the completion of those more difficult and exceptional portions of the line where alone it is of importance to select with care the exact direction of the line and positions for its support. For example, the posts may be erected for the whole distance from Tehran to Ispahan (260 miles) without the least difficulty, excepting as regards a length of perhaps 20 miles in the neighbourhood of Kohrood. It is at such exceptional portions of the line, where the road of necessity winds considerably, that the strongest and most substantial posts should be provided, and it is hoped that European inspectors may be on the spot to superintend and aid in the construction of these portions, long before the ordinary parts of the main line are completed.

In erecting the posts on the latter portions, the following are the only points to be observed :—

1st. The line must everywhere follow the general direction of the regular road, all the supports being so placed as to be within full view of, and easily accessible from, the road. As a general rule none of them should be at a greater distance than one quarter of a mile from the road, and ordinarily they should be within from 50 to 100 yards.

2nd. In the open, straight portions of the line, twenty-two posts per mile will be sufficient, of which at least two should be of not less than about six inches in diameter at the top. The remainder need not be more than four inches diameter, but it should be understood that these dimensions refer to the extremity or smallest portion of the post. The posts should ordinarily be not less than 18 feet, of which from 3 to $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet should be below the surface of the ground, and $14\frac{1}{2}$, or 15 feet above. In such portions of the line as that near Kohrood already referred to, or in the more difficult parts of the hilly country between Shiraz and Bushire, strong posts in the proportion of about thirty to the mile should be provided. But as they will frequently be placed on ridges or slight elevations, it is not necessary to stipulate for a length of more than sixteen feet in all for the posts to be used in such localities.

The fixing of insulators and straining and attaching the wire will thus be made a later and a distinct operation, during the whole of which European assistance and co-operation can be provided.

The establishment and organization of offices and mode of working the completed line need not as yet be referred, to further than by saying that these subjects shall be considered and arranged for when providing the European staff for the earlier operations of construction.

I AM directed by Earl Russell to transmit to you herewith, to be laid before Secretary Sir Charles Wood, with reference to your letter of the 19th instant, a copy of the instruction on the subject of telegraphic communication through Persia, which will be forwarded to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tehran on the 26th instant.*

Sir,

Foreign Office, February 26, 1863.

I SENT you on the 11th instant, through Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, the following telegram:—

"The stores, wires, and insulators for the Persian telegraph cannot be at Bushire till August next; but work may be at once commenced by procuring and distributing strong timber posts along the whole line, which should everywhere follow the regular road.

"The other points will be dealt with hereafter."

With reference to the last paragraph of the above telegram, I have now to inform you that the arrangements detailed in the inclosed Memorandum will be immediately made by the India Office for providing stores for a line which, in the first instance, will have a single wire only, but which will eventually require a second.

English superintendence of the line should be continued for a period of five years.

Colonel Stewart will not be able personally to superintend the land line until the cable shall have been laid down in the Persian Gulf.

Lieutenant Champain has already been directed to proceed to England, but will return to Persia, accompanied by a suitable staff, by the time his services will be required in that country.

The Superintendent will require four superior assistants, and ten or twelve of the class of non-commissioned officers or trained artificers, or one for about every hundred miles.

The charge for messages from Bagdad, via Tehran, to Bushire, may be fixed at first at 10s. 6d. per twenty words, though hereafter it may be found advisable to reduce it as low as 6s. 6d. for the same number of words.

Full information is furnished in the accompanying Memorandum as to all the operations which will become necessary during the next six months, or until the European staff will be on the spot.

Mr. Eastwick to Earl Russell.—(Received March 28.)

My Lord,

Tehran, February 7, 1863.

WITH reference to your Lordship's despatch of the 18th of October, I have the honour to state that I have not mentioned the subject of that despatch to the Persian Government, because I am certain that separate stations for the Turco-Indian line of telegraph at Bushire and Bunder Abbas can be easily obtained by judicious management when the Convention for the Khanakeen and Bushire line is ratified by Her Majesty's Government. Further, I may state that when the ratification takes place, there will be no difficulty about the line being extended from Shiraz or Bushire to Bunder Abbas. I had a distinct assurance from the Itizad-oo-Sultaneh, the Minister of Public Works, that the Shah would undertake that extension.

I believe, therefore, that I am able, before leaving Tehran, to report that I have arranged the whole question of the telegraph, and that the only thing wanting is the approval of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.

No. 33.

Mr. Baring to Mr. Hammond.—(Received April 1.)

Sir,

India Office, April 1, 1863.

I AM directed to state for the information of Earl Russell that in a conversation which Sir Charles Wood had on the 24th instant with the Persian Minister on the subject of the proposed line of telegraph from Khanakeen to Bushire, his Excellency explained, that so far as he knew, when the recent Convention regarding that line was prepared at Tehran, the Shah was under the impression that no other connecting line would be made between Bagdad and Bushire, and that the Persian line would consequently obtain the whole of the Anglo-Indian messages passing between those places.

His Excellency then pointed out that his Government might justly blame him if being now aware of the proposed construction of a competing line through Mesopotamia, he did not endeavour to effect an arrangement as to the division of the messages between the two lines, before committing his Government to expenditure by concurring in the immediate purchase of materials for the Persian line. It was explained to him that any delay in despatching materials to be sent by a long sea voyage to the Persian Gulf was much to be deprecated, and that although it was impossible to discuss simultaneously here and at Tehran the terms of the Convention, Sir Charles Wood would not object to give an official assurance that Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran should be instructed to discuss with the Shah's Government the question raised by his Excellency, and to come to an equitable arrangement concerning it. His Excellency finally consented to give his formal assent to the immediate purchase of materials, on receiving the written assurance, copy of which is inclosed herewith.

Sir Charles Wood thinks it desirable that what has taken place so far, should be brought immediately to Earl Russell's knowledge. His Lordship shall be made acquainted by a separate communication with the particulars of the arrangement which should, in Sir Charles Wood's opinion, be proposed to the Persian Government.

Sir Charles Wood would suggest for Earl Russell's consideration, that it might be advisable that the Turkish Government should immediately be made aware of the intention to divide, in some way, messages passing from Bagdad to Bushire, or vice versa, between the line which will run from Bagdad by Bussorah to Bushire, and that which will run from Bagdad to the Persian frontier, near Khanakeen, and thence through Persia to Bushire.

The Turkish portion will be shorter in the latter line than in the former, but the difference is a very insignificant part of the whole line through the Turkish territory. The Turkish Government will no doubt readily perceive the advantage which their main line to Bagdad will derive from having an alternative line through Persia to Bushire, in the event of any interruption to the line from Bagdad to Bussorah.

Memorandum.

WHEN the Persian Government shall have constructed a line of telegraph from the Turkish frontier near Khanakeen by Tehran to Bushire, and when the Turkish and English Governments shall have constructed a short connecting line from Bagdad to Khanakeen, and also a line from Bagdad to Bussorah, and thence to Bushire, there will be two alternative lines between Bagdad and Bushire.

Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran will be instructed to discuss and arrange with the Persian Government, on equitable terms, the distribution between the two lines of the telegraphic messages passing between England and India.

My Lord,

Tehran, March 10, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that during the last few days I have had interviews with the Ameen-ed-Dowleh and Meerza Saeed Khan, on the subject of your Lordship's telegram of the 11th of February, and that this afternoon, by the Shah's desire, I met the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and the Prince Itizad-u-Sultaneh, when it was settled that His Royal Highness should at once despatch agents to procure timber posts in the different districts through which the telegraph is to pass, and to distribute them along the line in the villages which are nearest to the regular road.

The number and dimensions of the posts to be thus provided are, for each mile 20 posts 19 feet in length, and 5 inches in diameter at the top, and 2 posts 21 feet long, and 10 inches in diameter at the top, the whole distance being calculated at 1,092 miles.

The above figures will be found to be in accordance with the estimates prepared by Lieutenant-Colonel Stewart when in this country.

No. 36.

Mr. Baring to Mr. Hammond.—(Received April 29.)

Sir,

India Office, April 28, 1863.

IN my letter of the 1st instant, it was stated that Sir Charles Wood would, in a separate communication, acquaint Earl Russell with the particulars of the arrangement which should, in his opinion, be proposed to the Turkish and Persian Governments, for the distribution between the two lines of telegraph about to be established from Bagdad to Bushire, of the telegraphic messages passing between England and India.

I am accordingly now directed to make the following observations:—

The Indian Government has undertaken to advance the purchase-money of the materials provided from this country for the line through Persia. If a double wire be formed, the money so advanced will probably amount to 20,000*l.*, which, by the terms of the late Convention, will have to be repaid by the Persian Government in five annual instalments. Merely to insure punctual payment of these instalments, it would be advisable for the Indian Government to use the Persian line to at least such an extent as that the net receipts from Anglo-Indian messages during the first five years should annually amount to one-fifth of the sum advanced; but it is obviously desirable on other accounts that much more than this should be done, and that the use of the Persian line by the Indian Government should be such as to furnish a large annual surplus, the payment of which to the Shah's Government for its own benefit would afford to it the best possible inducement to protect the line, and to maintain and work it efficiently. With this view, as well as with that of equally interesting the Turkish Government in the due protection and maintenance of their alternative line from Bagdad to Bussorah, Sir Charles Wood considers that the most convenient arrangement would be that of an equal division of Anglo-Indian messages between the two lines, all messages from India being despatched through Persia, and all messages to India proceeding by the Turkish line from Bagdad to Bussorah. Such an arrangement cannot, however, be efficiently carried out, unless the Persian, as well as the Turkish line be provided with two wires, one of which shall be employed exclusively for the through traffic; and any agreement to the effect indicated above, entered into with the Persian Government, should be made conditional on the adoption of a double wire.

Sir Charles Wood would therefore recommend, if Earl Russell sees no objection, that

Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran be authorised to make some such proposal as the following:—

Provided the Persian line of telegraph, with a single wire, from Khanakeen to Bushire, be constructed, protected, and worked in an efficient manner, and to the satisfaction of the English officers superintending it, the English Government agrees to despatch by the Persian line one-fourth part of all the through traffic vid Bagdad, between Europe and India; and in like manner, if a second wire be added, and made available exclusively for the transmission of through traffic, to despatch one half of the same traffic by the Persian line.

The above agreement might be made binding for a period not exceeding ten years, at the close of which its terms would be open to revision.

I am further directed to suggest that the necessary communications on the subject should be made simultaneously to the Turkish Government.

Sir,

I TRANSMIT, for your information and guidance, copies of two letters from the India Board on the subject of telegraphic communication with India.*

You will learn from these letters the particulars of the arrangement which should, in the opinion of the Secretary of State for India, be proposed to the Turkish and Persian Governments, for the distribution between the two lines of telegraph about to be established from Bagdad to Bushire, of the telegraphic messages passing between England and India, and also what has passed between Sir Charles Wood and the Persian Minister on this subject.

I have now to instruct you to state to the Persian Government, that if the Persian line of telegraph, with a single wire, from Khanakeen to Bushire, is constructed, protected, and worked in an efficient manner, and to the satisfaction of the English officers superintending it, the English Government agrees to despatch by that line one-fourth part of all the through traffic vid Bagdad, between Europe and India; and in like manner, if a second wire be added, and made available exclusively for the transmission of through traffic, to despatch one half of the same traffic by the Persian line. In the event of the Persian Government agreeing to these terms, you are hereby authorized to make an agreement with them for a period not exceeding ten years.

Tehran, April 12, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that I this day received a message from the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs, through one of his secretaries, to say that a report had reached him from the Governor of Kerman, to the effect that English officers were engaged in making preparations to carry a line of telegraph from the Beloochistan frontier by land to Bunder Abbas, and thence on to Bushire, and that, if there was any truth in this statement, he begged that I would take steps to suspend the operations until the matter had been discussed, and an arrangement entered into on the subject at Tehran, as such a line had not been provided for in the Convention lately agreed to by the Persian Government.

I replied that I had no knowledge of the circumstance to which he alluded; that I was informed that the telegraph from Bushire would be taken down the Persian Gulf by means of a submarine cable, which was now being manufactured in England; and that I was not aware that there was any intention of landing the wire at any point in the Persian territory excepting at the two above ports of Bushire and Bunder Abbas.

I HAVE the honour to inclose translation of a firman which has been addressed by His Majesty the Shah to the Governors through whose districts the Persian telegraph is to pass, instructing them to prepare the posts required for the line, and to have them in readiness at an early date. *Firman to the Governors of the Provinces through which the Persian Telegraph is to pass.

(Translation.)

THE construction of a telegraph being an undertaking of the utmost importance, which, when completed, cannot fail to be of the greatest utility in facilitating business, both Government and private, throughout the Persian dominions, and in promoting the interests of commerce and the welfare of our subjects, it has been determined by a Convention between the Persian Government and the Agents of Her Britannic Majesty to establish a telegraphic line of communication between Khanakeen and Tehran, and from the Capital to Bushire, which is to be connected with the Bagdad line, and is to be extended by a cable from Bushire to India, to be laid down by the English Government. Of the materials necessary for this work, next to the wires, &c., which have been purchased in Europe, the most important are the timber posts required for stretching the wires, and these are of two kinds, the ordinary post and the straining post. They must, therefore, be procured, and distributed along the road and at the different stations at once; so that, please God, by the end of the present year the line may be completed and in working order. We therefore now command that, on the receipt of this firman, you will issue stringent orders to the necessary parties in your province that for every fursukh (four miles) along the road, ninety ordinary posts and eighteen straining posts, according to the following dimensions, are to be prepared and held in readiness within the space of one month:—

* Transmitted to the Mission on April 8, 1863.

Ordinary posts—Ninety in number, strong, good, and quite straight, 6 Persian yards long and 5 inches in diameter at the top.

Straining posts—Eighteen in number, from $7\frac{1}{2}$ to 8 yards long, and twice the above diameter.

The receipts for the above are to be made over to the Prince Itizad-oo-Sultaneh, the Minister for Public Works, through Hajee Einez Beg, one of our private attendants, who will superintend these arrangements. You will take care to have our instructions in this respect carried out attentively, so that the posts may be ready to be handed over within the period specified above, and on no account are you to suppose yourself exempt from or irresponsible for the fulfilment of this command.

Sir,

Tehran, May 26, 1863.

COLONEL KEMBALL having forwarded to me an extract from the Report drawn out by the Engineer Officer recently sent to survey the coast of the Persian Gulf, from which it appears that Resheer had been selected as the spot for landing the cable in the vicinity of Bushire, I have applied to the Persian Government for their permission to establish a telegraph station at that place.

I now beg to inclose copy of an order transmitted by the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Governor of Bushire, directing him, after consulting with you, and ascertaining the exact point at which the cable is to be landed, to cause a building to be erected as a station for the exclusive use of the English telegraph employes, for which a moderate amount of rent will be received by the Persian authorities.

I have no information as to the amount of accommodation required at this station; but, in order to save time, and to admit of the building being commenced at once, should it be thought advisable to have it ready before the cable is landed, it has been arranged that, in the meantime, a building, containing only a few rooms, should be erected; and, on my being made acquainted with the amount of further accommodation required, I shall take steps to obtain from the Persian Government their sanction to having such additions as may be necessary to be made.

Inclosure 2 in No. 43.

The Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Governor of Bushire.

(Translation.)

May 18, 1863.

AS you already know, by desire of His Majesty the Shah, the Persian Government are about to construct a telegraph from the frontier of Kermanshah to Bushire, and the English Government, as they may feel disposed, are at liberty to join their telegraphic wires, which are to be brought by a submarine line, to the Persian wires. It is therefore necessary that they should have a telegraph station on the coast, and His Majesty has ordered that a station should be erected for this purpose at Resheer, under the directions of the Prince Itizad-oo-Sultaneh, which is to be given to the British Government for an annual rent. The Prince has written the instructions necessary, and they are now sent to you. In the meantime, as the English cable may shortly reach Bushire, and on its arrival they may require a place at once in which to keep their stores and materials before the regular station is completed, you will now at once, after communicating with the Resident, and ascertaining the exact spot where the cable will be landed, proceed to erect a building according to the accompanying plan given by the Prince, in a suitable position, and get it in readiness, so that they may not suffer inconvenience. You will then forward an estimate of the expenses of completing the building, and when you receive orders on the subject, you will have it finished by building the additional portion.

His Majesty has further commanded that the station also required for the employes on the Persian line of telegraph from Bushire to Khanakeen, is to be built alongside of the station constructed for the English telegraph to India, so that, for the better working of the lines, the two stations are not to be apart and distant from each other.

No. 44.

Mr. Thomson to Earl Russell.—(Received July 4.)

My Lord,

Tehran, June 5, 1863,

I HAVE delayed till now replying to your Lordship's despatch of the 26th of February, in the hope that the Persian Government might be induced to adopt the entire suggestions offered in that communication. The Persian Ministers express themselves fully satisfied with the preliminary arrangements which Colonel Stewart proposes that they should make for the construction of the Persian telegraph, and they are now engaged in preparing the materials required, and in having them distributed along the line, for which purpose they have dispatched agents to the different provinces through which the telegraph is to pass. But with regard to the period during which the line is to be entrusted to the superintendence of English officers, I find that the views of the Persian Ministers do not coincide with those of Her Majesty's Government. It is proposed in your Lordship's despatch that five years should be fixed for this superintendence; but though the Persian Government state that they desire to retain the services of the English agents until such time as the line is in a perfectly efficient state, and until it is found to work to the satisfaction of the British Government, they are not disposed to engage formally that the Persian telegraph should be under the control of English employés for a longer space of time than one year.

As your Lordship's despatch of the 6th of May, however, which I have just received, authorizes me to make an agreement with the Persian Government, fixing the amount of messages to be transmitted by their line, on condition that it is constructed, protected, and worked in an efficient manner, and to the satisfaction of the English officers superintending it, I trust that they may now be induced to set aside their present determination on this point, as they cannot fail to perceive that, unless the line is under the control of English officers, it can never be worked with that efficiency which will render it profitable by securing to Persia a full share of the messages transmitted.

With respect to the remaining question of the amount to be charged on such messages, the Persian Government is about to send instructions to Mahmood Khan, authorizing him to enter into any arrangement in London which he may consider fair and reasonable.

M. l'Ambassadeur, Sublime Porte, le 7 Juillet, 1863.
J'AI reçu et transmis à l'Administration Générale des Télégraphes la note que vous m'avez fait l'honneur de m'adresser en date du 11 Avril, pour m'informer que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique est dans l'intention de se servir également des deux lignes télégraphiques de Bagdad à Bunder-Bushir par Bussorah, et de celle qui sera établie entre Bagdad et Bunder-Bushir en passant la frontière Persane près de Khanakeen.

Nous reconnaissons également l'utilité de l'établissement de cette seconde ligne qui ne peut que rendre plus sure la communication électrique entre Bunder-Bushir et Bagdad; mais d'après nous on aurait pu mieux choisir la direction qu'on veut lui donner. Une ligne passant par Khanakeen, Zenkiabad, et Carabata, et aboutissant à Kerkiah, présenterait d'autant plus d'avantages qu'elle offrirait plus de facilités soit pour sa pose, parce qu'elle ne rencontrerait pas de grands courants d'eau, soit pour les défenses de construction pour la raison que son parcours serait beaucoup moins long. Après ces considérations électriques une autre plus importante n'a pu nous échapper. Le Gouvernement Impérial ne devant établir et entretenir la ligne de Bagdad à Bussorah que pour unir les Indes Orientales au réseau télégraphique de l'Europe, il nous semble qu'il serait juste que les dépêches Anglaises ne fussent transmises par la ligne Persane qu'en cas d'interruption sur la ligne Ottomane.

En conséquence je vous prie, M. l'Ambassadeur, d'entretenir le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique et de provoquer de sa part un engagement dans ce sens dans le cas où votre Excellence se rangerait à mon avis.

M. l'Ambassadeur.

Sublime Porte, July 7, 1863.

I HAVE received and transmitted to the General Administration of Telegraphs the note which you did me the honour to address to me, dated the 11th of April, to inform me that the Government of Her Britannic Majesty intends to use equally the two telegraphic lines from Bagdad to Bunder Bushir by Bussorah, and the one which will be established between Bagdad and Bunder Bushir, crossing the Persian frontier near Khanakeen.

We recognise equally the utility of the establishment of this second line, which cannot fail to render the electrical communication between Bunder Bushir and Bagdad more sure; but, in our opinion, the direction which it is intended to give it might have been better chosen. A line passing by Khanakeen, Zenkiabad, and Carabata, and joining at Kerkiah, would offer as many advantages as it would offer facilities either for laying it down, because it would not encounter strong currents of water, or for the expenses of its construction, from the fact that its length would be much less. After these considerations another more important one has not escaped our observation. As the Imperial Government must establish and maintain the line from Bagdad to Bussorah only to unite the East Indies to the telegraphic network of Europe, it seems to us that it would be just that the English despatches should be only transmitted by the Persian line in the event of interruption of communication on the Ottoman line.

I beg you, therefore, M. l'Ambassadeur, to communicate with Her Britannic Majesty's Government, and to propose an engagement in this sense on their part, should your Excellency be of my opinion.

Mr. Thomson to Earl Russell.—(Received August 1.)

My Lord,

Tehran, July 4, 1863.

THE difficulty of transacting business here during the first days of Moharrem, and the subsequent departure of the Shah on a hunting excursion in the neighbouring hills, have occasioned some delay in my obtaining a distinct reply to the proposal which I was directed by your Lordship's despatch of the 6th of May to make to the Persian Government respecting the distribution of messages between the two telegraphic lines from Bagdad to Bushire.

Although the Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Ameen-ed-Dowleh, to whom I was also referred on the subject, both expressed themselves strongly in favour of adding a second wire at once to the telegraph about to be constructed from Khanakeen to Bushire, I have since been given to understand by Meerza Saeed Khan that the Shah was, for the present, not disposed to give his sanction to the additional expense which would be thereby incurred. His Majesty was of opinion that the line should be constructed, as originally proposed, with only one wire, and that they should only engage to add a second when they had ascertained clearly how far it was absolutely necessary, and what the profits were which they were likely to derive from the Persian telegraph. His Excellency said that it was against his advice entirely that the Shah had adopted this view, and that he would again represent to His Majesty the advantages which both he and the Ameen-ed-Dowleh considered that the Persian Government would obtain by providing a double wire by means of which the Persian telegraph might be worked with perfect efficiency from the outset. His Majesty's reply has not yet been received at Tehran; but, as great uncertainty seems to exist in the minds of many of those about the Court, whose advice is frequently adopted in such matters, as to the success which is likely to attend the establishment of this telegraph, it is probable that no change will take place in His Majesty's views, and that he will not be induced to embark in any further outlay for the present than that which they have already consented to in the Convention with Her Majesty's Government.

With respect to the division of messages between the Turkish and Persian lines of telegraph from Bagdad to Bushire, the Shah's Ministers do not appear to share the apprehensions felt by the Persian Envoy in London with regard to the competing line which is now in course of construction by way of Bussorah. They have hitherto regarded the establishment of that line with apparent indifference, and as yet they have not shown any inclination to enter into the arrangement proposed by Sir Charles Wood, which would secure to them a certain share of the telegraphic messages transmitted to and from India.

The disbursements for current and miscellaneous expenditure will amount to about 6,000*l.*, and I am to request that Mr. Alison may be apprized that he is empowered, up to the limit, and for the purposes indicated above, to draw bills on the Government Treasury at Bombay or Calcutta, as may be found most advisable, the local Governments having been requested to honour his drafts accordingly.

J'E suis aujourd'hui en mesure de répondre à la note que votre Excellence m'a fait l'honneur de m'adresser en date du 21 Mai relativement à l'intention du Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique de partager la transmission des dépêches pour les Indes Orientales entre les deux lignes télégraphiques de Bagdad à Bussorah, et de Khanakeen à Bunder Bushire en Perse.

Votre Excellence sait que le Gouvernement Impérial ne doit établir et entretenir la ligne de Bagdad à Bussora que dans l'unique désir de rendre un service au Gouvernement Britannique en réunissant les Indes Orientales au réseau télégraphique de l'Europe. Si la ligne Persane doit être appelée à jouir à part égale avec la ligne Ottomane des revenus de cette ligne, qui consisteront principalement de la transmission des dépêches Anglo-Indiennes, la ligne de Bagdad à Bussorah devient complètement superflue, et onéreuse même, en considération des sommes considérables qui seront dépensées pour son établissement et son entretien.

A notre avis il serait mieux de renoncer à la ligne de Bussorah à Bagdad et se borner à celle de Khanakeen à Bunder Bushir. Cette ligne reliée directement avec le cable de Bussora jouirait dans ce cas de tous les revenus intégralement, et ferait aussi éviter les dépenses pour les fournitures de matériel télégraphique que le Gouvernement Indien devra faire à notre administration.

M. l'Ambassadeur,

Ministry of Foreign Affairs, July 31, 1863.

I AM enabled to-day to reply to the note which your Excellency did me the honour to address to me on the 21st of May, relative to the intention of Her Britannic Majesty's Government to divide the transmission of despatches for the East Indies between the two telegraphic lines from Bagdad to Bussorah and from Khanakeen to Bunder Bushire in Persia.

Your Excellency knows that the Imperial Government is going to establish and maintain the line from Bagdad to Bussorah solely with the desire of rendering service to the British Government by joining the East Indies to the telegraphic network of Europe. If the Persian line is to be allowed to share equally the revenues of the Ottoman line, which will consist principally of the transmission of Anglo-Indian despatches, the line from Bagdad to Bussorah becomes perfectly superfluous and even burthensome, on account of the considerable sums which will be expended on its construction and maintenance.

In our opinion it would be better to give up the line from Bussorah to Bagdad and to confine ourselves to the line from Khanakeen to Bunder Bushire. That line, directly connected with the cable of Bussorah, would profit in that case by all the revenues integrally, and would also cause the expenses to be avoided on account of fittings and telegraphic material which the Indian Government will have to impose on our administration.

No. 52.

Mr. Melvill to Mr. Hammond.—(Received August 13.)

Sir,

India Office, August 12, 1863.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State for India to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant, and in reply to forward a Memorandum by Lieutenant-Colonel Stewart, in which is embodied all the information required at Tehran regarding the measures which have been, or are about to be, taken in connection with the establishment of the telegraph between Khanakeen and Bushire, and to request that Earl Russell will be pleased to cause a copy thereof to be forwarded to Her Majesty's Minister in Persia.

I have, &c.

Inclosure in No. 52.

Memorandum relating to the Persian Telegraph, detailing the steps which have been taken in connection with the despatch of Stores, &c., up to date.

August 7, 1863.

THE distances have been calculated as follows, and in practice will be found sufficiently accurate.

From Khanakeen to Kermanshah	..	..	..	123 miles.
„ Kermanshah to Hamadan	..	..	..	96 „
„ Hamadan to Tehran	..	..	..	186 „
„ Tehran to Koom	..	..	..	90 „
„ Koom to Kashan	..	..	..	61 „
„ Kashan to Ispahan	..	..	..	109 „
„ Ispahan to Koomshah	..	..	..	48 „
„ Koomshah to Mooighaut	..	..	..	152 „
„ Mooighaut to Shiraz	..	..	..	70 „
„ Shiraz to Kazeroon	..	..	..	67 „
„ Kazeroon to Bushire	..	..	..	100 „
Total	..	..	..	1,102 miles.

To allow for contingencies, materials for a single wire line, 1,200 miles long, have been, or are about to be, sent out. Cost and detail are given below. The wire will be supported on single insulators on wooden posts, the number of which should be twenty-one ordinary and three stretching; total, twenty-four posts per mile. On the straight and open parts of the line twenty-one or twenty-two will suffice, while on the other hand it may prove necessary among the more difficult passes (such as those in the neighbourhood of Kazeroon or Khanakeen) to increase the number to thirty posts per mile.

TABLE showing the Number and Detail of Stores sent out.

Amount.	Description of Stores.	Cost in England.	Remarks.

The greater part of these stores will be landed at Bushire, and thence transported on mules along the line towards Tehran; but a proportion enough for 322 miles, will be sent on to Bussora, and thence up the river to Bagdad.

The following Table shows the stores despatched up to date for the Persian lines, the whole allowance being for 1,200 miles, of which 878 will be supplied for Bushire, and 322 for Bussora.

The insulators are packed in boxes, each containing twenty-eight ordinary and four stretching insulators, so that three boxes contain enough for four miles, or one farsakh of line. The boxes weigh 174 lbs. each, two thus forming a load for one mule.

The "Athene" will probably reach Bussora about the beginning of October, she having left Liverpool on the 30th May.

The "Khimjee Oodoopee," a quick vessel, sailed on the 30th June, and may be expected at Bushire about the middle of October.

The "Jumna," also a very fast ship, left London on the 15th July, and will probably reach Bushire before the end of October.

The rest of the stores will be dispatched as soon as possible, but it is likely that some delay may occur in completing the full number of insulators.

Messrs. Man and Walton will leave England (with one of the inspectors appointed to the line) on the 8th instant, and will be able to give every information and assistance that may be necessary until the arrival of Lieutenant Champain. The latter officer will almost immediately after reaching Tehran proceed to Bushire in time to meet the first of the vessels with stores for that port, and to arrange, in concert with Colonel Pelly and the Persian authorities, the means of transport and distribution.

Two engineer officers have been applied for from India to assist in the work, and a third will leave England, via the overland route for Bombay, about the end of August, with ten non-commissioned officers and men of the Royal Engineers trained to the work, and conversant with the practical duties that will be required of them.

The whole line from Khanakeen to Bushire will therefore be divided into five divisions, each division having its one officer or superintendent, one inspector, and two assistant-inspectors of the Royal Engineer detachment, while the direction of the whole staff will be in the hands of Lieutenant Champain, who will fix his head-quarters at Tehran.

The following Table shows approximately what the monthly pay of the staff will be, and the additional expenditure which will thus devolve upon the British Mission has already been provided for.

	Non-commissioned Officers of Royal Engineers	Military and civil for 10.	..	1,550 00
Approximate Total, omitting Pay of the Director (not yet decided), and Travelling Allowance }				5,550 00

This sum will be in addition to the actual amount expended in travelling and to Lieutenant Champain's pay, the amount of which has not yet been fixed.

The total monthly expenditure on account of telegraph superintendence, military pay of officers and soldiers employed, and contingencies, will possibly reach in round numbers the sum of 7,500 rupees, and such expenditure will probably commence from the 1st October, 1863.

Lieutenant-Colonel Pelly, Her Majesty's Resident at Bushire, has already been informed that the approximate weight of stores to be forwarded along the line from Bushire will be as follows:—

	Wire.	Insulators.	Total.
	Tons.	Tons.	Tons.
To Tehran	17	4½	21½
Koom	17	4½	21½
Kasham	15	4	19
Ispahan	50	14	64
Koomishah	15	4	19
Shiraz	70	19	89
Kazeroon	25	7	32
Total tons	209	57	266

The remainder of the stores shipped for Bushire will be retained at that port.

Information has also been sent to Colonel Kemball at Bagdad, to the effect that the weight of stores for which carriage will be required at the cost of the British Government, as far as the Persian frontier of Khanakeen, will be as follows:—

Wire	104 tons.
Insulators and Stores	28 "
Total	132 "

The cost of transport within the Persian territory will of course be defrayed by the Persian Government, and the details of distribution will be arranged in concert with the officer in charge of each section of the line.

I AM directed by Earl Russell to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, inclosing a Memorandum for the use of Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran, on the line of telegraph through Persia now in course of construction; and I am to state to you, for the information of Secretary Sir Charles Wood, that Lord Russell has forwarded the Memorandum to Mr. Alison, and will instruct him to make disbursements on account of the India Office, in connection with the telegraph, but that before giving these instructions his Lordship must request to be furnished with definite directions for Mr. Alison's guidance in making disbursements, no directions on the subject being contained in your above-mentioned letter.

No. 54.

Mr. Melvill to Mr. Layard.—(Received August 14.)

Sir,

India Office, August 13, 1863.

I AM directed by Sir Charles Wood to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th ultimo, with its inclosures, from Sir H. Bulwer and Ali Pasha, relative to the proposed division of messages by the Bagdad telegraph.

This question originated in the manner explained in Mr. Baring's letter of the 1st April last, in consequence of the Persian Minister refusing to give his approval to the purchase of stores, as stipulated for in Article 6 of the proposed Convention. Sir Charles Wood accordingly gave the written assurance that Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran would be authorized to deal with the question if raised there; and he communicated through the Foreign Office the terms to which he would, in such an event, be willing to consent. It now appears from Mr. Thomson's letter of the 4th July (which is noticed in another letter of this date) that the Persian Government do not raise the question, and Sir Charles Wood has certainly no wish that any stipulation on the subject should be inserted in the Persian Convention. He thinks, however, that the proposal of the Turkish Government that the Persian line should be made use of, in the communications east of Bagdad, only when the more direct Turkish line is interrupted, is open to objection.

The important advantages to be expected from the establishment of a secondary line are admitted by Ali Pasha, but the effect of his Excellency's proposal would be to limit the efficiency of that line; since the mere "local" traffic to be expected on it would consist, almost exclusively, of messages transmitted by Persian signallers, in their own, or in the Turkish language; and it is clear that such a line could not be kept up in the state of efficiency required to make it at once available on an emergency for the whole of the Anglo-Indian traffic, unless the establishments were kept up to their work by the regular transmission of a certain amount of European business.

Mr. Baring's letter to Mr. Hammond of the 1st April pointed out how insignificant, as compared with the extent of the whole Turkish line, is the section the receipts from which would be effected by the withdrawal of a portion of the traffic, and Sir Charles Wood is persuaded that the Turkish Government will recognize the advantage of diverting, with the object above explained, such an amount of through-traffic as will suffice to keep the Persian offices in thorough working order, after their attention has been drawn to the importance of maintaining the alternative line in a state of complete efficiency.

Sir,

India Office, August 13, 1863.

SIR CHARLES WOOD has been furnished with a copy of a letter from Mr. Thomson to Earl Russell, dated Tehran the 4th July last, upon which he is desirous of making the following observations.

With reference to the objections entertained by the Shah to the construction of the telegraph between Khanakeen and Bushire, with a double wire, I am to state that Sir Charles Wood agrees in the opinion that it is preferable that the simple operation of establishing a line with a single wire only should, in the first instance, be undertaken.

With regard to the proposed distribution between the Turkish and Persian telegraphs of through messages, I am directed to explain that Sir Charles Wood has no wish that any stipulation on the subject should be embodied in the proposed Convention.

Sir Charles Wood requests that Earl Russell will be good enough to communicate his views on the above points to Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran.

I am further to observe that as the European Staff, and the stores for the telegraph in question, have been despatched, it appears to Sir Charles Wood to be of much importance that the Convention on the subject should be ratified without loss of time.

Sir,

Foreign Office, August 24, 1863.

WITH reference to your despatch of the 4th of July, I transmit to you herewith copies of two letters from the India Office,* on the subject of the line of telegraph now in course of construction between Bagdad and Bushire.

You will perceive from these papers that Sir C. Wood concurs in the opinion of the Persian Government, that it would be advisable that the line between Khanakeen and Bushire should in the first instance be constructed with a single wire.

With regard to the division of messages between the two lines of telegraph from Bagdad, Sir C. Wood states that as the question does not appear to have been raised by the Persian Government, he has no wish that any stipulation on the subject should be introduced into the Convention; but he points out the importance of a sufficient number of messages being sent by the Persian line to insure its being kept in a thorough state of efficiency.

It only remains for me, in instructing you to act in accordance with the tenor of the inclosed letters, to call your special attention to the expediency of bringing the negotiations to a speedy conclusion, in order that the Convention may be ratified as soon as possible.

Sir,

WITH reference to your despatch of the 9th ultimo, I transmit to your Excellency a copy of a letter from the India Office,† stating that as the question of division of messages by the Bagdad telegraph has not been raised at Tehran, Sir C. Wood has no wish that any stipulation on the subject should be introduced into the Convention with Persia.

Sir C. Wood further points out the serious objections existing to the Porte's proposal that the Persian line should be made use of, in the communications east of Bagdad, only when the more direct Turkish line is interrupted; and urges the necessity, in order to maintain the Persian line in a state of efficiency, that a certain amount of European messages should be sent by that route.

Her Majesty's Government trust that in consideration of these circumstances the Porte will not object to such use being made of both lines between Bagdad and Bushire as will best ensure the efficiency of telegraphic communication between Europe and India.

No. 64.

Mr. Melvill to Mr. Layard.—(Received August 28.)

Sir, India Office, August 27, 1863.
 I AM directed by the Secretary of State for India to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, inclosing a copy of the Porte's reply to the proposal that the Indian "through" telegraph messages, via Bagdad, should be divided between the Persian and the Turkish lines. In reply, and in continuation of my letter of the 13th instant, I am to make the following remarks:—

In the first place I have to observe that in execution of the arrangement with the Turkish Government, the whole of the stores for the direct line from Bagdad to Bussorah have already been purchased and despatched by the Indian Government. A submarine cable has also been provided, at great cost, to extend from Bushire the whole distance westward to the mouth of the "Shat-el-Arab," and this expenditure will be useless if the line from Bagdad to that point be not constructed. It is therefore impossible that the Porte should now be allowed to withdraw from their undertaking to construct the line for which the materials have thus been provided.

But I am to add that Sir Charles Wood is convinced that the Turkish Government has taken a mistaken view of its own interests in this matter. These interests Sir Charles Wood believes to be identical with those of the Indian Government, and that it is for the common interest of both that this duplicate line, through Persia, should be constructed.

On an extended line of telegraph (such as that from England to India) the returns depend mainly on "through" communication, and such appears to be the opinion of the Turkish Government itself. Now it is evident that the result of an interruption on any part of the line must be a loss on the whole of the line of any receipt from these messages, the transmission of which is stopped by the partial break. A further result of such interruption would be that public confidence in the security of the line would be shaken, and the development of the traffic checked, even after the defect had been repaired. Recognizing the importance of this consideration, the Indian Government has throughout acted on the principle that every precaution should be taken to render as secure as possible each and every link of the important chain of communication between Constantinople and India. On this principle, although they have nearly completed the land line from Kurrachee to Guadur, they have resolved, in addition to completing this land line, to incur the further expense of extending the submarine cable from Guadur to Kurrachee; and it was on the same principle that they consented to afford aid to the Persian Government in constructing an alternative line between Bagdad and the Persian Gulf.

There will thus be alternative lines between Kurrachee and Guadur, and between Bushire and Bagdad. If the land line through Mekran should be interrupted, messages may be sent by the submarine line; and in like manner if the line from Bushire to Bagdad should be interrupted, there will be the means of sending the message vid Tehran; and if the latter line be interrupted, the messages can be sent vid Bussorah.

During winter the maintenance of parts of the Persian line is likely to prove difficult and uncertain, while during August and September the same may probably be the case with the Bussorah route. It is, however, very improbable that both these lines will be interrupted at the same time. The transmission of messages by either one route or the other is thus rendered as secure as can be, and the certainty of the delivery of "through" messages, on which the employment of the line so much depends, will in a great measure be insured; and, as the pecuniary return from the line depends on the extent to which it is used, the certainty of transmission is really the means of ensuring large returns on the expenditure incurred.

At first sight it appears that, in the case of messages sent by the Persian line, both the Indian and the Turkish Governments are likely to lose part of the returns that might otherwise be looked for from their respective portions of the more direct line from Bagdad, vid Bussorah, to Bushire; and, as the cost of the submarine cable is nearly 300*l.* per mile, it may be remarked that the interests of the Indian Government in the returns from this direct line are quite as great, or indeed greater, than those of the Porte. The consideration of an alternative line, however, affords increased security to the "through" communications in a degree that has been deemed much more than sufficient to outweigh this consideration.

In short, therefore, the Turkish Government has the strongest interest in making the communication eastward of Bagdad as certain and free from interruption as possible. The length of line from Bagdad westward to the frontier of the Turkish dominions in Europe is so great, and the payment for the transmission of messages along that line is so large, in proportion to that due to the shorter portions from Bagdad to Bussorah, or from Bagdad to Khanakeen, that the certainty on these latter portions is of the greatest importance towards securing the receipts on the longer part of their line. Any difference between the payments for messages sent by the Bagdad and Bussorah line, and for those sent on the line between Bagdad and Khanakeen, is insignificant in comparison with the security afforded by these two concurrent lines for the transmission of messages all the way through Turkey in Asia and Turkey in Europe, and the receipts to be derived from it by the Turkish Government. Sir Charles Wood entertains no doubt but that when this view is put before them, the Turkish Government will no longer hesitate to perform their part of the engagement by completing the line between Bagdad and Bussorah.

Sir,

Foreign Office, September 8, 1863.

WITH reference to your Excellency's despatch of the 31st of July, and to my despatch of the 24th ultimo, I transmit to you herewith a copy of a letter from the India Office,* stating the reasons why Sir Charles Wood considers it impossible that the Porte should be allowed to withdraw from its undertaking to construct the telegraph from Bagdad to Bussorah, and pointing out how the Turkish Government has taken a mistaken view of its own interests in this matter, which Sir Charles Wood believes to be identical with those of the Indian Government, and that it is for the common interest of both Governments that a duplicate line of telegraph to India, through Persia, should be constructed.

Her Majesty's Government trust that the Turkish Government will, on learning from your Excellency their views as set forth in the India Office letter, no longer hesitate to perform their part of the engagement of completing the line of telegraph between Bagdad and Bussorah.

No. 68.

Mr. Merivale to Mr. Hammond.—(Received September 12.)

Sir,

India Office, September 11, 1863.

IN continuation of Mr. Melvill's letter of 27th ultimo, relative to the proposed direct Turkish line of telegraph from Bagdad to the Persian Gulf, I am directed by Sir Charles Wood to request that Earl Russell will cause the following particulars regarding the steps taken here for aiding in the construction of that line, to be communicated to the Turkish Government.

It has already been intimated that stores and materials, including "compound" iron posts for the whole of this line, have been supplied by the Government of India. The first cargo of these stores may be expected at Bussorah during the present month; intimation has been made to Colonel Kemball of each successive shipment; detailed lists of the stores and descriptions of the posts have also been forwarded; and an Inspector, who had previously been instructed in all details connected with the iron posts and other stores, left England for Bagdad via Beyrout, on the 12th ultimo. This Inspector has been instructed, on his arrival at Bagdad, to afford all information that may be required for effecting the proper distribution of the stores; and it is hoped that the line may thus be commenced before the end of October.

The total length of line from Bagdad to Fas, by the route selected by Colonel Kemball, is about 375 miles, and there is no doubt that this length of line can be readily completed before the end of January if a sufficient number of distinct working-parties are organised and set to work on different sections of the line.

With five such working parties, the average length for each will be only 75 miles; and, if efficient supervision can be secured for each party, and proper instruction afforded in the method of erecting the iron posts, the whole line should be completed with certainty within the period named. It is obviously of great importance both to the Turkish and Indian Governments that this link in the chain of communication should be completed simultaneously with the more eastern or submarine portions,—that is, before the end of January next. With a view, therefore, of affording all possible assistance, the following arrangements have been made:—

Five complete sets of tools, implements, and apparatus of every kind that can be required by a working party employed in the construction of a line with iron posts have been provided, and sent out with the other stores; one Inspector and four non-commissioned officers of the Royal Engineers, who had previously been instructed in the erection of the posts, have been sent, via Bombay, to Bussora, where they may be expected to arrive about the end of October,—the earliest time at which Europeans could be employed in Mesopotamia. The services of these men, as well as those of the Inspector previously referred to, will be placed at the disposal of Colonel Kemball for employment with the different working parties, in such manner as may be most convenient to the Turkish officials. A telegraphic engineer, Mr. Greener, is also at Bagdad, and the whole of this staff will be made available, under Colonel Kemball's orders, to aid in the operations until the completion of the work.

The Government of India, by whom the whole of the staff above referred to will be paid, has made these arrangements with a view of promoting the early and effectual completion of this important line, but it is of course necessary that the approval of the Turkish Government should be given before the staff can be employed in the manner suggested. It is moreover very desirable, and Sir Charles Wood would suggest that the attention of Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople should be especially drawn to this point, that this approval should be distinctly expressed to the Pasha of Bagdad, in order to insure the cordial co-operation of the Turkish officials.

As it is of course necessary that the approval of the Porte should be given before the staff can be employed in the manner suggested, I have to instruct your Excellency to endeavour to obtain such sanction with as little delay as possible, and to take especial care that the Pasha of Bagdad is distinctly informed that the Turkish Government have approved of the arrangements in question, in order to insure the cordial co-operation of the Turkish officials.

Sir,

Foreign Office, September 23, 1863.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 24th ultimo, respecting the disbursements to be made through you on account of the telegraph between Khanakeen and Bushire, I transmit for your information the accompanying copy of a despatch to the Government of Bombay upon that subject.

I am, &c.

Sir C. Wood to the Government of Bombay.

(Telegraphic.)

September 16, 1863.

1. WITH reference to my despatch of 25th June last, on the subject of disbursements to be made at Tehran, Bagdad, and Bushire, on account of the telegraph in Persia, copies are herewith forwarded, for your Excellency's information, of the correspondence noted in the margin.*

2. The disbursements in question will consist chiefly of salaries of sanctioned establishments, particulars of which were furnished by my despatches of 15th August and 16th instant; but some additional payments will have to be made on account of travelling and contingent expenses.

3. It will be observed from the inclosed correspondence that Mr. Alison, Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran, will look to your Government for specific information regarding his disbursements and the subsequent adjustment of accounts, and it will be necessary that similar information should be furnished by you to Colonel Kembal at Bagdad, and to Lieutenant-Colonel Pelly at Bushire.

4. In the preparation of instructions to these several officers the suggestions contained in the enclosed letter from Colonel Stewart will no doubt be found useful.

No. 71.

Mr. Merivale to Mr. Hammond.—(Received September 29.)

Sir, India Office, September 28, 1863.

WITH reference to the correspondence on the subject of the establishment of an alternative line of telegraph from Bagdad, viâ Khanakeen, through Persia to Bushire, I am directed by Sir Charles Wood to state that it appears to him to be desirable that the following proposals for the construction and working of that portion of the line which will run through Turkish territory, should be made to the Government of the Porte, viz.:

That the materials required for the construction of the line shall be provided by the Indian Government under an arrangement similar to that under which stores for the Bagdad and Bussorah line have been supplied.

That the construction of the line shall be carried out by the Turkish Government, but the Indian Government will be prepared to render such assistance as may be required, by providing superintendence, and by making advances under a similar arrangement to that referred to in the preceding paragraph, to defray the cost of construction.

That having reference to the total length of the section of the line running through Turkish territory (ninety-seven miles) the expense of establishing a repeating station on the frontier be dispensed with; the line from Bagdad to the first Persian station (Kermanshah) being worked as a single direct electrical circuit; and—

That for all messages transmitted by the Persian line, the Turkish Government be credited with the proportion of tariff charge due to them for the section in the territory. But it appears to Sir Charles Wood, that in order to secure the efficiency of the whole line, it would be advantageous that the Turkish section, and the line in Persia, should be placed under the same general superintendence; and that to enable the English Superintendent to make arrangements for the due despatch of messages, he should have control of that part of the office establishment at Bagdad which is employed in connection with the Persian branch line.

Sir Charles Wood accordingly requests that instructions may be issued to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople to enter into an arrangement with the Turkish Government on the basis of the above proposals.

Sir H. Bulwer to Earl Russell.—(Received October 24.)

My Lord,

Therapia, October 15, 1863.

IN pursuance of the instructions contained in your Lordship's despatches of the 24th of August, and 8th, 15th, and 29th of September last, I have addressed three notes to the Porte, urging it not to withdraw from the construction of a line of telegraph from Bagdad to Bussorah. I made use of all the arguments employed by the India Office to show that it is as much for the interest of the Turkish Government as it is for that of the British Government that a duplicate line of Telegraph should be available to India, and after some hesitation the Porte has at length acquiesced in the views of Her Majesty's Government, and consented to avail itself of the staff of engineers provided by the Indian Government as set forth in the letters from the India Office of September 11th and 28th.

Aali Pasha has thought it advisable, however, to stipulate in writing the conditions on which the lines both to Bussorah and Khanakeen are to be undertaken. I have, therefore, subject to your Lordship's approval, agreed to the draft Protocol herewith inclosed, which appears to me to embody the principal arrangements contemplated by Sir Charles Wood.

The details, connected with the working of the lines, are left for consideration hereafter.

The payment of the materials furnished by Her Majesty's Government is made contingent upon the actual opening of the line for through traffic, by a provision that such payment shall be met out of the receipts of the lines; and this condition, under the circumstances, appeared to me so reasonable that I could offer no objection to its being inserted in the Protocol.

Although it is stipulated in Article 9 that the traffic shall be equally divided between the two lines, I have, as authorized by Sir Charles Wood, informed the Porte that the Indian Government would not, without necessity, divert from the Bussorah Line a greater amount of traffic than would suffice to keep the Persian offices in thorough working order.

It will, therefore, be open to the Indian Government to determine what amount of through traffic, beyond one-half, shall be transmitted by the Bussorah Line. But it would, perhaps, simplify matters if an understanding were come to with the Porte that messages may be forwarded indifferently by either line, as happens to be most convenient, and that payment be calculated on the mean distance of 375 and 89 miles, the distance of Bagdad from Bussorah and Khanakeen, respectively.

I am now awaiting your Lordship's instructions by telegraph as to whether the Protocol is approved by Her Majesty's Government. When it has been signed, orders will be transmitted to Bagdad by telegraph to commence the works on the Bussorah Line as soon after the arrival of the staff of engineers from India as may be practicable.

Sir,

Foreign Office, October 24, 1863.

WITH reference to my letter of the 6th instant, I am directed by Earl Russell to transmit to you, for the consideration of Sir C. Sir H. Bulwer to Earl Russell.—(Received November 1.)

My Lord,

Therapia, October 20, 1863.

IN accordance with the instructions conveyed to me by your Lordship's telegram of the 17th instant, I have this day signed a Protocol with Aali Pasha, herewith inclosed, determining the conditions on which the Porte is prepared to construct and work a duplicate line of telegraph between Bagdad and Bussorah and Bagdad and the Persian frontier, in connection with the submarine cable from India by the Persian Gulf.

As your Lordship appears to me in doubt with respect to the exact tenor of the Convention of Brussels referred to in Article 11 of this Protocol, I think it better to transmit also a copy of that instrument. It was framed, as your Lordship will perceive, mainly with the view of settling a uniform regulation and tariff for international telegraphic communications on the continent; and as its provisions are already in force throughout the Turkish Empire, the Porte is desirous that they should, as far as may be practicable, become the basis of any future arrangements with Her Majesty's Government in respect with the traffic in India.

The Persian Minister is, I believe, instructed to negotiate a telegraphic Convention with the Porte on somewhat similar terms, and your Lordship may perhaps see fit to compris  Persia also in the arrangements to be adapted for working the different lines.

It is my intention to forward a copy of this Protocol to Colonel Kemball by to-morrow's post for his information and guidance.

Translation.

CONSEQUENT upon the exchange of notes which has taken place between the Embassy of Her Britannic Majesty and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of His Majesty the Sultan, on the subject of the extension of the line above ground from Bagdad to Bussorah and to Khanakeen, with the object of connecting by two different lines the Indian telegraphs with the telegraphic network of Europe, the Ambassador of Her Britannic Majesty at the Sublime Porte and the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Sultan, with a view to this, have decided on the following arrangement :—

Article 1. The Ottoman Government will extend at its own expense :—

1. The line above ground from Bagdad to Bussorah.

2. It will construct a line above ground from Bagdad to Khanakeen on the Persian frontier. These two lines shall consist of two wires, of which the one shall be kept exclusively for direct messages.

Art. 2. The Indian Government, on its side, at its own cost, shall carry the Indian submarine cable, which joins at Bushire, either to Bussorah or to some other point at the mouth of the Shat-el-Arab, which shall be designated later, and which shall be connected with the line above ground.

Art. 3. The Indian Government besides shall furnish to the Ottoman Government all the necessary materials, including the poles of iron for the construction of the two lines above ground before-mentioned.

The two telegraphic engineers who are already at Bagdad, as also the inspector and the four sub-officers of the British Engineers which are soon expected to arrive in that city, shall be placed at the disposal of the Ottoman Authorities to co-operate in the construction of these lines.

Art. 4. The Ottoman Government shall pay for the materials thus furnished by the Indian Government with the money received for telegraphic messages from India, which shall traverse the line of the extreme European frontier of the Ottoman Empire, be it to Bussorah or as far as Khanakeen, according to a special arrangement, which the two Governments reserve to themselves to establish, to determine the mode and the period of the payment of the price of these materials.

The salaries of the engineers to be paid by the Indian Government. The materials which shall be furnished by the Indian Government shall be consigned on their arrival to the hands of the Ottoman authorities, and a receipt given for them.

Art. 5. The Imperial authorities shall immediately receive orders to begin the works upon the line from Bagdad to Bussorah.

Art. 6. The submarine cable which is to meet the line above ground from Bagdad to Bussorah shall be laid as soon as possible, in order to secure simultaneous operations.

Art. 7. As soon as this line shall have been completed the Ottoman Government shall commence the line from Bagdad to Khanakeen, for which the Indian Government equally engages to furnish materials and engineers on the same conditions as those which have been stipulated for the line from Bussorah.

Art. 8. The Sublime Porte shall take care, if need be, to employ for the working of these lines, persons acquainted with the English language.

Art. 9. All the despatches addressed to or coming from India shall be equally divided between the line from Bagdad to Bussorah on the one hand, and that of Khanakeen on the other.

To avoid all difficulty of execution, the application of this system of division shall be as follows :

All despatches coming from India shall pass by the line from Khanakeen. On the other hand, all those for India shall be sent by the line from Bagdad to Bussorah.

Art. 10. The stipulation of Art. 9 shall remain in force for ten years, at the end of which it can be revised by means of a new understanding between the two Governments.

Art. 11. The two Governments reserve to themselves the right to determine on and conclude a Telegraphic Convention on the bases of the Act of Brussels which constitutes the International Law of Lines of Electric Telegraphs.

In faith of which the Ambassador of Her Britannic Majesty and the Minister for Foreign Affairs of His Imperial Majesty the Sultan have signed the present Protocol in duplicate, and have annexed their seals.

No. 76.

Mr. Baring to Mr. Hammond.—(Received November 2.)

Sir,

India Office, November 2, 1863.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State for India to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th ultimo, with inclosure from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, and in reply, to state that he is ready to assent to all the conditions of the Protocol respecting the Mesopotamian land lines of telegraph, which the Porte are desirous that his Excellency should sign.

Instead, however, of dividing the traffic, as stipulated in the Protocol, equally between the Bussorah and Khanakeen Lines, Sir Charles Wood would prefer that, as suggested by Sir Henry Bulwer, messages shall be left forwarded indifferently by either line, as happened to be most convenient, and that payment should be calculated on the mean of 375 and 89 miles, the distances between Bagdad and Bussorah, and Bagdad and Khanakeen respectively. But if a change to this effect be made in the Protocol, it will be necessary, in order to ensure the maintenance of the Bussorah Line, to provide that the mean rate of payment should continue in force only as long as both lines are kept in efficient working order.

It might, too, be perhaps desirable to modify the wording of that part of Article 3, which places the English engineers sent out to construct the lines at the disposal of the Turkish authorities, by providing that all communication from the latter to the former should be made through Colonel Kembell.

Mr. Alison to Earl Russell.—(Received November 3.)

My Lord,

Tehran, October 5, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that Mr. Man, with two other English engineers, who have been selected at the India Office to superintend the construction of portions of the Persian Line of Telegraph, arrived in Tehran on the 1st instant.

The wire and materials required for this line have not, so far as I am informed, yet reached the Persian Gulf, but I consider it advisable that no time should be lost in making such preparations as might be practicable in the absence of these stores, and I accordingly instructed Mr. Thomson to wait upon the Minister for Foreign Affairs, with the above gentlemen, in order to present them to his Excellency, and to arrange for commencing operations at once.

The Prince Itizad-oo-Sultaneh, under whose directions the Persian Telegraph is to be constructed, was also present at the interview which Mr. Thomson had with Meerza Saeed Khan yesterday for this purpose, and His Royal Highness expressed it as his opinion, that it would not be expedient to begin erecting the posts until the insulators had been received, as it would be found very inconvenient, and perhaps impossible, to fix the insulators by means of ladders after the supports had been placed in the ground. He therefore considered that it would be on the whole better that the engineers who have just arrived should proceed to survey carefully the portions of the line allotted to them, in order to determine the exact route along which the wires should be laid down, and to satisfy themselves at the same time that the posts which had been prepared by the Persian Government were perfectly distributed along the road, and that they were sufficiently strong for the purpose required.

From the list of telegraph stores which have been forwarded to this country, it seems that the number of insulators sent out will only suffice for a comparatively small portion of the entire line, and unless this is speedily rectified, it may cause considerable delay hereafter in completing the work. Mr. Man, it is true, appears to think that insulators will scarcely be required in this climate, but until Lieutenant Champain reaches Tehran, which will probably be in the course of two or three weeks, no decision will be arrived at on this question.

In the meantime, ten Persian signallers are to be placed with the English Superintendents, in order that they may receive daily instruction in the use of the telegraphic instruments, which are to be furnished for this line; though in signifying his readiness to adopt this measure, the Itizad Sultaneh-oo-pointed out the inconvenience which would eventually be felt from these instruments being intended for communicating in the English language only, instead of having also the Persian character, as is the case with those hitherto used by the Persian Government.

it is said, "as the European staff, and the stores for the telegraph in question, have been despatched, it appears to Sir Charles Wood to be of much importance that the Convention on the subject should be ratified without loss of time."

I am informed by Mr. Thomson that there has been no question of the formal conclusion of a Convention respecting the telegraph, and that he had not himself taken any steps for that purpose. There are no precise instructions from your Lordship's office, nor are there any full powers for the conclusion of this instrument. A formal engagement has been entered into, on the part of the Persian Government, for the construction of a line of telegraph from Khanakeen to Bushire, which has been agreed to by Her Majesty's Government, and which is deposited in the archives of this Mission.

On bringing the proposal for entering into a Convention before the Minister for Foreign Affairs, I was informed by his Excellency that the Shah's Government had never contemplated such a measure, and that the King did not see any necessity for it at present. I inclose copy of Mr. Thomson's report on this subject. Since that was drawn up Mirza Saeed Khan has confirmed to me personally the views entertained by His Majesty.

The engagement with the Persian Government is equally valid for the purpose in contemplation, which both the King and his Ministers declare themselves most anxious to carry out without loss of time.

Mr. Thomson to Mr. Alison.

Sir,

Gulahek, September 25, 1863.

HAVING, in compliance with your instructions, prepared under the form of a Convention, in Persian and English, the necessary papers respecting the construction of the Persian Telegraph, I yesterday waited upon the Minister for Foreign Affairs, for the purpose of submitting them to him, with a view to their subsequent signature.

His Excellency appeared to be unprepared for the proposal thus made. He said that a formal Convention of this nature had not been contemplated by the Shah's Government, and that he considered that the paper which he had already sealed and delivered to Her Majesty's Mission was sufficient to answer all the purposes required. That document was a formal engagement on the part of the Persian Government to construct the line of telegraph from Khanakeen to Bushire, under certain conditions, and the Persian Government was fully prepared to carry out all the stipulations therein set forth without loss of time; but no proposal having been made hitherto to draw up a Treaty or Convention on the subject, he was of opinion that the King would not now be disposed to make any change in the form of the agreement already made, which had been submitted to, and entirely approved of, by His Majesty before it was signed and transmitted to the Mission. In order to prove that no Convention was proposed at the outset he said it would only be necessary to call attention to the concluding phrase in the engagement he had signed, wherein it was stated, that if the English Government approved of the terms offered, the Persian Government would at once commence the construction of the line, no mention being made of any intention on either side to conclude a Convention on the subject.

His Excellency desired me to state to you, that in making the above remarks, he had simply expressed his own private opinion, and that he would refrain from giving any official reply until he had ascertained what the Shah's wishes were on this question.

Engagement entered into by the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs for the Construction of a Line of Telegraph from Khanakeen to Bushire.

(Translation.)

1. THE Persian Government considers it necessary to construct a line of telegraph without delay from Khanakeen to the capital, Tehran, and from Tehran to the port of Bushire; and they agree that, whenever the English Government may require to communicate by the said telegraph, they are to be at liberty to do so through the Persian telegraph officers in the way they may desire, paying for the same at rates to be specified hereafter.

2. The Persian Government will assign a sum sufficient for the construction of this telegraph, and for the purchase of such materials as are not procurable in Persia, or can be better obtained in Europe.

3. The Persian Government engages to purchase from the English Government all the materials which are better procurable in Europe, and the English Government agrees to supply such materials at moderate prices.

4. In order that the said line of telegraph may be well constructed and officially worked, the Persian Government agrees to place it under the superintendence of an English engineer officer, who is to be paid by the English Government, and they further agree to fix a period during which instruction may be given and the line may be brought into good working order; and his Royal Highness the Itizad-oo-Sultaneh, the Minister of Public Instruction, and his Excellency the Amin-ed-Dowleh will have cognizance of the aforesaid officer's proceedings.

5. The said officer will be fully empowered to call upon the Persian authorities to supply any materials he may consider requisite for this work, and the Persian authorities will make no alteration in his requisitions unless it should be impossible to obtain the thing required. But a Persian officer will accompany him everywhere, so that he may be informed of what is done, and of the prices of the materials; and the accounts will be audited by the above-mentioned Prince and by the Amin-ed-Dowleh every three months, when a report will be drawn up and printed in the "Tehran Gazette."

6. In order to increase the friendship between the two Governments, and to promote the above undertaking, the English Government engages to purchase in England at reasonable rates, with the approval of the Persian Minister Plenipotentiary, the materials required for this work, and to convey them to the Persian frontier, and to receive from the Persian Government the price paid for the above articles by five instalments in five years after they are delivered on the frontier of Persia.

(In the handwriting of the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs.)

The Persian Government accepts this engagement. If the English Government desires it, the construction of the line of telegraph will be commenced in conformity with the above stipulation.

Mr. Erskine to Earl Russell.—(Received November 21.)

My Lord,

Constantinople, November 11, 1863.

BY a telegraphic despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bagdad, dated the 7th instant, I learn that arrangements have been made with the Governor-General for the commencement of the line of telegraph to Bussorah, and that three English and two Turkish engineers are already at work superintending the distribution of the materials along the line.

The staff expected from India had not then arrived at Bagdad.

No. 83.

Mr. Merivale to Mr. Hammond.—(Received December 2.)

Sir,

India Office, December 2, 1863.

I AM directed by Secretary Sir Charles Wood to state, for the information of Earl Russell, that all arrangements requisite in this country for extending the electric telegraph from Bagdad to India have now been completed, and that Lieutenant-Colonel P. Stewart has left England, to superintend, with the aid of Sir Charles Bright, the submersion of the submarine portions of the line, and to organize official establishments, and make other indispensable preparations for working it.

Before, however, a satisfactory system of working can be established, it is desirable that the assent of the Porte should be obtained to the direct participation by British officers in the service of the Turkish lines; and there are also several other points the settlement of which must probably become the subject of negotiation. Among these may be mentioned the periodical interchange of returns, the adjustment of tariffs, and of liability for loss or "mutilation" of messages, the distribution of traffic between concurrent lines, the mode of insuring the requisite priority of Government despatches, and the methods to be adopted for forwarding written despatches during the occurrence of interruption on any link of the line.

The usual European practice (and that to which in their recent despatches the Turkish Government refer) is to embody, in a formal Convention, all that may be mutually agreed on between the various administrations concerned; and if practicable it would, in Sir Charles Wood's opinion, be desirable to enter into such a detailed Convention both with Turkey and Persia before commencing to use the through line. It has, however, been represented to him that the changed conditions which apply to so extended a system of lines as that between India and Europe will necessitate very considerable alterations in the principles on which the Conventions now in force for the more limited system of telegraph in Europe have been based. At present it is impossible to foresee the exact nature of the alterations required; and the best plan would, therefore, seem to be to work the line experimentally for a short time, adopting, so far as they are applicable, the terms of the Brussels Convention, but postponing the formal introduction of alterations until some actual experience in the working of the extended line shall have supplied sufficient data for the preparation of such a Convention as shall be permanently applicable.

There are still other preliminaries, connected principally with the mode of accounting for and apportioning traffic receipts, which must be disposed of before even the experimental working can be commenced. On these and other points, which cannot be settled without the concurrence of the Turkish Government, Sir C. Wood has caused Memoranda to be prepared which are herewith transmitted, and copies of which he requests may, if Earl Russell sees no objection, be forwarded to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, with a view to his effecting a temporary agreement upon the basis therein laid down. If this be done, it will be necessary for the purposes of the agreement to station a traffic-manager at Constantinople on behalf of the Indian Government; and Sir C. Wood has selected for the office Mr. Walter Courtenay, who, as Secretary of the Submarine Telegraph Company, has become thoroughly conversant with all the details of telegraphic business, and has, moreover, had much experience in considering and maturing the terms of telegraph Conventions. It is probable that Mr. Courtenay's presence at Constantinople might be very useful for the purpose of supplying information on technical points; and Sir Charles Wood will desire him to proceed at once to his post, and to place himself at the disposal of Her Majesty's Ambassador, if Earl Russell agrees with him in thinking the step advisable.

Inclosure in No. 83.

Memorandum.

PROPOSED Political Convention with Turkey for the working of the Indo-European Telegraph, on the first opening of the through line, and during the period that must elapse before the preparation of a more detailed and formal Convention.

ALL the terms of the Protocol recently signed at Constantinople to have effect, and the following, or some similar terms, to be added to that deed, or to be agreed to, in substance, by the Turkish Government:—

1. As regards that part of the office to be established on Turkish territory, at or near the mouth of the Shat-el-Arab, which is required for the service of the submarine line:—The British Government to provide and maintain, at its own cost, the whole of the signalling and other staff, as well as the instruments and stores required for working the submarine line, and the Staff so employed to be solely under the orders of the British Superintendent.

2. All “through” despatches received at this office through the Turkish land lines, to be transferred at once by the Turkish to the British Superintendent, for transmission through the submarine, and vice versa.

3. For the satisfactory preparation of returns and adjustment of accounts between the two Governments concerned, it is proposed that a Traffic Manager, paid by the British Government, be stationed at Constantinople, and another at Bagdad or Bussorah, and such traffic managers at all times to have free access to the returns of through traffic in the Turkish office.

The accounts and money payments for transmission of through messages to be adjusted in accordance with the general terms of Memorandum attached (Annex No. 1); and periodical settlement to take place at intervals not exceeding six months.

4. The tariff to be permanently adopted, for the transmission of through messages over the Turkish lines east of Constantinople, to be regulated hereafter on the basis of the Brussels Convention of 1858.

5. But for the period during which the line may be worked under this Preliminary Convention a higher rate to be charged.

This, however, should not exceed—

20s. per message of twenty words between Constantinople and mouth of the Shat-el-Arab.

15s. ditto to Khanakeen.

14s. ditto to Bagdad.

6. The tariff to be permanently adopted on the submarine or other lines, the property of the Government of India, between the mouth of the Shat-el-Arab and Kurrachee, to be re-considered hereafter in preparing the later Convention. But neither during the preliminary nor the subsequent period is the tariff on this portion of the line to exceed—

50s. per message of 20 words between Kurrachee and mouth of the Shat-el-Arab.

45s. ditto between Kurrachee and Bushire.

7. During the continuance of this Preliminary Convention, the rules and regulations for the detailed working of the lines to be as nearly as practicable those of the Brussels Convention, at present adopted by the Porte in their relations with European telegraphic administrations.

But it appears to be the interest of both the Governments concerned that the following arrangements for the respective use of the two wires east of Constantinople should be agreed to (vide Annex No. 2). Also that an additional wire between Constantinople and Belgrade be provided by the Turkish Government, or that one of the existing wires be allotted exclusively to through traffic, on same general terms as “English” wire east of Constantinople.

November 16, 1863.

P. STEWART.

No. 1. Accounts.—It is proposed, with regard to the settlement of accounts for messages from England to India, or any point east of Constantinople, that Companies receiving or collecting such messages should, after retaining the proportion due to themselves, hand over to the continental Administrations (with whom they are in the habit of settling accounts) the continental rates, as far as Constantinople only, and that the balance, or the charge from Constantinople to the destination, be handed over to the Traffic Manager appointed by the Government of India in London, it being the province of that officer to prepare the accounts with the Ottoman and Persian Governments, deducting periodically the whole or part of sums to be recovered from those Governments on account of stores advanced to them, and to credit to the Government of India the amount due on account of the submarine or Persian Gulf line, or on account of the Government lines within the frontier of India.

For this measure the assent of the Ottoman Government will be required; and, in the document communicating such assent, it should be distinctly set forth that, for all messages originating in England, the Porte will look to the India Office for the proportion due on account of Turkish lines east of Constantinople. Copy of such document would have to be sent by the Submarine Telegraph Company to the French, Belgian, Danish, and Hanoverian Administrations, and by the Electric and International Telegraph Company to the Dutch Administration.*

Each Company will have to furnish a periodical return of Indian messages for which they have received payment, and copies of these and similar returns must be interchanged periodically between the Government of India's Traffic Managers in London, Constantinople, and Kurrachee, with a view to affording a complete check on the returns for this, perhaps, the most important part of the through traffic passing towards India.

* No possible objection on the part of these Administrations can be anticipated, as their interests are in no way whatever affected by the change.

For messages originating in the continental offices, the amount due to each Administration, as far as Constantinople, to be adjusted by successive transfers, just as at present. The Turkish Government will receive, in this manner, the gross amount of payment for such messages, minus the deduction made by Western Administrations. That Government will retain the whole amount due to her for the extent of line between her western frontier on the one hand, and Khanakeen or mouth of Shat-el-Arab on the other; and, according to the proposals now made, she will hand over to the Traffic Manager at Constantinople (appointed by the Government of India), the remaining balance, including whatever may be due to Persia, as well as the larger proportion due to the Government of India.

As regards messages originating in India, and transmitted towards Europe, it is proposed that the Indian Telegraph Department should account (to the Traffic Manager already appointed for Kurrachee) for the whole amount realized in India on account of such messages, minus the proportion due for lines east of Kurrachee, which proportion will, of course, be retained by the Indian Department. The Traffic Manager at Kurrachee will divide the amount so received as follows:—

First.—Proportion due to Government of India for line from Kurrachee to Bushire or Bussorah to be retained.

Second.—Proportion due on account of Persian Government for messages transmitted viâ Teheran, to be credited to Persia, with periodical deductions on account of cost of stores supplied to that Government.

And Third.—The remaining balance, which will be credited to the Constantinople office, and paid through that office to the Turkish Government. The Turkish Government will thus receive the amount due (for such messages) to western Administrations, as well as to herself, and will adjust the former amounts by transfer, under the system at present existing.

Under the general arrangements thus proposed, the adjustment of accounts may be effected with great regularity, and the British Government will be enabled to recover with certainty the amounts advanced to Turkey and Persia.

No. 2.—Draft of some Clauses proposed to form part of subsequent Convention.

1. In the event of communication being interrupted upon the English line, the Porte to undertake that the Turkish line be given up for the through traffic until the English line is again in efficient working order.*

2. Should a contact at any time occur between the two wires,† so as to render it impossible to work both at the same time, or so as to cause delay to the Indian messages by attempting to do so, the Turkish wire to be insulated until the wires are freed from each other.

3. If a press of messages arise upon the English line, rendering delays unavoidable from their accumulation, the use of the Turkish line to be as much as an auxiliary means of transmission of the through traffic.‡

4. Should, at any time, a total break down of the English and Turkish lines occur, the terminal station on each side to despatch a special messenger every four hours, with copies of all messages on hand, to the terminal station on the other side of the break down, such special messenger to travel at a speed of not less than _____ miles an hour. As soon as telegraphic communication is restored, each station to ascertain the messages that have not, up to that time, been received by the other, and to transmit them according to priority. In such case, Clause 3 to come into especial operation.

5. In order to maintain the line in a thoroughly efficient state, linemen to be stationed upon its whole length, at a distance not exceeding _____ miles apart.

6. Each lineman to be furnished with the necessary tools, spare insulators, wire, &c., and to examine his section of _____ miles not less frequently than once every two days.

7. A head lineman to be placed over every _____ linemen, and to ride over his section not less than once a-week, and to be held strictly responsible for its thorough order.

* As the "through" traffic must always be much more important and remunerative than the "local" traffic it is clearly in the interest, both of the Turkish and British Governments, that this should be arranged.

† Vide above note

‡ This point also affects the interests of both Governments alike.

Sir,

Foreign Office, December 3, 1863.

I TRANSMIT, for your information and guidance, the accompanying copy of a letter from the India Office,* reporting that all the arrangements requisite in this country for extending the electric telegraph from Bagdad to India have now been completed, and that steps will immediately be taken for completing the submarine portions of the line, and making other necessary preparations for working it, but that before any satisfactory system of working can be established, there are certain preliminary arrangements to be made, and points to be settled with the Turkish Government, the particulars of which are contained in the accompanying printed Memorandum,† which has been prepared at the India Office, and I have to instruct you to endeavour to effect with the Turkish Government a temporary agreement upon the basis therein laid down.

I have informed the India Office that I consider it desirable that Mr. Courtenay, who has been selected for the office of traffic manager at Constantinople, should proceed there as soon as possible, in order to assist you in settling matters with the Porte.

Mr. Alison to Earl Russell.—(Received December 5.)

My Lord,

Tehran, November 3, 1863.

CAPTAIN CHAMPAIN, Director of the telegraph operations, arrived here on the 20th of October. On the same day a meeting was held at the Foreign Office, by the order of the King, of their Royal Highnesses Ferhad Mirza, the Itizad-oo-Sultaneh, their Excellencies Ferookh Khan, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and myself, to decide whether the operations for fixing the posts before the arrival of the wire and the insulators, as pressed by Mr. Man, should be proceeded with. It was decided in the affirmative, and Mr. Man will go to Ispahan in a day or two for that purpose.

The day after the return of the King, from an absence of a fortnight, I presented Captain Champain, Mr. Man, and Mr. Walton, to His Majesty, who expressed a lively interest in the work committed to their charge.

Captain Champain left for Bushire yesterday, and the necessary orders are being issued for affording every facility for the prompt execution of the operations along the different parts of the line.

My Lord,

Constantinople, December 7, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship herewith a translated copy of a Telegraphic Convention which has recently been concluded between the Sublime Porte and the Persian Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) E. M. ERSKINE.

Inclosure in No. 87.

Treaty between the Sublime Porte and the Shah of Persia for the establishment of a Line of Telegraph.

ARTICLE I.

LE Gouvernement Persan promet d'étendre une de ses lignes télégraphiques jusqu'à un endroit situé sur les frontières Ottomanes, et de son côté le Gouvernement Ottoman s'engage d'établir un embranchement d'un endroit quelconque de sa ligne télégraphique entre Scutari et Bagdad jusqu'à l'endroit où la ligne télégraphique Persane serait porté.

ARTICLE II.

Il fut convenu entre les deux Parties Contractantes que l'endroit nommé Hankin sera fixé comme point de rencontre des deux lignes ; cependant, si plus tard il y a nécessité de faciliter et d'élargir les communications télégraphiques, elles pourront être réunies également sur d'autres points des frontières.

ARTICLE III.

Le Gouvernement Ottoman promet d'admettre et de faire passer sans difficulté les dépêches télégraphiques transmises du Royaume Persan ou bien d'un Etat qui est en communication télégraphique avec la Perse, en destination pour les Etats de Sa Majesté le Sultan, ou bien pour un Etat étranger qui est en communication télégraphique avec le Gouvernement Ottoman ; et il est de même convenu que le Gouvernement Persan admettra et fera passer sans difficulté les dépêches télégraphiques transmises de la Turquie ou bien d'un Etat qui est en communication télégraphique avec le Gouvernement Ottoman, en destination pour la Perse ou pour un Etat étranger qui est en communication télégraphique avec le Gouvernement Persan.

Les dépêches télégraphiques de la Perse dans les Etats Ottomans, et les dépêches télégraphiques des Etats Ottomans en Perse, participeront aux mêmes avantages et obligations que les dépêches intérieures respectives ou bien celles d'un autre Etat étranger.

ARTICLE IV.

Les deux Parties Contractantes s'engagent d'employer l'appareil Morse, employé actuellement en Europe, pour la transmission des dépêches télégraphiques qu'ils auront à échanger ; et de même en ajoutant la Convention de Bruxelles à ce Traité, elles établissent qu'elles se conformeront, en toutes choses, aux clauses de la susdite Convention pour ce qui regarde la transmission des dépêches télégraphiques.

ARTICLE V.

Les dépêches télégraphiques, qui seront échangées entre les deux Parties Contractantes, sont divisées en deux : 1, les dépêches Persanes et Ottomanes qui partent d'un des bureaux télégraphiques de l'un des susdits Gouvernements pour les Etats de l'autre ; et 2, les dépêches des Gouvernements étrangers qui passent par les Etats de l'une des Parties Contractantes en destination pour l'étranger.

ARTICLE VI.

La taxe à percevoir pour les dépêches de la première catégorie est fixée à 30 paras par fersah, ou bien à 20 paras par heure, en commençant de Hankin jusqu'à l'endroit de leur destination. La taxe ainsi calculée ne concerne que les dépêches qui contiennent 20 mots ou moins que cela, tant dans l'Empire Ottoman qu'en Perse ; quant à celles qui contiennent plus de 20 mots, elles seront grévées de 10 piastres par chaque 10 mots ou même d'une fraction de 10 mots qu'elles contiennent.

ARTICLE VII.

Les dépêches télégraphiques de la seconde catégorie seront taxées d'après la Convention de Bruxelles annexée au présent Traité, seulement lorsque celles-ci passent par les domaines Asiatiques du Sultan et par les lignes Persanes, elles y seront taxées d'après le mode ci-dessus mentionné ; de sorte que la taxe des dépêches qui appartiennent à cette catégorie sera perçue dans le bureau établi à la frontière Persane en sahib kerans et en piastres, tandis que la taxe de ces dépêches dans les parties d'Europe jusqu'à l'endroit de leur destination sera perçue en francs, et ce mode de perception de taxes sera observé dans la transmission des dépêches télégraphiques des Etats Ottomans aux Indes Orientales.

ARTICLE VIII.

Les dépêches télégraphiques partant de l'Europe par les lignes télégraphiques Ottomanes, en destination pour les pays Asiatiques situés au-delà des domaines Persans, et celles transmises de ces pays au continent Européen, sont divisées en deux parties égales, dont l'une passera par les lignes de Hankin et de la Perse, et l'autre par Bagdad et Bussorah.

ARTICLE IX.

La correspondance télégraphique entre les Etats Ottomans et ceux de la Perse sera faite en langue Turque, Persane, Française, et Anglaise.

ARTICLE X.

Les employés du télégraphe, au service des deux Parties Contractantes, échangeront leurs comptes à la fin de chaque mois, et chaque semestre ils régleront définitivement leurs comptes d'après l'évaluation monétaire suivante :—

	Piastres.	Paras.
Sahib Keran	5	0
Toman	50	0
Franc	4	14
Abas	0	1

ARTICLE XI.

La présente Convention sera mise en exécution à l'expiration de quatre mois et plutôt si cela est possible, et elle sera en vigueur pendant dix ans depuis le jour d, l'échange des ratifications.

ARTICLE XII.

Cette Convention sera ratifiée par les deux Gouvernements et les ratifications seront échangées à Constantinople dans l'espace de trois mois depuis ce jour.

Constantinople, 17 Djemaziul-ahir, 1280 (le 28 Novembre, 1863).

Translation.

ARTICLE I.

THE Persian Government promises to extend one of its lines of telegraph to a spot situated on the Ottoman frontiers, and the Ottoman Government on its side engages to establish a branch from some point of its telegraphic line between Scutari and Bagdad to the spot where the Persian telegraphic line shall be carried.

ARTICLE II.

It was agreed upon by the two Contracting Parties, that the place called Hankin should be fixed upon as the point where the two telegraphic lines should meet ; however, if it should become necessary later to facilitate or increase the telegraphic communications they can still be made to meet on other points of the frontiers.

ARTICLE III.

The Ottoman Government promises to allow and transmit without hindrance telegraphic despatches transmitted from the Persian Empire or from a State which is in telegraphic communication with Persia, addressed to the States of His Majesty the Sultan, or to some foreign State which is in telegraphic communication with the Ottoman Government; and it is likewise agreed that the Persian Government will admit and transmit without hindrance telegraphic despatches transmitted from Turkey, or from a State which is in telegraphic communication with the Ottoman Government, addressed to Persia, or to some foreign State which is in telegraphic communication with the Persian Government.

The telegraphic despatches of Persia in the Ottoman States, and despatches of the Ottoman States in Persia, shall share the same advantages and obligations as their respective home despatches or those of another foreign State.

ARTICLE IV.

The two Contracting Parties engage to employ the Morse apparatus, actually employed in Europe, for the transmission of the telegraphic despatches which they will have to transmit, and likewise in joining the Convention of Brussels to this Treaty, they establish that they will conform in all things to the clauses of the aforesaid Convention as regards the transmission of telegraphic despatches.

ARTICLE V.

The telegraphic despatches, which shall be exchanged between the two Contracting Parties, are divided into two classes: 1, Persian and Ottoman despatches, which are sent from one of the telegraph offices of one of the afore-mentioned Governments addressed to the States of the other; and 2, the despatches of foreign Governments which pass through the States of one of the Contracting Parties to a foreign destination.

ARTICLE VI.

The charge for despatches of the first category is fixed at 30 paras a fersah, or 20 paras an hour, beginning from Hankin to their destination. This charge so calculated only affects despatches which contain 20 words or less than that, equally in the Ottoman Empire as in Persia; as to those containing more than 20 words, they will be charged 10 piasters for every 10 words or even fraction of 10 words which they consist of.

ARTICLE VII.

Telegraphic despatches of the second category will be charged according to the Convention of Brussels annexed to the present Treaty, only when they pass through the Asiatic dominions of the Sultan and by the Persian Lines, they will be charged in the aforesaid manner; so that the charge on despatches which belong to this category will be made at the office established on the Persian frontier in sahib kerans and in piasters, while the charge of these despatches in the parts of Europe to their destination shall be made in francs, and this system of charge shall be observed in the transmission of telegraphic despatches from the Ottoman dominions to the East Indies.

ARTICLE VIII.

The telegraphic despatches leaving Europe by the Ottoman telegraph lines addressed to countries of Asia situated beyond the Persian dominions, and those transmitted from these countries to the European Continent, are divided into two equal parts, of which one shall pass by the lines of Hankin and Persia, and the other by Bagdad and Bussorah.

ARTICLE IX.

The telegraphic correspondence between the Ottoman States and those of Persia shall be conducted in the Turkish, Persian, French, and English languages.

ARTICLE X.

The telegraph officials in the employ of the two Contracting Parties, shall verify their accounts at the end of every month, and every six months they will definitely settle their accounts according to the following rate of exchange :—

	Piastres.	Paras.
Toman	50	0
Franc	4	14
Abas	1	0

ARTICLE XI.

The present Convention shall be put into operation at the end of four months, and sooner if it be possible, and it shall continue in force for ten years from the day of the exchange of ratifications.

ARTICLE XII.

This Convention shall be ratified by the two Governments, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Constantinople in the space of three months from this day.

Mr. Erskine to Earl Russell.—(Received December 19.)

My Lord,

Constantinople, December 9, 1863.

IN accordance with the instruction contained in your Lordship's despatch to Sir Henry Bulwer of the 5th ultimo, I have proposed to the Porte that messages should be left to be forwarded indifferently by either of the lines of telegraph which are being constructed between Bagdad and Bussorah and Bagdad and Khanakeen.

The Porte having consented to modify the arrangement already made, in the sense suggested by the India Office, I have, with the assent of Aali Pasha drawn up an Additional Article to the Protocol of the 20th of October, embodying the proposal of a mean rate of payment for the two lines, which was signed by Aali Pasha and myself this day, and is transmitted to your Lordship herewith in original.

As the Protocol was already executed when your Lordship's despatch reached Constantinople, I have not thought it advisable to propose to the Porte any modification of Article 3, but I have informed Aali Pasha that all communications between the Turkish authorities and the British engineers, who are to superintend the construction of the lines should be made through Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bagdad, a course to which his Highness was quite ready to assent.

Consul-General Kemball to Sir H. Bulwer.

Sir,

Bagdad, November 18, 1863.

I HAD the honour to receive yesterday the Honourable Mr. Erskine's despatch of 20th ultimo, transmitting copy of the Protocol relating to the construction and working of the proposed lines of telegraph from Bagdad to Bussorah and Khanakeen.

By my telegram, dated 7th instant, your Excellency will have learnt, that in anticipation of the orders now received, arrangements had been concluded between his Excellency Namik Pasha and myself for undertaking immediately the works on the Bussorah Line. Accordingly, the supplementary distribution of materials has been effected at different points along the first section to Billeh, and its construction has been commenced by Mr. Inspector of Telegraphs, Joyce Perceval, Indian Service, with whom is associated Yuz-Bashee Omer Feizee Effendi. Mr. Carthew is engaged in carrying the wires across this river and beyond the limits of the town, which particular duty will be entrusted to him to all the stations where masts or wooden poles must of necessity be substituted for iron and it is my intention presently to depute my Telegraph Assistant, Mr. Greener, at Bussorah, to meet the non-commissioned officer, Royal Engineers, who may be expected to arrive there about the 25th instant, and to superintend the construction of the sections north and south of that place. In the meantime, the distribution of stores at the intermediate stations between Medineh and Hilleh will, I hope, be effected; and so soon as the working parties are ready at either end to undertake the intervening sections, where alone any serious difficulties may be apprehended, I purpose myself to proceed to that quarter, accompanied by Samee Effendi, the officer appointed to the charge of the Turkish Department.

With the exception of a small remnant daily expected from Bussorah per steamer, the materials assigned for the use of the Persian line have been deposited at Khanakeen; and those required for the construction of the Bagdad Khanakeen section are already stored at Bagdad.

COPY of CORRESPONDENCE between the British Officials in Peru and the Foreign Office, and of either of them, with the Peruvian Authorities, respecting Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell.

— No. 1. —

(No. 12.)

Mr. Jerningham to the Right Hon. Lord John Russell.

My Lord,

Lima, 28 March 1861.

IN the month of February last, Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell, son-in-law of the late Michael Winder, of Bayswater-terrace, London, presented himself at Her Majesty's Legation, accompanied by the manager of the British firm of Graham Rowe of this city, and informed me that he had come out to Lima as executor of the will of the above Michael Winder, who died domiciled in England, and which will had been made according to English law, and was proved in Doctors' Commons.

He told me that a great deal of Mr. Winder's property, real and personal, existed in Peru, and that what he wished was to attach that which came under the British law, so as to be able to make the distribution of the various portions to the members of the family, as had been allotted to each by the testator.

Part of the personal property existing in Peru, belonging to the late Mr. Michael Winder, he gave me to understand was in the hands of Messieurs Graham Rowe, and he and Mr. Pike, the manager of that house, said they were desirous of placing it under the protection of the British flag (which was done afterwards by my consent); but the rest, far the largest part, these gentlemen informed me, was to be accounted for by Mr. Michael Winder's natural son, who had been left by his father in Lima, jointly with another, I believe, to take care of the business of his parent.

This property Mr. Carvell assured me was in danger; for he had heard that there was an intention on the part of the illegitimate son, Manuel Winder, to destroy the books, and not account for the bonds and bales that were supposed to be in his hands. He said therefore, in order to prevent this, that he wished me to apply to the Peruvian Government to cause the legal authorities to embargo this above-mentioned property, and thus secure it from destruction, and to stop payment of the interest upon the bonds if presented, the numbers of which he should give into the "Consulado" of the State.

As this appeared a matter of moment, and as Mr. Carvell informed me that, if he had any difficulty in the execution of his task as executor, Her Britannic Majesty's Attorney General had told him to come to me, I forthwith conducted Mr. Carvell to the Peruvian Foreign Office, where unfortunately we did not meet with his Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs; but we saw, however, the "official Mayor," to whom we explained the matter, and we asked him to take cognizance of it immediately, for the security of the personal property in peril; to cause it to be embargoed, and that the payment of interest on the bonds alluded to should be stopped.

This gentleman, in the absence of Señor Melgar (who was suffering, having lost his daughter) told us that upon my writing to the Foreign Department a note on the subject, that he would see a judge, and attend to the business. Upon returning home, I immediately wrote a note to Señor Melgar on the matter, requesting the Peruvian Government to act in the way above described.

This note was sent that evening to the Peruvian Foreign Office; and had immediate steps been taken effectually by the Peruvian Executive, or judicial authorities, it is more than probable that what occurred subsequently would not have happened.

However, of what steps were really taken, I have not been officially informed, because as yet I have not received any written answer to my first note; but they could not have been very effective, because Mr. Manuel Winder, the person in question, possibly finding out what was intended, appears to have caused the property alluded to, which he had to account for, to disappear, (whether by placing it in other persons hands is immaterial), for when application was made at his office by Mr. Carvell, there was only found five thousand dollars in the chest, and he himself had absconded.

Captain Carvell then went and endeavoured to get him arrested; but he informed me he had the greatest difficulty thrown in his way by the authorities.

When Señor Melgar was again visible, I went to his Excellency, and related what had taken place, and requested him to stimulate the judicial authorities in getting this Manuel Winder taken up, and at the same time to cause the bonds that were the property of the late Michael Winder to be stopped, when presented for payment of interest.

His Excellency appeared willing to attend to my requests, and said he would issue a circular, or cause one to be sent to the judicial authorities.

Such was my impression when I left Señor Melgar; and I believe some move was made by his Excellency, as instructions were sent to the Peruvian consul at Panama to endeavour to stop Manuel Winder, should he pass through that place.

However, in the meantime Captain Carvell informed me that nothing really appeared to be done, although orders had been given for the arrest of Winder; but one day when he went to the chief of police at Lima, Colonel Baquero, this official informed him that a counter order had been given not to take Mr. Manuel Winder, adding that this probably had been effected by Mr. Manuel Winder's friends.

About this time the widow of the late Michael Winder, who is a Peruvian-born lady, and who returned to Lima from England, three years ago, applied to a judge, Gamboa, to induce the courts to ordain that the personal property of her late husband should be put in deposit at the House of Zaracondegue, of Lima; that means should be taken to declare null and void the will of the testator; that the legitimate son of her late husband, not of age, should be taken from under the guardianship of Captain Carvell, and placed under her care; and also to cause Mr. Carvell to be "arraigado," that is, bound to remain in the city of Lima, unless he should present a person approved of by the court to act as his "apoderado."

This latter application seems to have been agreed to, and Mr. Carvell has been notified to that effect.

Upon hearing this, I immediately went to M. Melgar (for Captain Carvell has shown me the will and the probate), and I mentioned the matter warmly to his Excellency, and told him that Captain Carvell protested against this proceeding, and that I protested also against their authorities placing in a sort of way under arrest a person executor of the will of a British subject; that Mr. Carvell had legal duties to perform with reference to that instrument, and that this was an undue restriction upon the liberty to which he was entitled as executor of Winder's will.

This may all be very legal with respect to executors under Peruvian law; but Captain Carvell repudiates all jurisdiction of the Peruvian Courts with respect to the administration of the personal property which Mr. Winder left in Peru, and such being the case (I trust I may not have done wrong), I protested against his being "arraigado," and asked for the removal of this restriction.

Señor Melgar answered that he must inform himself on the matter, and inquire whether Captain Carvell had not offended against the laws of this country; in fact, when I again pressed him about getting the arrest annulled, he said he would see about it.

More than eight days have elapsed, and Captain Carvell tells me that he is still in the same position, "arraigado," and that he will not name or present a representative, as he will not acknowledge the jurisdiction of the Peruvian Courts. He also assures me that nothing is being really done by the authorities in forwarding the objects for which he came to this country.

He has presented the matter to a judge, in order that it may be examined and seen, so that its validity may be apparent. I believe the judge (Olivares) was deputed by Government for that purpose.

As Mr. Carvell has addressed Her Majesty's Attorney General on the subject of his mission here, I will merely add that I am most desirous to be honoured with your Lordship's instructions as to the course I must take; but having been applied to by Captain Carvell to endeavour to rescue the property of a British subject in Peru according to an English will, I had no other alternative better than to apply directly to the Peruvian Government to forward the purposes of Captain Carvell's mission here.

At first they seemed to be inclined to listen to these requests; but since Mrs. Winder has begun a lawsuit, I find that the Government wish to back out, and have actually referred Captain Carvell (his various complaints being sent into his Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs) to the law courts of this country for redress.

I beg to enclose copies of my notes to Señor Melgar, and of those of Captain Carvell, and his Excellency Señor Melgar to me upon this subject.

Enclosure 1, in No. 1.

Lima, 23 February 1861.

THE undersigned, &c., has the honour to enclose a copy of a note which he has received from Captain H. de Wolfe Carvell, a British subject, who has recently arrived in Lima with the will of the late Mr. Michael Winder, British subject, who died in the last year in London, and has, amongst other property, left a considerable amount in Peru.

As Captain Carvell is one of the principal executors of the will, and responsible to the courts of law in England for its faithful execution, he is placed under the necessity of having recourse to my aid, because he has heard that part of the estate in Peru is in danger.

He says that there is in the possession of Manuel Winder (an illegitimate son of the late Mr. Winder above-mentioned), residing at 168, Calle de Valladolid, the amount of 395,500 dollars in bonds of consolidation and manumission, together with ledger books and papers, all of which belong to the estate of the late Michael Winder, of No. 2, Bayswater-terrace, London, and which amount, as also ledger books, papers, &c., belonging to the estate, are in danger of being made away with or destroyed; and, therefore, the undersigned, at the request of Captain Carvell, as executor, begs to request the Peruvian Government to take such efficacious means as lay at their disposal to secure the above-mentioned amount of property from being made away with, by causing the Peruvian legal authority to embargo it directly without loss of time.

The will of Mr. Winder has been proved in Doctors' Commons, in London, and the law courts of Great Britain will insist upon it being carried out strictly to the letter; therefore, to save any ulterior difficulty, it is indispensable that the Government of Peru should take active measures to prevent the danger to which the undersigned has alluded above.

Don José Fabio Melgar,

Lima, 20 March 1861.

THE undersigned, &c., has the honour to enclose copy of a letter received from Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell, as executor of the will of the late Michael Winder, a British subject, who died at his residence, Bayswater-terrace, London.

Captain Carvell complains that he has received a notification to consider himself under arrest by the judicial order of Judge Gamboa. He inquired the reason of this proceeding, but at the moment of writing his letter he had not obtained, it would appear, any.

It appears, however, that the widow of the late Michael Winder had made an application to one of the judges of the Court of Primera Instancia to take possession of her late husband's estate, &c., and also to declare null and void the will of the testator, her late husband, at the same time asking that Captain Carvell might be confined to this city.

Judge Gamboa signed this order.

Captain Carvell protests against the authority of Judge Gamboa, and denies his competency and jurisdiction to deal in the matter of the will of Michael Winder, which was legally made in England, and proved in the Court of Probate at Westminster, from which Court Captain Carvell has received letters of administration as a lawful executor of this will.

Under these circumstances Captain Carvell has invoked me to demand from the Peruvian Government the restoration of his personal liberty at once, which the undersigned feels sure will not be denied; but if so, then the responsibility will rest upon the Peruvian authorities.

The undersigned, at the request of Captain Carvell, feels it his duty to demand of the Peruvian Government the fullest explanation of the above proceedings complained of in the enclosed letter.

Don José Fabio Melgar,

The undersigned likewise has to inform his Excellency that he has not as yet received any answer to his note of 23d February last, copy of which he intends to forward to Her Britannic Majesty's Government by the next mail.

Enclosure 2, in No. 1.

Lima, 22 February 1861.

Sir,
THERE is in the possession of Manuel Winder, residing at No. 168, "Calle de Valladolid," the amount of three hundred and ninety-five thousand and five hundred dollars ($395,500) in bonds of consolidation and manumission, together with ledger books, papers, &c., all of which belong to the estate of the late Michael Winder, of No. 2, Bayswater-terrace, London, and which amount, as also ledger books, papers, &c., belonging to the estate, are in immediate immediate danger of being made away with or destroyed; and I have the honour to request you will be pleased, in your official capacity, to take prompt measures to secure the above property belonging to the estate of the above-named Michael Winder, a British subject, recently deceased, and of whose last will and testament I am the duly sworn and legal executor.

The Hon. Wm. Stafford Jerminham,
Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires,
Lima.

I have, &c.

(2.)

Sir,

Morin's Hotel, Lima, 26 February 1861.

I HAVE the honour to state, for your information, that as yet no steps seem to have been taken by the Peruvian Government to secure the property belonging to the estate of the late Michael Winder, notwithstanding the promise made to you, and the official letter you sent to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and, as I expected, the consequences are, that the person in whose hands the property was has absconded, leaving only the amount of five thousand eight hundred dollars ($5,800), instead of three hundred and ninety-five thousand five hundred dollars ($395,500), making the large deficiency of $389,700; also a sum in cash of about sixty thousand dollars ($60,000).

The deficiency of the $389,700 being in consolidated bonds of the internal debt of Peru.

I beg further to state, that on Saturday morning, as I knew the danger to be imminent, and saw that nothing seemed to have been done, I called at the Foreign Office, and saw Señor Ezeta, who assured me I need not be under any apprehension whatever as to the safety and security of the property, it being now in the hands of the Government, and that the Peruvian Government had received an official letter from you, as Her Britannic Majesty's representative, on the subject, showed me a copy of the letter, and assured me all was perfectly safe as to the property. Saturday passed, and nothing was done. Sunday evening the man was missing; on Monday (yesterday), it was noised abroad that he had fled; I immediately proceeded to the Foreign Office, and gave the information, the more so on account of the assurance they had given for the safety of the property, &c. Señor Ezeta was reported as sick. An official told me, that steps had been taken to prevent the person who had committed the robbery from leaving the country. Señor Melgar, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, was in his bureau, and the official, after consulting with him for a few minutes, brought me word that the Minister had at length concluded that he would not have anything to do with it.

Thus were the assurances of the Peruvian Government summarily withdrawn, and I was advised to apply for a writ to arrest the man, and although I had a lawyer with me, and a clerk from the Peruvian Foreign Office, who came with me as a friend, as well as two English gentlemen, resident in Peru, I could not obtain a warrant, nor any document for his apprehension.

I was advised to place myself in communication with the Intendant of Police, which I did at once, but was received rudely and ungraciously by him; I informed him of the robbery, and of the necessity of at once securing the man who had committed it. He folded his arms on his chest, shrugged his shoulders, and said he would not do anything; that he felt more inclined for his dinner than anything else, and that the ordinary courts of law were open to me. On my observing that I much regretted that no prompt measures were taken for the apprehension of the man, and that I had always supposed that in all countries, and under such circumstances, the laws would secure the robber at once, and that I knew it to be the case in my own; he in reply said, those were common occurrences, and jauntily observed, that I was in Peru. After much persuasion, he sent a message to Callao, to prevent his embarkation at that port, which was all he would do.

Another phase of the question is, that the widow, advised by her lawyers, wishes to annul the will of the testator, Mr. Winder, and bring his personal property under the laws of Peru, whereby she would be entitled to one-half of the property absolutely, and she has taken steps to that effect; and some of the legal authorities with whom I have been in official contact speak lightly, even contemptuously, of the power of Great Britain touching the property of one of her subjects in Peru, and that the decision of her courts are null and void; and as they spoke to the lawyer of Mrs. Winder of placing an "embargo" on the property, on this also Señor Ezeta, in the name of the Government, said, that as the property was that of a British subject, that any proceedings taken by the lawyers or courts of Peru would be stopped, and pronounced null by the Peruvian Government, as it was a diplomatic and not a judicial matter, he having received an official letter on the subject from the British Minister in Peru.

In conclusion, I have to complain of the utter want of any legal assistance afforded me, also that the promises made in consequence of your energetic interference have not been complied with, and, in compliance with my instructions from Her Majesty's Court of Probate, as well as by advice from Sir Richard Bethell, the Attorney General of Her Majesty's Government, I placed the matter in your hands on Friday last, the 22d instant, and as a British subject I have to claim your energetic interference with the Peruvian Government, that their assurances be made good, and they may not be allowed to trifle with the laws of Great Britain and the decisions of her courts, as to the personal property of their subjects' and their competent authority to dispose of the same; and as they have failed to secure the property according to promise, that they may be made responsible for the same, and that they are (i. e.), the Government of Peru, may be taught, that having come some 6,000 miles by the authority of the Courts of Great Britain to take possession of the property of a British subject, and moreover an Englishman, that I have not come in vain, nor to see the laws and power of my country set at naught.

In conclusion, I beg to offer you my thanks for the promptitude with which you responded to my application, and to submit this letter for your further consideration, that you take such measures as may seem advisable to you and the circumstances may demand.

With the request that, unless immediate explanation and satisfaction be afforded by the Peruvian Government, the matter may be at once referred to England, to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs,

I have, &c.

To the Honourable William Stafford Jerningham,
Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires,
Lima.

(3.)

Sir,

Lima, 14 March 1861.

I HAVE the honour to state, for your information, that as yet the Peruvian Government, and the judicial authorities thereof, seem to have done little (if anything) so far as I am in a position to judge, either to procure the property in possession of Manuel Winder, and belonging to the estate of the late Michael Winder, Esq., of London, or to apprehend and take in custody the said Manuel Winder, who disappeared under circumstances of which you are already cognisant, as detailed by me to you at personal interviews, and more particularly by my letter of the 26th of February ultimo; and although you informed me when I met you at the Foreign Office on or about the 27th ultimo, immediately after your interview with Señor Melgar, "the Minister of Foreign Affairs," that he has given assurances that he would give orders at once to a judge to take immediate steps in the affair (and I have been informed did pass an order to that effect to the judicial authorities, in consequence of which, orders were issued for the apprehension of Manuel Winder, wherever found), yet from that to this nothing seems to me to have been done, nor any interest taken, nor exertions made to apprehend the culprit, or rescue the property, or any portion of it from his grasp, or from his accomplices.

I was informed to-day that the Intendente of Police, Baquero, that he had received instructions not to arrest Winder, and which instructions he had received a day or two before; and on demanding how this could possibly be, informed me that Winder's friends had been able to effect it. I much regret to say that there seems but little inclination on the part of the legal authorities and police to render assistance, or employ the powers vested in them, but rather to obstruct the cause of justice (with, I am pleased to say, a very few honourable exceptions).

Occasionally some papers are sent to me for signature, but all seems endless and hollow form; and I am induced to believe no real intention exists on the part of the authorities here to render the assistance and justice which are promptly and imperatively necessary in this important case.

And I have to urgently request you will be pleased to demand from the Peruvian Government what has been done, or is being done in the matter; and if the original order for the arrest of the said Winder has been revoked, by whom, and on what authority; and that you will bring to the notice of the Peruvian Government the promises made and guarantees given when this matter was first brought officially before them in your letter to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, bearing date 22d February ultimo, a copy of which is before me, and neither the letter or spirit of which has been complied with. Señor Ezeta, of the Foreign Office, informed me that they had set the whole machinery of the law in motion for the apprehension of Winder, and Señor Melgar signed an order directing the Consul for Peru at Panama to use every endeavour to arrest him should he pass that way.

Under these circumstances, how the Intendente of Police can have received an order not to arrest him, I beg leave most respectfully to inquire.

I have, &c.

To the Honourable William Stafford Jerningham,
Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires,
Lima.

(4.)

Sir,

Lima, 15 March 1861.

I HAVE the honour to report for your information, that yesterday (14th inst.) I was notified by a judicial order that I must consider myself under arrest, that I could go about, but not quit the city of Lima. I inquired wherefore and on what grounds my personal liberty had been taken from me, and wherein I had offended, but could not obtain any reason for this proceeding.

I protested against any interference with my personal liberty, as I was a British subject, and had not offended against the laws of this country, so far as I am aware. I wished to go on board the steamer yesterday, to see some friends who were starting for England, but was not permitted to do so.

This decision seems to have emanated from Señor Gamboa, one of the judges of the Court of "Primera Instancia," and at the solicitation of the widow of the late Michael Winder, who in her application asks to take possession of the estate for the benefit of herself and her son, to take the said son from under my guardianship, ignoring me as executor and guardian, and to declare null and void the will of the testator, and asking that I may be confined to this city—her application containing five or six pages of matter, being a well-woven tissue of misconstruction of facts.

The Judge Gamboa, in his judicial capacity, signed an order, with which I was formally served yesterday, and for which I refer to the "Comercio" of this day's date, in which it appears I am "arraigo" until I can find some one to answer for me whom they may choose to accept.

I have produced to you the probate of the will of the late Michael Winder, and letters of administration granted to me by Her Majesty's Court of Probate at Westminster, and which you have been pleased to acknowledge as genuine. And I do hereby, as duly qualified and legally constituted executor therein named and appointed by the said Court, protest against the authority of the Judge Gamboa, and deny his competency and jurisdiction to deal in this matter.

Under those circumstances, Sir, I invoke the power vested in you as Her Britannic Majesty's representative in this capital, to immediately demand from the Peruvian Government that my personal liberty be at once and unconditionally restored (reserving to myself power to demand such satisfaction hereafter I may deem advisable), and that they are incurring a grave and heavy responsibility for every hour that I am deprived of my personal liberty, unwarrantably, unlawfully, and unjustly; and that you will be pleased to demand the fullest explanation from the Peruvian Government as to the violation of my liberty and rights as a British subject.

I have to request you will be pleased, at your earliest convenience, to acknowledge the receipt of this communication.

I have, &c.

(5.)

Sir,

Lima, 16 March 1861.

WITH reference to my letter of yesterday's date, I have the honour to request you will be pleased to make a formal protest to the Peruvian Government against the jurisdiction of the Courts of Peru, relative to the will of the late Michael Winder, Esq., of Bayswater-terrace, London.

I have, &c.

To the Honourable William Stafford Jerningham,
Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires,

(6.)

Sir,

Lima, 21 March 1861.

As executor to the estate of the late Michael Winder, legally constituted, duly sworn and appointed by Her Majesty's Court of Probate of Westminster:

I do hereby protest against the jurisdiction of the Courts of Peru, touching the personal property of the said Michael Winder (deceased), and against any authority in this country which may take upon itself to annul or revoke the will of the testator aforesaid, or any portion of it, relative to his personal property, or that may take from under my guardianship the son of the testator, being duly and lawfully appointed his guardian, and against any authority that has pronounced, or may pronounce, as null and void the decisions of Her Majesty's Courts.

I, at the same time, appeal to the authorities here for the needful assistance to enable me to discharge my duties as executor, and which I have vainly endeavoured to obtain since my arrival in this city.

I have to request you will be pleased to submit this protest to the Peruvian Government at your earliest convenience.

I have, &c.

Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires,

(7.)

Sir,

Lima, 21 March 1861.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of yesterday's date, and, with reference to that portion of it alluding to my letter of the 16th instant, beg herewith to enclose my protest against the proceedings of the Peruvian authorities in this city, relative to the will of the late Michael Winder, and to formally complain of the want of any assistance afforded by the Government or legal authorities in carrying out my duty as executor.

I have, &c.
(signed) Henry de Wolfe Carvell.

To the Honourable William Stafford Jerningham,
Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires,
Lima.

(8.)

Sir,

Lima, 23 March 1861.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that, with reference to my letter of the 15th instant, and which did not reach you until the 16th, I am still under arrest, and not allowed to leave Lima.

You did me the honour to call at my hotel the same afternoon (i. e.), the 16th, and told you had just had an interview with the Minister of Foreign Affairs (Señor Melgar), from whom you had demanded my immediate release; that you were indignant, and told him that the Peruvian Government would be held responsible for any interference with my personal liberty, the more so when I was engaged in carrying out the orders of Her Majesty's courts of law, and that Señor Melgar promised you he would see to it at once.

Sir, I beg to say that nothing has been done, and that I am yet confined to this city, and that the order of arrest has not been revoked, notwithstanding your demand that it should be at once, and unconditionally, restored (i. e.), my personal liberty.

I went to Señor Gamboa to inquire if he had received any instructions about my release, and told him you had seen Señor Melgar about it; he replied that he had received no orders, nor would he, as his power was independent of the Foreign Office and of Señor Melgar and Mr. Jerningham.

I have letters of introduction and important business to transact in Chili, where I wish to go for a few weeks, but am not permitted to leave here.

Sir, I again appeal for the protection of the flag of my country; I again protest against this great injustice, this cruel wrong—against the conspiracy which has robbed the estate and the minors thereunto belonging of half their property, and against the attempts to obtain what I fortunately secured and placed under the protection of the British flag; and against the apathy and spirit of opposition shown me by the authorities of this country in impeding me in every possible way in my duty, as executor to the estate of my late father-in-law.

I hereby claim from the Peruvian Government the sum of 100 l. sterling per day from the 14th instant inclusive, and for every day until I shall be set free and discharged from this unjustifiable arrest, this violation of my rights as an Englishman. What have I done? Simply placed in safety what they endeavoured to secure in order that they might rob me of it, as they have already done of more than $400,000 belonging to the estate; hence the animus—hence the arrest, that I placed $240,000 (two hundred and forty thousand dollars) where they were unable to reach it.

Although not at present in the effective list of Her Majesty's army, I hold three commissions, granted me under the sign manual of Her most gracious Majesty the Queen, and am unaccustomed to this indignity, against which I loudly protest.

I have to request you will furnish the Peruvian Government with a copy of this letter, with such remarks (if any) as you may deem fit.

I have, &c.
(signed) Henry de Wolfe Carvell.

To the Honourable William Stafford Jerningham,
Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires,
Lima.

(9.)

Sir,

Lima, 23 March 1861.

On or about the 25th ultimo you were pleased to take under the protection of the British flag a box containing personal property belonging to the estate of the late Michael Winder Esq., of London (who died on the 20th December last), handed to you by Mr. Pike, of the firm of Graham Rowe & Company, of this city, which property had been deposited with the firm by the late Mr. Winder, in the year 1856, previous to his departure for England, and for which box you gave Mr. Pike a receipt, under seal of the Legation.

The box was placed there with my concurrence, accompanied by a memorandum by Mr. Pike, to be delivered to the executor on producing the original receipt given by the firm of Graham Rowe & Company for the deposit. Later I produced to you the probate of the will and letters of administration, wherein I was duly and legally constituted executor by Her Majesty's Court of Probate at Westminster, which you were pleased to acknowledge and recognise as genuine documents. On the 10th instant you gave me, from the aforesaid box, the sum of ($42,375) forty-two thousand three hundred and seventy-five dollars, in Manumission Bonds; and on my application yesterday for the remainder of the property, you informed me that you had received an "escrito" from a Señor Gamboa, transmitted through the Peruvian Minister of Foreign Affairs, who had merely forwarded it, but had not made any remarks thereon (without doubt because he knew it to be an informal and invalid document). You observed you did not mind the document, and were ready to give up the box if Mr. Pike would give you the receipt you had given him, which you deemed necessary, but which he declined to do; consequently, I could not obtain the property.

Sir, with the greatest respect for your opinion, I beg leave most respectfully to differ from you. The receipt you gave to Mr. Pike is his acquittance, and freed him from further responsibility, and which I think he is entitled to keep, and my receipt to you for the box is sufficient for its delivery to me. The Legation is under the law of England, and considered by international law as a portion of the country represented, being as it were transported and situated in a foreign country, and entirely free from its jurisdiction. Therefore, I consider any orders emanating from Señor Gamboa as of no authority whatever, touching the British Legation in this city; it has not even the authority of a court; but the functions of Señor Gamboa's have, so far, been magisterial, and not judicial, as in his private office he has heard of the matter, and from it issued his decrees; and further, if my authority were sufficient to receive $42,375 on the 10th instant, why is it not so on the 22d instant?

Sir, I much regret the little difference in opinion which has arisen between us on this one particular point, and have with respect to your opinion (retaining, however, my own); nor do I for an instant presume to offer suggestions as to your course of duty. I beg sincerely to thank you for the trouble you now take, and much regret that circumstances have arisen whereby I am compelled to have recourse to your aid and assistance; and I beg to acknowledge the urbanity, kindness, and polite attention I have met at your hands.

I have, &c.

Sir,

Lima, 25 March 1861.

You were pleased to inform me on or about the 27th ultimo, that Señor Melgar had assured you that the Peruvian Government would stop the interests on the bonds stolen, and take possession of them when presented for payment at the Consulado.

Señor Ezeta, on the 24th ultimo, in the name of the Peruvian Government, gave me the same assurance, and told me to feel quite easy, as the matter was in the hands of the Peruvian Government, and that I need be under no apprehension whatever, as they had already taken measures for the security of the property, having received an official letter from you on the subject.

Sir, my experience of the last few weeks induces me to inquire if this has been done, the more so as the time approaches for the payment of the interests on the Consolidated Bonds (viz. 1st of April proximo), and to request you will be pleased to obtain an official notification from the Peruvian Government that it has been done according to promise.

I have, &c.

Sir,

Lima, 26 March 1861.

In looking over the copy of my letter of the 23d instant, wherein I allude to an interview I had with Señor Gamboa, I find I have stated the conversation that took place in a manner which would infer a disrespect on the part of Señor Gamboa for Señor Melgar and yourself, which I beg to say distinctly was not meant by Señor Gamboa, only that his functions were judicial, and he could not recognize any diplomatic interference therein on the part of Señor Melgar and Mr. Jerningham.

The Honourable William Stafford Jerningham,

(12.)

Sir,

Lima, 28 March 1861.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, enclosing a copy of his Excellency Señor Melgar's letter to you, bearing date 23d instant.

I beg most respectfully to observe, his Excellency takes up his position on false premises, and his assumptions and conclusions are necessarily unsound, and not merely unsound, but opposed to facts.

He seems anxious to avoid the main point, and vainly endeavours to place the question on a new and different basis from where it is and has been since the 22d February last, and where I must insist on keeping it, notwithstanding the diplomatic struggles of the Peruvian Government, and great desire of his Excellency to get rid of the responsibility they accepted, and the promises and guarantees given by them on the 22d ultimo, and three subsequent days. His Excellency Señor Melgar is pleased to say "that it belongs to the judicial authorities to ventilate the question, and that it is being ventilated by Doctor Gamboa, as may be deduced from my own assertions;" now it is notorious, as the correspondence will show, that I have protested against the competency and jurisdiction of Doctor Gamboa to interfere in any way whatever with the validity of the will of the late Michael Winder, and have only asked from the executive and judicial authorities here assistance to carry out the requirements of a document I hold to be valid, and emanating from Her most Gracious Majesty's Court of Probate, and as such raised to the position of a public and national document, the original of which is deposited in the national archives, and deny that there exists in Peru an authority competent to annul, revoke, or declare void the said document or any portion of it.

Therefore, I again repeat for the information of his Excellency Señor Melgar, that any attempts to interfere in any way with the said document can only be diplomatic, and most certainly not judicial on the part of the authorities of this country. You will, no doubt, observe his Excellency seems to take it for granted admit all he assumes, and then goes on to draw conclusions, and summarily to dispose of the matter; he asserts I can receive all the assistance I require from the legal tribunals of the country, and that they should settle contentious affairs.

I beg to say I have no contentious affairs to settle, as my instructions and duties are definite, as is the document I have brought to this country, and my attitude is purely defensive.

I only required them to recognize the document I have as genuine, and myself as lawful executor, and for which I applied in the usual manner five weeks ago, but to this moment have been unable to obtain such recognition nor any assistance whatever; on the contrary, every obstruction and legal technicality that could impede me in my duty as executor to the estate of my late father-in-law have invariably been placed in my path since my arrival in this country; and how his Excellency can, under such circumstances, assert that the tribunals will afford me the needful assistance, I cannot understand; indeed, the burden of my complaint has been the utter want of assistance afforded me by the Executive, legal and judicial authorities since my arrival here.

I regret to say his Excellency seems quite unacquainted with the true position of this important matter, as on that ground alone can I account for his letter being so much at variance with fact. Indeed the letter is a complete evasion of the subject as it stands, and is in fact no answer to those received by him, and to which he alludes.

His Excellency Señor Melgar is careful not even to allude to the promises and guarantees given by the Peruvian Government for the safety and security of the property in question; and now that it has been lost through their culpable neglect, and solemn assurances that they were responsible for its safety, and would take immediate measures for its security, and having neglected to do so, now wish to repudiate and evade their responsibility; even through that neglect, ruin would be the consequence to private individuals, if they were permitted thus to escape from the consequences of the non-performance of their solemn guarantees and assurances.

You were pleased to inform me that Señor Melgar sought to evade the guarantees given by Señor Ezeta, "the official mayor," and his representative at the Foreign Office.

Señor Melgar having, on the occasion alluded to, been absent for several consecutive days, days, Señor Ezeta being the next in rank and order in the Foreign Office, and who always represents the minister in his absence.

This would, no doubt, be a convenient course for the Peruvian Government, but, fortunately, for truth and the ends of justice cannot be admitted nor entertained for a moment, that any Government can clothe with the official garment of its authority an individual whose acts, pledges, and solemn guarantees on matters of grave importance it can subsequently repudiate.

Why did the Executive give orders for the apprehension of the man Winder throughout the whole Republic? Why did Señor Melgar give orders to the Peruvian Consul at Panama to apprehend him; and sign with his own hand order to the Consul to that effect? Why, doubtless, he saw they were responsible, and had utterly neglected to perform the duties they had accepted and guarantees given; and on the faith of which, as coming from the Executive of a civilized country, I reposed, and to whom I still look for and demand that the guarantees and promises given be made good, and they be held to the assurances given to Her Majesty's representative in this city.

When I was assured, in his presence, to be under no apprehension, as it was now in the hands of the Peruvian Government, who were responsible for the safety of the property. And I have to request you will urge and insist that the guarantees given to you may be fulfilled, acquainted as you are with the accuracy of the facts detailed in this and my other communications; and that you may be pleased to forward my letters, numbered from 1 to 12, at the same time you make your report to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and bring to his special notice that I am a prisoner, and have been since the 14th instant; and I feel a lively assurance my Government never will suffer to go unpunished so flagrant an outrage on one of Her subjects, and such a violation of the law and usages of civilized nations; and to that Government I appeal, and in the spirit of the old Roman say, "Civis Romanus sum."

I have, &c.

Enclosure 3, in No. 1.

(Translation.)

Lima, 23 March 1861.

THE undersigned Minister for Foreign Affairs of Peru has had the honour to receive the two appreciable notes, dated 20th instant, in which the Hon. Chargé d'Affaires and Consul General of Her Britannic Majesty is pleased to transmit to him the two expositions which Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell had addressed to him on the subject of the succession of the British subject, Mr. Michael Winder, who died in England. As the said notes of the Hon. Mr. Jerningham are of one and the same nature, and belong to the same matter, the undersigned has the honour to reply to them both in this single communication.

The undersigned does not doubt at all that the Hon. Mr. Jerningham will be pleased to easily recognize that all the complaints contained in the representations of Captain Carvell are relative to matters which should be ventilated exclusively before the judicial power; and not only is it there they should be ventilated, but they are really being ventilated, as is deduced from assertions of Carvell himself, and of the same nature of the complaints, for some or the most of them are of the proceedings of the Judge of First Instance, Doctor Gamboa. The same may be perceived by the contents of the note of the undersigned, dated 20th instant, in which he had the honour to remit to the Hon. Mr. Jerningham a decree of the said judge in the matter above mentioned.

If, therefore, the said matter is purely judicial; and if it is true, as the Hon. Chargé d'Affaires will be pleased to acknowledge, that in the tribunals of justice Captain Carvell can find the remedy for all the proceedings which he believes prejudice him—for all the resources are open to him which the laws grant in contentious affairs—it is clear that he is not under the necessity of applying to the Hon. Mr. Jerningham to make a diplomatic reclamation. His Honor will know when the time has come for representing an account of delay or refusal of justice.

By the above statement the Hon. Mr. Jerningham will also admit that the undersigned must decline the "Protest" which is contained in one of Captain Carvell's reclamations, and which it appears his Honor reproduces:

Notwithstanding all, the undersigned, in honour of the worthy notes of Mr. Jerningham, and desirous that in the present matter, as in all those in which foreigners, and especially British subjects, may be interested, justice be administered without giving grounds for founded complaints, has asked for information from the functionaries of the judicial power whom it may concern, in order to see whether it is necessary to address to them the stimulants which the constitution of the State permits.

The undersigned has the honour to renew, &c.

(No. 13.)

Mr. Jerningham to the Right Hon. Lord John Russell.

My Lord,

Lima, 28 March 1861.

WITH reference to my Despatch, No 12, of this date, in which I alluded to part of the personal property of Mr. Michael Winder having been placed under the British flag, I beg to have the honour to state, that Mr. Pike, manager of Graham Rowe's firm in Lima, with the consent of Mr. Carvell, executor of the will of the late Mr. Winder, came to my house about a month ago, when Mr. Pike placed in my hands a box containing bonds and bales, personal property left by the testator. Some time afterwards, Mr. Carvell informing me that he had made arrangements for transferring some of this property to England, I allowed him, having seen the will of Mr. Winder and the probate which Mr. Carvell had shown me, to open the box, when he, in presence of the partners of Mr. Gibbs' firm and another, took out the documents he wanted; for being executor of the above will, I allowed him to do this. The box was then sealed up again. Mr. Pike, however, was not present on this occasion. Afterwards, Captain Carvell informed me that he had found an opportunity of getting the remainder of the property in the box sent to England, having made arrangements with Señor Candama, the great capitalist here, for that purpose. Although I felt inclined to allow Mr. Carvell to do this, I consulted with Mr. Pike, manager of Graham Rowe's firm, to whom I had given a receipt previously, some time before, in presence of Captain Carvell, for holding this box of property which they had placed under the British flag.

Mr. Pike told me that a notification had been served him by Peruvian Courts respecting the property which he had made over to the British Legation; that he thought Captain Carvell ought not to take away any more property from the box in my possession; and advised me to write to your Lordship to know what ought to be done in the matter.

Captain Carvell argued that he had a right to touch this property in the box, because it was now under the flag, it was in England, and that as legal executor of the will of Mr. Michael Winder, the documents in the box belonging to his personal estate, as far as I could make out, he could not be opposed.

I found Mr. Pike unwilling to give me up my receipt, unless I authorised him to do so; this I refused, stating that the box had been placed by Mr. Carvell and himself in my hands for safety; that I had not anything to do either with the administration of the will, or anything else respecting it. However, I told them that, if they did not agree on the subject of the removal of the box, and give me back my receipt for holding it, I could not positively give it up.

I beg now to have the honour to request your Lordship's orders for guidance as to what I am to do. I have placed the box above mentioned in the house of Gibbs, under seal of Her Britannic Majesty's Legation, for safety in their strong box.

(No. 17.)

Mr. Jerningham to the Right Honourable Lord John Russell.

My Lord,

Lima, 29 April 1861.

IN my Despatch, No. 13, of 28 March, I informed your Lordship that Mr. Pike, manager of Graham Rowe's firm in Lima, had, with the consent of Captain Carvell, executor to the will of the late Michael Winder, come to my house, when Mr. Pike placed in my hands a box containing bonds and vales belonging to the estate of the late Michael Winder above mentioned, to remain under under the protection of the British flag. At the end of that Despatch, I told your Lordship that when Captain Carvell wanted to take the box away, and that Mr. Pike refused to give me back my receipt for holding the deposit, unless authorised by me to do so, I did not accede to Captain Carvell's request. I beg now to say that Mr. Pike having given me back my original receipt, Captain Carvell, as executor to Winder's will, has tendered me his receipt for the property deposited, and has now taken it away from under the British flag, in the presence of Mr. Pike, as the enclosed copy of receipt will show.

Although I applied to your Lordship for instructions on the matter, my receipt for holding the deposit being returned to me by Mr. Pike, and one being given by Captain Carvell, who demanded the property, I felt that I had not any right to hold it any longer, and therefore gave it up to him, Mr. Pike being present when the receipt was signed. This receipt is for the whole of the property which had been placed by Mr. Pike, with Captain Carvell's consent, under the British flag.

I have, &c.

Lord John Russell, &c. &c.

Enclosure in No. 3.

RECEIVED from Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in this city, the following documents and monies belonging to the estate of the late Michael Winder, which were deposited in this Legation by Messrs. Graham Rowe & Co., viz.:

Vales de Consolidacion, amounting in all to $175,300 (one hundred and seventy-five thousand three hundred dollars); and in current coin, the sum of $21,920 (twenty-one thousand nine hundred and twenty dollars), all which I am entitled to claim in virtue of the last will and testament of the late said Michael Winder.

— No. 4. —

(No. 18.)

Mr. Jerningham to the Right Hon. Lord John Russell.

My Lord,

Lima, 29 April 1861.

WITH reference to my Despatch, No. 12, of 28th March, in which I related that Captain de Wolfe Carvell, British subject, had come out to Lima with the will of the late Michael Winder, British subject, who died domiciled in London, with the object, as executor to the same, to collect what property belonging to the estate of the testator happened to be in Peru, in order that the division might be made amongst those entitled to inherit it; and in which Despatch I informed your Lordship that, as some of this property appeared to be in danger of being made away with, Captain Carvell had applied to me for my interference, and that I accordingly had had recourse to the intervention of the Peruvian Government, as seen by the note addressed to Señor Melgar, enclosed in above Despatch: I beg now to state that, since then, several notes have been exchanged between the Peruvian Government and myself on this subject, and that I have also forwarded copies of Captain Carvell's notes to me to the Peruvian Executive.

Before drawing your Lordship's attention to the perusal of the enclosed correspondence, I must beg leave to observe that when application was made by me to the Peruvian Government for their immediate interference, I was left with the impression that they would do what they could in the matter. I first of all asked them, in the name of Captain Carvell, to cause the legal authorities to embargo the late Mr. Winder's property (personal), which was said to be in the hands of one of his illegitimate sons; and afterwards, when it was ascertained that this property was not to be met with, and that this illegitimate son had absconded, absconded, I also requested his Excellency, in the name of Captain Carvell, executor to Winder's will, to cause Manuel Winder to be arrested.

These steps on my part, under ordinary circumstances, might perhaps appear premature, as a direct one to the judicial authorities by Mr. Carvell would have been alone requisite, and the usual routine; but as Captain Carvell informed me that Her Britannic Majesty's Attorney General had told him that if he had any difficulty to come to me, and that in some cases the usual and most ordinary way of proceeding or form could be passed over, I was induced, therefore, to listen to his application; and as a large amount of property was at stake, and I imagined that the shortest way to save it was to address myself directly to the Government, I accordingly did so, and asked them to take those means to save it which lay at their disposal.

Subsequently, when Captain Carvell requested me to apply to the Government to stop the interest on the Consolidation, &c. Bonds of the Winder estate, which had disappeared, should they be presented at the "Consulado" for payment, and to seize them, I also made this request to Señor Melgar verbally, and by reminding him of it in writing.

To this request his Excellency appeared to offer no objection, whatever he may say now in his correspondence, that it was not an assurance that he gave me; and that he did receive this indication in a way that induced me to believe he would put it in execution is proved by his last note, which I have now before me (but which is very long, and cannot be copied and translated in time for this mail), stating that his Excellency directed an "aviso" to the "Director del Credito Publico" on the 27th February, which, however, he found on the 2d of April had not been received by that functionary (through some mistake), when he wrote a duplicate, which was received just at the moment they were going to proceed with the payment of the interests on the bonds.

These points I must beg your Lordship to have the kindness to note, because a few days before the three-monthly interest was due upon the bonds an amortization took place at the "Consulado," where the "Director del Credito Publico" functions, when 60,000 dollars of Winder's property, in bonds, were amortized. Had the note of Señor Melgar, written in February, been delivered when it should, this amortization would not, in all probability, have occurred, at least it ought not.

But to return to the applications which I made to the Peruvian Government, as above mentioned. It was not until a month after the first was made that I received a note, dated 23d of March, referring Mr. Carvell to the judicial authorities; as Señor Melgar asserted that Winder's will having been opposed by the widow, who had initiated legal proceedings, it was evident a litigious business, and that the Government could not interfere in "los negocios contenciosos."

Since that period, Señor Melgar has endeavoured to stir as little in the matter as he conveniently could, and an exchange of notes between his Excellency and myself, who has also sent in to the Peruvian Government Captain Carvell's complaints, have been the consequence.

To what I have endeavoured to keep his Excellency are, my requests made in February and at the commencement of March, as your Lordship will perceive by my note to his Excellency on the 11th of April. If these did not (did not) come within the powers of the Executive, why did not his Excellency refuse to have anything to do in the matter at once? An answer in that sense would have left me no option but to refer Captain Carvell to the judicial authorities alone.

Captain Carvell, some time ago, presented the will to a judge in Lima, that the requisite formalities might be gone through; but, as yet, I believe the recognition of its validity has not been officially or publicly acknowledged.

I beg now to enclose to your Lordship copies of the various correspondence to which I have alluded above in this Despatch, and will conclude by stating that, in my proceedings in this business, my chief aim and desire have been to forward, when applied to by Captain Carvell as an executor, the interests of a British will proved in Doctors' Commons, that of the late Mr. Michael Winder.

I have, &c.

The Lord John Russell,
&c. &c.

Enclosure in No. 4.

Lima, *25 March 1861.

THE undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul General, begs to have the honour to remind his Excellency Don José Fabio Melgar, &c., that in an interview which he had of his Excellency on the 27th ultimo, he begged him to cause the interest on the stolen bonds belonging to the late Michael Winder, who died in England, to be stopped and taken possession of when presented for payment at the Consulado, when his Excellency gave assurances that he would see about the matter.

Señor Ezeta, on the 24th ultimo, in the name of the Peruvian Government, gave Captain Carvell the same assurance, and told him to feel quite easy, as the matter was in the hands of the Peruvian Government, and that he need not be under any apprehension whatever, as they had already taken measures for the security of the property, an official letter having been received from the undersigned on the subject. The undersigned is now informed by Captain Carvell, who has made inquiries at the Consulado, that no orders have been received to the effect of refusing the interest on, or for taking possession of the above bonds; and as the interest is due to-morrow, the undersigned begs to remind the Peruvian Government of the promise made with reference to their bonds; and in the name of Captain Carvell, executor of Mr. Winder's will, to request that his Excellency should immediately, without delay, take the necessary measures for stopping at once the interest upon these securities, and take possession of them.

His Excellency Señor Melgar,
&c. &c. &c.

The Undersigned,
(signed) W. S. Jerningham.

Lima, 11 April 1861.

THE undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, &c., begs to acknowledge the receipt of the worthy note which his Excellency Don José Fabio Melgar, &c., did him the honour to address him on the 6th April, which reached him at Chirillos, on the morning of the 8th instant.

In the above note his Excellency informs the undersigned that his Excellency had received a written communication from the undersigned on 2d of April, bearing date of the 25th March.

This note the undersigned imagines must be the one which Captain Carvell undertook to deliver to his Excellency from the undersigned, on the evening of the 2d April; and if it was misdated 25th March, this was a fault on the part of the undersigned, from which a person in the hurry of business is not always exempt. This note therefore ought to have been dated the 2d April, the day on which it was written and delivered: and the undersigned begs his Excellency to have the kindness to cause the date 2d April now to be substituted for the wrong one, 25th March.

In the communication of his Excellency of the 6th of April, his Excellency says that the undersigned, in his note, 25th March (2d April) had reminded his Excellency of a conference in which he had requested him to give orders for the retention of the interests on the bonds of the late Michael Winder, and that his Excellency had given the assurance that he would take the matter into consideration; also that the undersigned had said that Señor Ezeta (official mayor), of the Foreign Department, gave, in the name of the Peruvian Government, to Captain Carvell, a similar assurance, telling him not to have the least anxiety, as the matter was in the hands of the Government, adding that measures had been taken for the security of the property of the late Michael Winder; and that, in fine, in the same note Mr. Jerningham had affirmed that Captain Carvell had informed him that no order had been received to retain the interest on the above-mentioned bonds, Mr. Jerningham adding, that as the interest was due on the morrow (meaning the 3d of April) he must remind the Peruvian Government of their promise relative to the bonds, and, in the name of Captain Carvell, requested his Excellency to take, without delay, the necessary measures for the retention of interest (and also to seize the vales) by which, undoubtedly, Mr. Jerningham had intended to mean that the above bonds should be "embargoed." In the second paragraph of his Excellency's note, his Excellency desires to fix the attention of the undersigned on two facts, which he says might lead to some misunderstanding in the solution of the matter in question.

1st. That Mr. Jerningham's note, dated 25th March, speaks of the interest of the bonds being due on the morrow; whereas, the three months' interest was only due on the 1st April.

2d. That the note dated by Mr. Jerningham 25th March, was brought to his Excellency by Captain Carvell and Colonel the O'Gorman Mahon, on the 2d April.

His Excellency then goes on to say that it is necessary to remember that the want of conformity which exists between the epoch for the payment of the interests on the bonds referred referred to in the note of the British Chargé d'Affaires, and the inexactness with which that note was delivered to his Excellency, must obviate any imputation that might be made against his Excellency for not having fulfilled a promise, if perchance he should have contracted one, or was able to do so, respecting the request made by Mr. Jerningham relative to the retention in question.

As the undersigned, at the commencement of the present note, has endeavoured to set his Excellency right about the date of the note of the 25th March (which must now be known as that of the 2d of April), it is evident that the matter stands in a different position from that in which his Excellency's arguments (founded upon a misdate) have sought to place it. Besides, as the note of the undersigned alluded to the interests which were due at or to be paid on Mr. Winder's bonds, the morrow (3d April, the 1st of the month occurring in the Easter holidays), the undersigned is surprised that the misdate should not have been at once perceived by his Excellency. But granting even that the note of the undersigned was written on the 25th March, and delivered on the 2d April, was it not, however, as far back as the 23d February. The undersigned wrote to his Excellency on the same subject, and made "in extenso?" the very same request, although nothing was actually said of stopping the interest on the bonds. To that note the undersigned has now the honour most particularly to refer his Excellency, as it was drawn up and sent the same day that the undersigned, Captain Carvell, and another gentleman, had an audience at the Foreign Office with Señor Ezeta, who, in the absence and illness of his Excellency, received the undersigned and these gentlemen, and heard what they had to communicate.

This was before any legal proceeding whatever had been taken in Lima by any parties interested in Mr. Winder's will, and, therefore, no lawsuit whatever had been initiated, or was pending.

It was agreed with M. Ezeta that the undersigned should draw up a note to the Peruvian Government, expressing what the undersigned wished to be done. The note of the 23d February was then forthwith written, and sent by undersigned to his Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs, that very evening. This is the transcript of the note:—"The undersigned, &c. &c., has the honour to enclose to his Excellency copy of a note which he has received from Captain de Wolfe Carvell, a British subject, who has recently arrived in Lima with the will of the late Mr. Michael Winder, a British subject, who died in the last year in London, and has, amongst other property, left a considerable amount in Peru.

"As Captain Carvell is one of the principal executors of the will, and responsible to the courts of law in England for its faithful execution, he is placed under the necessity of having recourse to the aid of the undersigned, because he has heard that part of the estate in Peru is in danger; he says that there is in the possession of Manuel Winder, an illegitimate son of the late Mr. Winder above-mentioned, residing at 168, Calle de Valledolid, the amount of 395,500 dollars in bonds of consolidation and manumission, together with ledger books and papers, all of which belong to the estate of the late Michael Winder, of No. 2, Bayswater, London, and which amount, as also ledger books, papers, &c., belonging to the estate, are in danger of being made away with and destroyed; and, therefore, the undersigned, at the request of Captain Carvell, as executor, begs to request the Peruvian Government to take such efficacious means as lay at their disposal to secure the above-mentioned amount of property from being made away with, by causing the Peruvian legal authority to embargo it directly without any loss of time.

"The will of Mr. Winder has been proved in Doctors' Commons, in London, and the law courts of Great Britain will insist upon it being carried out strictly to the letter; therefore, to save any ulterior difficulty, it is indispensable that the Government of Peru should take active measures to prevent the danger to which the undersigned has alluded above."

This is the note of the undersigned, which was presented on the 23d February; and he then trusted that, from the earnest manner in which he had urged his request on an important subject, that it would be immediately attended to by the Peruvian Government.

Why did they not, if they had no intention, or were unable to listen to the request of the undersigned, immediately let him know, by writing a note to that effect?

But such was not the case, and the undersigned and Captain Carvell were left under the impression that the request would be listened to and acted upon of course in the way consistent with the powers of the Peruvian Government.

When his Excellency had sufficiently recovered from a sorrowful event to resume his official functions, the undersigned called upon him (about the 5th, 6th, or 7th of March), and spoke to him of the whole affair, and mentioned that a note had been written to him on the 23d February; that since that period Mr. Manuel Winder had possibly got information of what was being contemplated, and that when application was made at his house by the executor and others, only 5,000 dollars were found in the chest, and he himself (Manuel Winder) had absconded. The undersigned pressed upon his Excellency the necessity of Manuel Winder being arrested, and his Excellency immediately said he would write a circular to the authorities (and the undersigned thinks he said judicial), to cause Manuel Winder to be stopped.

Afterwards the undersigned brought to his Excellency's attention the necessity of causing the interests on the late Mr. Michael Winder's bonds to be refused at the "Consulado," and to seize these bonds or notes (he believes he added).

His Excellency on this occasion, instead of refusing the aid of Government, which he ought to have done if he intended to do nothing, received these indications and the requests about the bonds or notes with that politeness for which he is always remarkable, and said he would would see to the matter, or something to that effect, which left the impression on the mind of the undersigned that his Excellency would constitutionally do what he could to prevent the destruction of the personal property of the late Michael Winder, by stimulating the judges to do their duty by obtaining the arrest of Manuel Winder, and by causing opportune advice to be given respecting the non-payment of interest, &c., so that when the undersigned left his Excellency, he related to Captain Carvell his impression as to what steps his Excellency would be induced to take, when the former seemed satisfied.

At a later interview, when the undersigned came to protest against Captain Carvell being "arraigado," and during which his Excellency asserts that the undersigned was in a state of excitement, to which all persons are liable (even those in the highest places), but for which the undersigned hopes he may be pardoned if he exceeded the bounds of decorum. Amongst other things, at the end of the conversation, his Excellency's attention was directed to stopping the interest on the stolen bonds, &c.; no refusal was then given on the part of his Excellency to this request; on the contrary, his Excellency said that he would attend to the matter, or something to that effect. But it is not necessary to argue upon this or that word; no two persons hardly ever remember the precise terms of a conversation; however, the principal thing to be sought for is whether his Excellency intended to further the request of the undersigned, as far as lay within his means, or reject it entirely, as not being such as could be admitted by the Peruvian Government. The undersigned again assures his Excellency that on this, as on a previous occasion, he received no refusal of his Excellency to act; on the contrary, he was led to infer that his Excellency would do what he could in the matter; such was naturally the conclusion of the undersigned.

The undersigned is now borne out in this opinion, for he has heard privately that M. Suero, who presides at the payment of the interests on the bonds, received a letter, very late indeed, so late indeed, that a great evil was unfortunately the result to which the undersigned will hereafter allude.

In fact, a letter was received by the director of "credito publico," purporting to come from the Peruvian Government, dated February, which only reached Señor Suero a few days before the quarter's interest on the bonds was to be paid.

This possibly must be the "driso" to which his Excellency, in his note of the 6th April to undersigned, alludes as having been passed to the same director by his Excellency "para que estuviese advertido de los reclamos que habia acerca de los bonos del finado Winder, para por si fuese de su incumbencia tomar algunos precauciones."

This letter proves that his Excellency always intended to act, as far as lay in his power, upon the request of the undersigned, to stop the interest on the stolen bonds of Michael Winder, and that he did act upon it, though the letter arrived so late that a great mischief was previously achieved.

The evil to which the undersigned has alluded in the foregoing paragraph appears, in a great measure, if not entirely, to have been the result of the want of the timely and expected action of the Peruvian Government in not at once, after the receipt of the first note of the undersigned in February, causing, by the legal means constitutionally at their disposal, an embargo being put upon the property in danger, and afterwards stopping the interest on the stolen bonds, and taking possession of them when presented for payment at the "Consulado," requested of in more than one interview.

It has now come to the knowledge of the undersigned that on some day in March last (he believes), 60,000 dollars of bonds belonging to the estate of the late Michael Winder, against which an advertisement had been previously put in the "Commercio" newspaper for seven days, giving their numbers and amounts, and warning the public respecting them, have been presented, and were actually paid at the Consulado amortizado.

This was done by the director, an officer of Government, in the face of the advertisement, a thing contrary to the laws of the country; but had the director received his Excellency's "aviso," as he should have done, before the day when the 60,000 dollars were presented for "amortization," it is more than probable that the present loss and calamity to the estate of the late Michael Winder would not have occurred.

Such is the history of the relations, communications, and conversations which have taken place between his Excellency and the undersigned, respecting the bonds, &c. of the late Mr. Winder; from which it is evident that the undersigned having requested the Peruvian Government to use their best endeavours to prevent the destruction of property belonging to the estate of the late Michael Winder, a British subject, the Peruvian Government have, for a whole month (from 23d of February to 23d of March, when a note was received from his Excellency, referring Mr. Carvell to the law tribunals of this country), not refused to do; and that even at the eleventh hour a note, written in February, was received at the end of March, or beginning of April, by the director of "credito publico," from his Excellency's department, above referred to.

The interest on the stolen bonds have, happily, been stopped, and the undersigned believes, in consequence of his Excellency's "aviso," though late received, for in the conversation which his Excellency had with Captain Carvell and Colonel O'Gorman on the 2d April last, when they delivered the note of the undersigned, written on that day, his Excellency told these gentlemen that he had given instructions to stop the interest on the bonds in question.

However, the question now arises, who are responsible for the "amortization" of the 60,000 dollars, Winder bonds, which should not have been amortized? the undersigned regrets to say that, as this occurrence took place in consequence of the Peruvian Government neglecting to take immediate precautions, when invited to do so, against Mr. Michael Winder's property being made away with, they must hold themselves responsible for this act, the more so, as there was a public advertisement in the public newspaper for seven days, warning the public respecting the denounced bonds.

The undersigned, confiding in the justice and integrity of the Peruvian Government, must now request, in the name of the executor of the will of the late Michael Winder, British subject, that the Peruvian Government do now cause these 60,000 dollars of amortized bonds, belonging to the estate of the above person, to be forthwith restored to that estate, and thus to make immediate amends for an act so evidently illegal.

The undersigned, who has, since he has resided in Peru, generally endeavoured to cultivate the best relations with the Peruvian Government, is grieved to see that this same Government, which is bound by treaty to protect the property of British subjects, should evince such a spirit of backwardness in not giving immediately its frank and loyal aid when requested, in an important matter by the undersigned, an humble individual, yet the representative of the Government of a great and friendly power.

His Excellency Señor Melgar,

HER BRITANNIC MAJESTY'S Chargé d'Affaires, &c., begs to have the honour to forward, by Captain Carvell's desire, copy of a note which has been addressed by the latter to the undersigned, stating that, in consequence of recent advices received by him from Europe by the last mail of 2d instant, he finds it necessary to demand a higher sum on account of his arrest and detention in Lima, than he did in his letter of the 23d March, and that he hereby claims and demands of the Peruvian Government 250*l.*, two hundred and fifty pounds sterling per diem, until liberated and discharged from arrest for each and every day from this date inclusive.

(No. 21.)

Mr. Jerningham to the Right Honourable Lord John Russell.

My Lord,

Lima, 13 May 1861.

WITH reference to my Despatch, No. 18, sent last post, in which, amongst other enclosures, I transmitted a copy of a note which I had addressed to Señor Melgar on the 11th April last, respecting what had occurred in various proceedings and conversations between his Excellency and myself with regard to the Michael Winder affair, and matters connected with that business, and with Captain Carvell, executor of the above will, and in which note I recapitulated to his Excellency the history of my relations with him upon it, and the impressions as to what would be the conduct of his Excellency and his Government which I had received, as well as concerning the 60,000 dollars, Winder bonds, denounced as stolen, that had been amortized by the Director of Public Credit, which, in the name of Captain Carvell, executor, I requested the Peruvian Government to cause to be restored to the Winder estate; I beg to have the honour now to forward to your Lordship Señor Melgar's reply to my note above mentioned.

As I have waited to see what has been your Lordship's opinion respecting my first proceedings in taking up the Winder will case, as communicated to your Lordship in my Despatch, No. 12, I will not exhaust your Lordship's patience by now discussing Señor Melgar's reply.

As to whether his Excellency is right or wrong in the views he takes of the relations between the faculties of the executive and judicial authorities in a case like the present, your Lordship's great knowledge in such matters will best lead you to decide.

Captain Carvell came out here with an English will, proved in Doctors' Commons. He hears that a great amount of the late Michael Winder's property in Peru is in danger of being made away with by the natural son living in Lima; he applies to me to get the Peruvian Government to try to avert the danger, saying, that the Attorney General of Her Majesty had told him that if he had any difficulty, to come to me. I addressed the Peruvian Government on the matter, requesting them to cause this mischief from being effected, and indicated what Captain Carvell wished to be done. Answers were given me that left me under the impression that his Excellency Señor Melgar would do what he could, of course constitutionally, to save the property of this estate.

In

No. 1.
24 April 1861.

In the meantime Manuel Winder, the natural son above mentioned, disappears, and the amount of property in bonds, &c., which ought to have been found in his possession and of his partner (I believe), disappeared also, and only 5,000 dollars were found in the chest of the counting-house.

The Government were applied to to cause the arrest of Manuel Winder; and Captain Carvell, I believe, went to the law authorities to get a warrant out; that was issued, but he said that he found the police very little disposed to act upon it. When this evasion of Winder occurred, I applied, twice at interviews, and also in my notes, to his Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs, that the interest on the bonds that had disappeared should be stopped, if presented for payment at the "Consulado," and that the bonds should be seized, i. e. embargoed.

From the way his Excellency received this request, I inferred that he would do what he could in the matter, of course according to the laws of his country, which he must know better than myself.

Such was the state of things, Captain Carvell in the meantime having submitted Winder's will, with a translation, to a judge, that it might be examined, and his capacity of executor of it be acknowledged. But then we hear that the widow of the testator, a Peruvian by birth, residing in Lima, where her domicile now is, commences legal proceedings with respect to the will of her late husband and against Captain Carvell; notifications are issued by a judge that the Winder property should be deposited in a firm in Lima, and Captain Carvell is pronounced "arraigado," i. e., ordered to remain in Lima to defend the lawsuit inaugurated in the courts by Mrs. Winder, or to name some representative, subject to the approval of the legal authorities. Mr. Melgar says that legal steps had been taken by Mrs. Winder almost, if not entirely, cotemporary with my first application to the Peruvian Government in this business; if they were, I did not know it; and I doubt whether his Excellency did, as he has only mentioned this fact in the present enclosure. Some time after, about a month after my first application, although the matter may have been adverted to in conversation with his Excellency a little before, I received a note from Señor Melgar, dated 23d March, referring Captain Carvell to the law courts of Lima, saying that Government could not interfere in litigious questions. If they had told me that at the beginning, particularly as Señor Melgar says now that Mrs. Winder had commenced to take legal steps on the 22d February, we should have been spared a long and irksome correspondence, as such a refusal on the part of this Government would have induced me to drop the matter until I had informed your Lordship of this refusal, and received your instructions concerning it. One plea for delaying to refer Captain Carvell entirely in this business to the law tribunals is stated, that this Government had to consult the "Fiscal" respecting the contents of my first note in February; but surely, as I had said that the affair was a very urgent one, a few hours, or a day at least, would have amply sufficed for that.

It is probable that Señor Melgar cooled upon his first thoughts in the Winder affair; and the widow, Mrs. Winder, having fairly embarked in a lawsuit, to the great delight of the Lima lawyers, and the Peruvian Government wishing to shun all collision with parties interested in the inheritance, his Excellency has politely backed out of his primary zealous intents, while he has taken the trouble to prove to me that he has done all he had arranged with me to do, in the sense in which he gave me to understand he would and could act.

However, the interest on the bonds have been stopped, whether in consequence of his Excellency's "aviso," or Captain Carvell's application, I know not; Señor Melgar says in consequence of the latter.

The 60,000 dollars amortized bonds, his Excellency says in his note (herein enclosed), the Government could not order to be restored, because such a measure would not only be unconstitutional, but would amount to an offence.

However, I am told that lately an order from a judge has been issued decreeing that these amortized bonds should be restored to the estate.

Such is the present position of the case. These measures of stopping the interest, and ordering the restoration of the amortized bonds, have given rise to long animadversions in the newspapers; and I am told the public confidence in such paper has been affected in Lima, and an application, signed by many mercantile persons in this city, has been addressed to the Director of Public Credit on the subject.

I beg to enclose to your Lordship several letters to me from Captain Carvell on the Winder case; and he begs me to submit to your Lordship's consideration the fact mentioned in his letter, No. 20 of 6th May, of his having been notified by a judge in Lima to give up what property he has here been able to collect as executor of the late Miguel Winder's will.

I have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 5.

(Translation.)

Lima, 24 April 1861.

THE undersigned Minister of Foreign Affairs of Peru has had the honour to receive the appreciable note which, under date of the 11th instant, the Chargé d'Affaires and Consul General of Her Britannic Majesty, was pleased to address to him, acknowledging receipt of that of the undersigned of the 6th of the same, regarding the matters which Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell discusses, as executor of the testamentary estate of Mr. Michael Winder.

In the said note of 6th April the undersigned endeavoured to satisfy the Honourable Mr. Jerningham regarding the complaints which, at the request of Captain Carvell, he had signified on previous notes, of the non-intervention of the Government of the republic, in the contentious affairs which said Captain has pending before the judicial power in consequence of the said testamentary estate; and as regarding certain points contained in the note of the 6th referred to, the Honourable Mr. Jerningham does not yet agree with the undersigned, and besides gives birth to a new question, and formulates a new charge. The undersigned finds it his duty to give to his Honor a fresh reply, taking into consideration all that he has been pleased to adduce in his said note.

Although his Honor states that his note, dated 25th of March, was written on the 2nd of April, and that by mistake that date was placed, the undersigned sees no reason for insisting further upon the matter, as with this explanation the object proposed by the undersigned respecting it, is reached, to change the date now, as Mr. Jerningham is pleased to indicate, the undersigned considers it would later cause confusion when it may be necessary to consult those notes. It will be better if his Honor agrees that things should remain as they are, the necessary explanation respecting them now existing.

On this occasion of referring to dates, the Honourable Mr. Jerningham is pleased to say that first of all his note of 23d February last was written (which he believes did not have the effect which he proposed), he transcribes it entirely, relates what occurred for writing it, and out of it raises various charges to which the undersigned is about to have the honour to give his attention.

The observation of the Honourable Chargé d'Affaires, that even previous to the 25th of March, he had already solicited that the Government of Peru should give orders respecting the property of the deceased Winder, it appears would tend to destroy some excuse of the undersigned; it appears that the undersigned had given to be understood, that if those orders were not issued, it was because the note of the 25th of March was remitted to him too late. It is the duty of the undersigned to state, that when he referred to the date of that note, and the day it was delivered, he did not think of giving, as is very clearly seen, the supposed excuse, because on the 25th of March, as well as on the 23d February, and at any time whatever, he could and should say that the Government of the republic cannot interfere in contentious matters; in this sense are all the notes which the undersigned has had the honour to address to the Chargé d'Affaires in particular, and in the same sense he has made declarations in two notorious affairs which have come to the knowledge of his Honor.

After the observations now replied to, his Honor states that previous to his note of 23d February, an interview took place of his Honor, Señor Ezeta, Captain Carvell, and another gentleman; that Señor Ezeta agreed that the Honourable Mr. Jerningham should address a note to the Peruvian Government, expressing what he desired should be done, and that therefore on that same day the note was written and sent to the undersigned.

The undersigned now permits himself to state, that Señor Ezeta agreed to nothing else than that a note should be addressed to the Ministry, and this will reflect sufficient light upon another reply in which the undersigned has had the honour to state to Mr. Jerningham that Señor Ezeta could not compromise the Government, and that a reply of the chief clerk of the office could not be held of avail when the same matter was being treated upon with the Minister; and in effect, if in the passage of the note to which the undersigned is now replying, is seen that to him was addressed an official note, which he should reply to, the necessity results of only adhering to the reply that he might give. The contrary would expose oneself to have two different replies; but at all events the certainty would be that only that of the Minister could be accepted, as the undersigned, as also stated on the occasion to which he has alluded.

The

The Honourable Mr. Jerningham makes another observation, reduced to, that all that has been related in the previous paragraph took place before any judicial proceeding had taken effect, initiated by any of the parties interested in the will of Winder. If this observation has for its object, as the undersigned believes, to reply to an objection which he made to Captain Carvell, that serious inconveniences were stirred up by applying at one and the same time in the same matter to the Government and the judicial authority, the undersigned must reply, that the observation only saves Captain Carvell from the charge for one or two days; for on the 25th of February he was litigating in the judicial court, where questions had already been raised of the widow of Winder since the 22d; and as Carvell has solicited in this matter proceedings of the Government after the 25th, and up to to-day, he solicits them; and as after the 25th the undersigned also might have made the charge to him, it is clear that this charge subsists entire. *The occasion offers to state to the Honourable Mr. Jerningham, which perhaps is a repetition, that since the undersigned had a knowledge of this matter, he looked upon it as contentious, and knew that he should not mix in it, because it belonged exclusively to the courts and tribunals. The same must have been seen before him by Captain Carvell, and this is not only a presumption, but that he really saw it so for two days after applying to the Government, and before receiving a reply, he is met in the judicial field.

* Meaning that this is a fit occasion to.

In transcribing his note of 23d February, Mr. Jerningham calls the attention of the undersigned to it; and as the undersigned has already had the honour to reply to it, he will not now do more than, on his part also, call the attention of the Honourable Mr. Jerningham to that reply. Notwithstanding, as his Honor adds, that when he passed that note, he confidently expected that the Peruvian Government would attend to it without delay, the undersigned has to say that, in effect, he did attend to it as far as he could; for on the 27th of February he addressed an excitation to the judicial power to administer prompt and exact justice. If an order to that authority to embargo the property of the deceased Winder was not sent, it was because the Government could not legally do so.

Together with what the undersigned has just stated, he will reply to an expression which in various passages of the note of the Honourable Mr. Jerningham is to be read, and particularly in that which now occupies the undersigned. That expression is equivalent to the following: "if the Peruvian Government had no intention, if they would not accede to the solicitude," &c. The Government of Peru has not acted, nor does it act from inspirations of its will in the present matter; it has acted, and acts by the dictates of the law which it has to obey. If it was moved by the dictates of its will, only Mr. Jerningham would have been gratified in all his indications, which are not opposed to justice; but in a matter between parties, a matter in which a judge has to hear all the interested who wish to state their rights, the Government ought not to interfere, however much it may desire to please, by acceding to respectable indications; and there is to be added, that even though neglecting its duty, it should proceed to dictate steps in a judicial matter, those steps would be illusive, because in their proper place they would be combated by others interested, whose claims might be contrary to that of the party that had been favoured by the Government.

Mr. Jerningham will please to make still another reflection regarding this matter.

Certainly the Government could not advocate all the suit or all the suits of the testamentary estate of Winder; that is, it could not receive writings from all the interested parties, give copies, receive proofs, and pronounce sentences, and this being so, what would it signify in a suit one of the parties protected by acts of the Government when the others were dependent upon their own strength and only the decisions of the judge? Would this not be a chaos of judicial order, administrative and even social?

But the Honourable Mr. Jerningham continues stating, that if the Government had not the power to accede to his request, why did they not inform him immediately in writing? Captain Carvell should have known above all, that he had to ventilate contentious matters, and that these are ventilated before the judicial power; he had no reason to apply to the Government to tell him that those matters were not within its competency, and to direct himself to the corresponding authority; and if the Government did not immediately give him this reply, it did not fail in anything regarding his right, nor did it infer injury whatever. As for the rest, the undersigned has already stated on two occasions why he did not immediately reply to the note to which the Honourable Mr. Jerningham refers. Moreover, his Honor adds, that the not immediately replying on the part of the undersigned, left him and Captain Carvell under the impression that his request would be attended to, and that proceedings would be taken compatible with the faculties of the Government. The undersigned is happy to observe, that in this Mr. Jerningham was not deceived, neither was Captain Carvell, because the Government of Peru did attend to the solicitude, and proceeded according to its faculties. From here was the origin of the excitation to the judicial power, and the notice to the direction of the public credit of which the undersigned has already spoken. The hopes, then, of Captain Carvell have not been deceived, nor has he been injured in any way.

With much regret the undersigned proceeds to reply to another point of the note of the Honourable Mr. Jerningham, because he cannot entirely agree with the assertions of his Honor. Mr. Jerningham says, that when the undersigned had recovered from a melancholy event, and resumed his official functions, his Honor, after speaking of the danger in which the property of Winder was, earnestly urged upon him the necessity of apprehending Mr. Manuel Winder, and that the undersigned said that he would address a circular to the authorities (he believes he said judicial), so that Manuel Winder might be arrested. His Honor adds, that he called the attention of the undersigned to the necessity that the interest of the bonds of the deceased Winder should be detained in the Consulado, and he believes he added that those bonds or vales should be embargoed, to which indications he states the undersigned assented.

It is with much regret, as he has already said, not to be able to accord with the assertions of the Honourable Mr. Jerningham; he cannot remember having offered to order (much less the judicial authorities), that Manuel Winder should be arrested; neither can he recollect having promised the embargo of the bonds of Winder, and the detention of the interest. If he had made these offers, Mr. Jerningham will be pleased to believe that he would, for the first time, have been inconsequent to his principles. Happily to save this conflict, there are in the same note of Mr. Jerningham, certain expressions of much signification. In the first place his Honor has said with much wisdom, that there are scarcely two persons who recollect the exact terms of a conversation. From this should be concluded that, if there is doubt regarding the terms in which the undersigned expressed himself in the promise, to which Mr. Jerningham alludes, that which on other occasions he has said with all clearness upon the same point should be adhered to. In the second place, the mention which Mr. Jerningham makes of judicial authorities, gives much space to believe that the undersigned, if he spoke of sending a circular for the apprehension of Winder, should indicate that that provision would have to emanate from the initiative of the judicial authorities; this is in conformity with the principles of the undersigned repeatedly declared. In the third place, and the most significant of all, is the conclusion of the passage to which the undersigned now adverts, which is conceived in the following terms. He (the undersigned) said that he would study the matter, or something to that effect, which left the impression upon the mind of the undersigned (Mr. Jerningham), that his Excellency would do what he could constitutionally in order to prevent the destruction of the personal property of the deceased, Mr. Michael Winder, by stimulating the judges in the fulfilment of their duty to obtain the arrest of Manuel Winder, and disposing that an opportune advice (not order) should be given for the suspension of the payment of interests, &c. With this conclusion, although there might be nothing else, appears cleared up, the conflict between the narration made by Mr. Jerningham of the offers of the undersigned, and the want of recollection respecting them; for in the end those offers did not produce in the mind more impression than that which agrees with what the undersigned remembers. With this it is to be believed that the Honourable Mr. Jerningham will be pleased to agree to abstain from continuing to discuss a difference as to matters of fact, of itself little pleasant, notwithstanding the great courtesy with which his Honor ventilates affairs.

Mr. Jerningham concludes in that part of his note, repeating in two paragraphs a charge made previously, and to which the undersigned has already replied in its respective place; therefore he will proceed to reply to another charge with which Mr. Jerningham continues. His Honor says, that the director of the public credit received very late the notice which the undersigned addressed to him of the claims respecting the bonds of Winder, so that if it was incumbent upon him, he might take some precautions. To this delay he attributes in a great measure, if not wholly, an injury which he says Carvell has received in having amortized 60,000 dollars of bonds of Winder. To the same notice, although late, he attributes the having retained the interest of other bonds of Winder. This requires some explanation. The undersigned addressed a notice on the 27th February. He heard on the 2d of the current April, that the director of the public credit had not received it; it was duplicated, and was immediately received, at the time when they were about to proceed with the payment of interests. Previously, that is, between the last day and the 27th of February, the amortization of bonds had been made. On this account Mr. Jerningham believes that if the interests were not paid, it was in consequence of the notice from the ministry; and if the 60,000 dollars of bonds were amortized, it was because that notice did not arrive in time. The undersigned will later speak of the delay of the notice: he has now to advert, that the suspension of interest was not made in virtue of the notice of the ministry, but in obedience to a judicial order which Captain Carvell requested, which is as it should be, that without this order the interests would have been paid, notwithstanding the notice referred to, and that consequently, although this notice might have arrived at the office of the public credit before the amortization of the bonds, this other operation would have also been effected in spite of the notice, because the head of that office knows that to proceed to embargo bonds, regarding which there is any question, he has to obey judicial orders only. It is to be reduced, therefore, that Carvell, to embargo the bonds in question, should have obtained an order of the judge, of whom he obtained that for the suspension of interests, and that if he did not do so, to him is to be imputed the injury which he says he has suffered, and not to the delay of the notice so many times repeated. Notwithstanding this delay being so insignificant as it is, the undersigned has the pleasure to state to the Honourable Mr. Jerningham that it has not proceeded, but from some oversight of very subaltern employés. The letter-carrier of the ministry asserts that he delivered the note in question at the office of the Public Credit; there it is sustained that he did not deliver it, and each one of the parties insists in his statement, without any proof being obtained from either one or the other. When the undersigned was informed of this, he duplicated immediately the note, and it reached its destination before the commencement of the payment of interests.

This is, then, what has occurred in this place regarding the reclamations of Captain Carvell. The undersigned promised that he would do what he could constitutionally.

He

He received reports, informed himself of the business, saw that he could not constitutionally do more than recommend prompt and exact administration of justice, and he addressed to the judicial power this excitation. He did more; he addressed a notice, which he ought not, but which he was not prohibited to do, to the Office of the Public Credit: this notice had no influence whatever, because it should not have in a contentious matter, and to the insignificant delay of this same notice, and not to his omission to apply to the competent authority, Captain Carvell attributes the amortization of bonds which he states has injured him. The undersigned begs the Honourable Mr. Jerningham, in considering this charge, not to forget that the Government could not constitutionally decree the sequestration which, in making the same charge, 'tis said it ought to have ordered to prevent the amortization of the bonds.

The Honourable Mr. Jerningham supports this claim, stating that the amortization was executed by the director, a functionary of the Government, in the presence of a notice published in the "Comercio," specifying the numbers of the bonds, which act is a contravention of the laws of the country. To this the undersigned has not more to say than that, according to the nature and conditions of the Consolidation Bonds, according to the regulations of the case, and according to antecedents, the amortization of the said bonds should not be embarrassed by newspaper notices, but by orders of competent judges, on account and risk of those who may request the embargo.

The Honourable Mr. Jerningham reproduces the idea, that the undersigned stated to Captain Carvell in person that he had given instructions for the retention of interests. Without doubt Captain Carvell has told him (Mr. Jerningham) so; but no: when this captain saw the undersigned in person, on the evening of the 2d instant, he said that the Consolidation Office was not forewarned. The undersigned replied that that office had the warning which the undersigned could give; but that he (Captain Carvell) if he desired the retention of the interests, should apply very early the following day to the judge of the cause. If not, why did Captain Carvell go to the indicated judge? Why did he not remain tranquil, with the warning to which the minister alluded?

With all that has been said in this respect, the undersigned does not doubt that the Honourable Chargé d'Affaires will be convinced that the Government of Peru cannot constitutionally, nor has it contracted the duty, of taking the measure which his Honor has been pleased to indicate, that of causing the amortized bonds to be restored immediately to the testamentary estate of Winder. In the sense of these last words, the measure would not only be an unconstitutionality, but in judicial order would amount to an offence.

The undersigned cannot conclude this note without replying, if only in a few words, to a charge which appears to be raised in various parts of that of the Honourable Mr. Jerningham. This charge, it appears, can be reduced to this expression. That because the Government of Peru did not reply immediately, that Carvell should apply to the judicial power, it is responsible for the damages Carvell may have suffered for not having immediately applied to the judges. The undersigned is happy to believe that the Honourable Mr. Jerningham will not find it strange, under the principles of right, and the practices constantly followed, that he sets down in this case, and for other similar ones that may occur, that the Government is not in duty bound to address itself in its affairs to foreigners who may visit the country; that, consequently, Captain Carvell ought not to await the reply of the Government in order to apply to the judicial power to ventilate his contentious affairs. Captain Carvell himself, without doubt, has so understood it; for, as the undersigned has already noted, two days after applying to the Government, and without its reply, he was litigating in the judicial court. In respect of this, in one of the passages to which the undersigned alludes, Mr. Jerningham states thus: "On the last date it was that his Excellency wrote his note, ordering that Mr. Carvell should apply to the tribunals of the country." The undersigned begs his Honor to be pleased to observe that Captain Carvell has not applied to the tribunals by orders of the Government, but from the disposition of the law.

With all the courtesy that distinguishes his Honor, he makes, at the end of his estimable note, a species of recapitulation which the undersigned cannot but regret. His Honor says, that he laments to observe that the Government of Peru, which is bound by its treaties to protect British property, should manifest repugnance, and not give a frank and loyal protection when solicited by his Honor, who, if he is an humble person, is the representative of a great and friendly power. Peru, not so great as Great Britain, but of a great future, and a friend of that noble power, has her laws as respectable as those of all nations, great or small, and has a Government which must act according to them, with the native and foreigner. This Government, loyal in the fulfilment of its treaties, as it has given a recent proof to Mr. Jerningham, will give to British subjects the protection it can in all that they may not attempt to invert the legal order of the nation, as Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell has attempted to do.

The undersigned has the honour to conclude with this protest, as well as to renew to Mr. Jerningham the assurance, &c.

(No. 22.)

Mr. Jerningham to the Right Honourable Lord John Russell.

My Lord,

Lima, 28 May 1861.

I BEG to forward to your Lordship, by the wish of Captain Carvell, executor to the will of Mr. Michael Winder, certified copies of various depositions made on oath before me at the British Legation in Lima.

The two first have relation to information which the two persons, whose names are therein given on oath, adduced respecting Don Manuel Winder, whom Captain Carvell has been so desirous to apprehend.

From the information sworn to, as above, respecting the whereabouts of Winder, Captain Carvell went to a judge, named Carrillo, and obtained a warrant, which was so made out that he himself was authorised to accompany the officer, Captain Villar, charged with the execution of it.

When everything was arranged, Captain Carvell intimated to the police officer that information on oath had been given to him that Manuel Winder was hidden in the house of Judge Ponce, and that he and his party must go with him there to search for this individual.

As to what happened on that occasion, I beg to inclose, for your Lordship's information, certified copies of depositions on oath made before me at the British Legation

Captain Carvell has presented a petition to the Supreme Court, giving an account of the whole affair to that court, and requesting that Judge Ponce be suspended.

This has elicited publications in the newspapers from that gentleman's pen; also from Señor Panizo and Captain Villar.

I have, &c.

(signed) Wm. Stafford Jerningham.

The Right Hon. Lord John Russell,
&c. &c. &c.

The said Manuel Winder has been living in that house now nearly seven weeks; I likewise have lived in it during all that time, and saw him there every day.

Enclosure 3, in No. 6.

COPIES OF DEPOSITIONS.

I, Henry de Wolfe Carvell, do hereby declare: That, in consequence of information sworn at the British Legation in this city of Lima, on the 13th day of May in the year of our Lord 1861, before the Honourable William Stafford Jerningham, Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul General, "That Manuel Winder (the illegitimate son of the late Michael Winder) was secreted and living in the house of Señor Doctor Don Luis Ponce, one of the Judges of 'Primera Instancia' in this city." I proceeded the same afternoon of the 13th May aforesaid, to the Court of Señor Doctor Don Guillermo Carrillo, to whom I stated the circumstances, and requested a fresh warrant for the apprehension of the said Manuel Winder, and that the most efficacious means might be employed to secure him, as in consequence of the supineness and connivance of the police, more particularly the latter, he had hitherto managed to escape.

I stated to the judge, "that to give the order to the police to execute in the ordinary way would simply be to allow the criminal to escape, as they (the police) were certain to send him word that they were about to apprehend him;" and I requested the judge to give me a warrant and place police at my disposal, and said I did not wish to disclose where he was until I was ready and in a position to secure him.

Judge Carrillo expressed his indignation at the manner in which the police neglected their duty, entered into my views, and gave me an order to take to the "intendente" of police, couched in very strong terms, stating in the said order that I was to be present and assist at the apprehension of the criminal, and further stated the grave responsibility incurred by the police if they allowed him to escape.

At 7:30 P.M. the order was presented to the "intendente" of police (Baquero), who then sent it by a subaltern officer to Captain Villar, with instructions to place himself under my orders, and proceed to apprehend Manuel Winder. Accompanied by Mr. Lauezzari, a well-known merchant of this city, my secretary Mr. Delboy, my courier Mr. Gillard, Captain Villar, and some half-dozen police, we took carriages, and started from the Main Plaza. As we were going along I quietly informed Captain Villar that the criminal, Winder, was secreted in the house of Judge Ponce (which was in a distant part of the town), and that thither we were going.

He replied that he knew the house, and would take efficacious measures to prevent his escape. When we arrived within 200 yards of the house we stopped, and, getting down from the carriages, proceeded on foot, and, on arriving at the house, silently placed persons at the entrance, at the back of the house, to prevent escape by that way.

When this was effected, accompanied by Captain Villar, and one or two subalterns of police, and Mr. Lauezzari and my secretary Mr. Delboy, I entered the large gate leading from the street into the court-yard, and walked across it towards the front door, the distance being about 15 yards, more or less; all was quiet until we were about halfway across the court-yard, when we were observed by those within the house (as the upper part of the large door is glass); there was a cry of "police," and in an instant all was confusion and disorder in the room.

We hurried forwards, and Captain Villar and another police officer, accompanied by myself, entered the house together, some others remaining at the door at about three paces from us.

We had advanced about two paces into the large room into which the front door opens, when Judge Ponce rushed from an adjoining room with a large horse-pistol in each hand, and, placing himself before me, presented them at my breast, at about one yard distant from me, and standing between me and the door leading to the room from whence he had just rushed out.

When he presented the pistols at me he said, in a loud voice, and in a most savage manner, that if I advanced a foot he would send two balls through me, and lay me dead at his foot, and ordered me to leave the house immediately. His pistols were at full cock, and his fingers on the triggers at this moment.

I said that I would not go out; that I was there by the order and power of the law, and appealed to the order and to the presence of the police in uniform. Captain Villar said that I was there legally, and held up the order before Judge Ponce. He said he would not obey any order; that he was a judge, and one of the authorities of the country, and that he would not allow any Englishman to enter his house.

I again appealed to the judicial order and to the presence of the police-officers, and said that they must search the house. The Judge Ponce swore vehemently they should not; said that he was a judge, and they should obey his orders; that they were breaking the law and the constitution, and that he would have them severely punished the next day.

I pointed to the room from which Judge Ponce rushed out when we entered the house (and where I had every reason to believe Winder was at that moment, from positive information given to me to that effect a few seconds before I entered the door), and told the police to do their duty, to enter the room and bring out the culprit; but the rage and threats of Judge Ponce seemed to have frightened and paralysed Captain Villar, and he stood still and continued a discussion with Judge Ponce, the latter being in a dreadful rage, and refusing to comply with the order.

Judge Ponce was assisted in his opposition to the warrant, myself, and the police, by Señor Panizo. This same Panizo, whom we found on the premises and in the house of Judge Ponce, having been most active in the assistance he gave Winder when he first absconded, and who has generally been recognised as an accomplice.

The parley, from the time we entered the house, had lasted about one minute and a half, during which time the judge had increased the distance between himself and me to about three yards.

When I saw the police would not make any effort, I said I was acting lawfully and by authority, and that I would enter the room and bring him out myself, and made a step towards the door of the room, and called upon Captain Villar to support me. Judge Ponce sprang forward and placed his pistols within two or three feet of my head, making use of terrible execrations, and in a furious rage and foaming at the mouth, swore that unless I instantly quit the house he would fire upon me; at the same time calling loudly to his servants to arm themselves and come to his assistance.

He advanced upon me as I took a pace backwards; and with his pistols at full cock, and his fingers on the triggers, swore that he would shoot me down there and then, if I did not immediately quit the house. The police officers instead of lending me assistance begged me to go out, and finally ordered me out (as they afterwards said, to save my life).

Finding no support, and two pistols aimed at me by a man in a furious rage, and foaming at the mouth with passion, I was forced to retire, which I did by stepping backwards, Judge Ponce continuing to advance upon me until I was outside the door. There were several policemen armed with carbines, in the court-yard and close to the door; but no use was made of them, nor were they called upon by the officer in charge.

About 10 or 15 seconds after I was forced out of the house, the gas was turned off, seemingly at the main-pipe (as all the lights on the premises were extinguished at the same moment) the house being left in complete darkness; the police officer in charge only being permitted to remain; where, with Judge Ponce, Señor Panizo, and others belonging to the house (seemingly servants) they remained in the dark for about two minutes and a-half, more or less, during which time there seemed to be much confusion inside the large front room, and people heard rushing about in the dark.

In about two minutes and a-half, the gas was again lighted in the front room, and I entered it, when Judge Ponce ordered me out; but this time without presenting his pistols.

I replied, that I knew the gas had been put out to favour the escape of the criminal (Winder), but that I had all the exits from the house guarded, and knew him to be still on the premises, and that I should search it throughout. He swore I should not, but that Captain Villar might walk through the rooms; I said that the order was plain, that I was to take an active part in the capture, and that I should go through the house.

Captain Villar said, that Judge Ponce would not permit it, and I was again compelled to go out by the orders of Judge Ponce, seconded by Captain Villar, who then accompanied by Ponce proceeded to search the rooms (as they said).

To the best of my belief, Winder escaped to the back part of the house, during the time the gas was extinguished, and the house in darkness. Those stationed at the back entrance in the yard, where there were some low rooms, came immediately and informed me, that they were sure Winder had taken refuge in one of these rooms; as they had heard it open, then closed, subsequently locked, and then fastened outside by some person who suddenly disappeared in the dark; and that Captain Villar and Judge Ponce did not open that door, nor enter that room.

I requested Captain Villar to assist me, as I knew that the thief was on the premises, and that I wished particularly to search the room referred to.

Judge Ponce commenced again his violent language; and Captain Villar said, that the house had been searched, and that was all that he would allow to be done.

When they returned from walking through the rooms, I observed a change in the conduct of Captain Villar. He had at first shown some little disposition to take the criminal, but after having been with Judge Ponce, whilst walking through the rooms together, now showed a spirit of complete opposition, and would not allow me to take any measures to secure the criminal for whom we were in search; but ordered the party under his charge to their quarters.

I remonstrated against the scandalous conduct of the police, and expostulated with Captain Villar for his conduct, and appealed to him to take the prisoner, but without effect.

Judge Ponce broke out into torrents of abuse and personalities; said that he had already been the means of annoying me, and that he had induced a person to bring a claim against me for 170,000 dollars, and that he would be the means whereby I should lose 500,000 dollars; taking at the same time some silver coins from his pocket and dashing dashing them with violence on the table, saying as he did so, "I can buy as many evidences as I want for four reals each." He was assisted by Señor Penizo (above alluded to) in his resistance to the judicial order, the police and myself, and in the protection he afforded to the criminal Winder. Panizo exclaimed, "Winder is my friend, and I will not allow him to be taken, nor would I tell where he is if I knew." I requested Judge Ponce to give me back the order of which he had possessed himself, but he refused; I said, that the order was not his, and appealed to Captain Villar, who informed Judge Ponce that he must give it up.

He said, he would take a copy, and Señor Panizo wrote a copy of part of the order, and then Judge Ponce handed the original to Captain Villar.

Judge Ponce still continued in a very agitated state, and breaking out into a fury, and turning to me said, "I am a Chamboñ," and "am very sorry I did not shoot you, as you entered the house;" and turning to Mr. Lauzzari, repeated the same words, heaping abuse on foreigners.

Seeing that nothing would be done, I left the house and returned to my hotel; the officers and their party leaving at the same time.

When we were about 200 yards from the house, a person came running after us, and approaching Captain Villar, said, "Judge Ponce wants you," when he left us and accompanied the messenger, and I did not see him again.

When the officer in charge left with the messenger there was a low laugh amongst the police, and some one remarked, "I know what he has gone back for."

The police did not exercise either ordinary energy or activity, and they were opposed in the execution of their duty, and intimidated by Judge Ponce, with arms in his hands, raised in opposition to and in violation of the law; and by threats and oaths to take my life, and with pistols presented at my head by the said Judge, I was not permitted to carry out the judicial order for the apprehension of the criminal Manuel Winder.

On the morning of the 14th, Lieutenant Don José Manuel Bazan (one of the police officers who accompanied me to the house of Judge Ponce the evening before) came to my room, and told me that he considered the conduct of Judge Ponce the previous night was outrageous and scandalous, and that he (Bazan) was well satisfied that Manuel Winder was on the premises when we left the house the night before; and that if he were called upon, he would state the facts of the case, but did not wish to come forward voluntarily, as he might incur the displeasure of the authorities; but that if he were summoned as an evidence, he would state the truth about the whole affair.

During the forenoon I reported everything that had occurred, to Señor Doctor Don Fejeda, who said it was important that the witnesses should be examined, and sworn declarations taken, as, unless it were done immediately, they would, in all probability, be either bribed or intimidated.

Doctor Fejeda at once wrote out an application to the "Corte Superior," stating the importance and urgent necessity that the declaration of Lieutenant Don José Manuel Bazan should be taken at once, and which application I presented to the court the same afternoon, at 2.15 p. m., with a request that it would be acted upon at once. The answer I received was, "It is too late, but it will be attended to to-morrow." Accordingly, next day, the 15th, I called at the court, but was told that the application was sent to the Fiscal for his opinion.

I replied that it was not an opinion I wanted, but the sworn declaration of Lieutenant Don José Manuel Bazan to be taken, and that I could not conceive for what purpose they wished to send the application to the Fiscal.

They said it should be done next day. Accordingly I called next day, and still the same answer, that it would not be taken until they had the opinion of the Fiscal.

Up to this moment, notwithstanding all the efforts I have made, I have been unable to get the sworn declaration of the said Lieutenant Don José Manuel Bazan, taken by any of the Peruvian authorities, and on application am referred to the "Corte Superior;" and the said Corte promised to take the declaration referred to, but has not done so, nor can I positively swear what are the motives which have induced its delay.

I further depose, that about 20 or 30 seconds before I entered the house of Judge Ponce, a person who lived on the premises came out and informed Captain Villar and myself that Winder, Judge Ponce, and Señor Panizo were at that moment together engaged in conversation in the room adjoining the large front "salon." The person who gave this information was largely interested in the reward of 2,500 dollars which had been offered to any one who should give information which would lead to the arrest of the said Winder.

When I entered with the police, Judge Ponce and Señor Panizo rushed out of the room indicated, and proceeded as before stated.

W. S. Jerningham.

I, Cesar Delboy, native of Lima, "Peru," do hereby swear and declare, at Her Britannic Majesty's Legation, in this city, in the presence of Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul General: That on the 13th of May 1861, I proceeded in company of Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell, Mr. Lauezzari, and William Gillard to the Intendant of Police, "Caronel Baguero," so as to present to him an order given on that day by the Judge, Doctor Don Guillermo Carrillo, for the apprehension of Mr. Manuel Winder.

At about 7.30 p.m., we presented to him the said order, and after having signed it, he then gave it to a police officer, directing him to go with us to Captain Villar, in the "Calle de San Agustin," hand him over the order, and tell him to go with us wherever Captain Carvell might direct, and give him any force he should demand.

After reading the said order, Captain Villar assembled some five or six policemen, and in company of two officers we all proceeded to the "Plazo-Mayor." Here we hired two carriages, and said to Captain Villar that we were going to apprehend Manuel Winder, who was actually concealed in the house of Doctor Don Luis Ponce, in the "Calle del Chirimoyo." He said that he knew the house, and would take every possible measure to apprehend Mr. Manuel Winder.

We arrived at the house at about a little more than a quarter to eight o'clock, and when an officer and two policemen in company of Gillard had managed to go through the "Callegon," and secured the back door of the house and the entrance into the orchard, Captain Carvell, Captain Villar, one officer, and Mr. Lauezzari, we all entered through the large court-yard; Captain Carvell and Captain Villar advancing the first, so as to show the order and proceed to the search. At about 15 yards distance, more or less, from the door of the "sala" we were observed by those within the house, and in an instant every one disappeared. On Captain Carvell, Captain Villar, and another police officer entering the room, Judge Ponce came out from an adjoining one, with a pair of large pistols (one in each hand), and presented them at Captain Carvell's breast, saying to him to retire; that he would not allow any foreigner to enter the house, and that he would fire at him if he did not leave the room. On Captain Carvell refusing to leave the room, and appealing to the order issued by Judge Doctor Don Guillermo Carrillo, Judge Ponce said that he would never search his house, that he was a judicial magistrate, and an authority himself, and that they were breaking the constitution of the country.

In spite of all these threats, Captain Carvell advanced forwards, and urged Captain Villar to search the house with the police he had with him; but again, for the second time, he was impeded, and Judge Ponce presented himself before him with a pair of pistols, and in a great rage and fury told him that if he did not retire he would shoot him, calling at the same time on his servants to arm themselves.

Captain Carvell having left the room on the order of Captain Villar, I then wished to enter it, but was served in the same manner, and ordered out by Judge Ponce, Captain Villar remaining alone with him in the room.

Suddenly, in a few seconds' lapse, the gas was extinguished in the front rooms; it was lighted up again in two or three minutes afterwards, and we all entered the room. Captain Carvell then told to Captain Villar that he ought not to have lost all that time in speaking with the judge; that after showing him the order, he ought to have executed it himself, by searching the house with the policemen which he had brought with him, and apprehend Manuel Winder; but still did he remain inactive.

At last, Judge Ponce consented to Captain Villar searching the house; and accordingly (and after he had ordered the policemen stationed at the back part of the house, together with Gillard, to retire) he took him round some of the rooms, and returned during the course of four or five minutes, accompanied with another police officer, and saying they had discovered no one. Judge Ponce then said, that his major-domo being out, he had taken with him the keys of the dining-room and kitchen, and that those rooms had not therefore been searched by Captain Villar.

Judge Ponce likewise said, in addressing himself to Captain Carvell, that he was a judge of Peru, and an authority in the country; that Captain Carvell having inherited a sum of 500,000 dollars, he was soon going to see how he was going to lose them all, through the mere fact of having come to his house; that he was worth himself 200,000 dollars, and was a gentleman; and that he was actually engaged in a law-suit against the testamentary of the late Mr. Michael Winder for 170,000 dollars (I believe); and that he would take prompt steps to-morrow to punish him.

I must likewise remark, that during all the time we were at the house Señor Panizo remained there, and in answer to some remark from Mr. Lauezzari, said that it was true he was a friend to Manuel Winder, and should he know where he actually was he would never say.

I must likewise remark and finish by saying, that in conformity with a judicial order from one of the principal authorities in the country, Judge Ponce ought, I believe, to have submitted himself to it; the more so, as decreeing the law himself in such cases, he ought likewise to be the first to obey its dictates and facilitate its execution; and as to Captain Villar and the police present there, I must likewise say, that not a very sufficient energy was shown by them as ought to have been the case under the present circumstances, and not to have waited for Judge Ponce to conduct them through the house when, perhaps, the delinquent, if existing there, had already effected his escape.

Signed by me, this 21st day of May 1861, in the presence of Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires.

I, William Gillard, aged 21 years and upwards, native of Denmark, do hereby declare : That, on the 13th of May 1861, about seven o'clock, p.m., Captain Carvell called on me to follow him; I found in his company Mr. Lauezzari and Mr. Delboy; we went to the Intendente of Police, and from there to Captain Villar, in the Calle St. Agustin; from there we went in company of Captain Villar and two more police officers and some policemen to the Main Plaza, where we all got into carriages, and drove for 15 or 20 minutes, where we then stopped, about two squares distant from Judge Ponce's house; we all got out, and after a short conversation at the corner of Judge Ponce's house, we all entered the gate; myself and one of the police officers, with two policemen, went to the back part of the house, where there is a large yard. We were placed there in order to prevent Manuel Winder from escaping that way. After having been there a few minutes, a black man came running into the yard, with a large stone in his hand, which we made him throw down.

Soon after, a boy came running, and went to the left side of the yard, where he locked a door, and disappeared in the dark. At the moment, I discovered a man near us with a very large bludgeon in his hands, but he suddenly disappeared also.

About 10 minutes from the time I entered the yard, Judge Ponce and Captain Villar came out into it, followed by a woman. As soon as I observed that Captain Carvell was not amongst them, I stepped forwards from the corner where I had taken up my position, with the intention of following Captain Villar in search of Manuel Winder; as soon as Judge Ponce saw me, he ordered me out of the yard; but as I did not obey his order, the woman told Captain Villar to order me out, which he did directly.

I moved off, appearing to obey; but instead of leaving the yard, went to the corner where I had stood before, and remained there to observe their proceedings. They went down a passage to the right, leading from the back yard, returned, and crossed the yard, and went to a door on the left side, where they stopped; and Judge Ponce said to Captain Villar that the major-domo had the key, and was out; on which they turned away, and neither opened the door nor entered the room.

I observed Mr. Panizo standing in the doorway leading into the house from the back yard; and as Captain Villar turned away from the door of the room (that they did not enter), I saw Mr. Panizo, and heard him laugh in a chuckling manner. I was only four yards from him at the time, but he did not see me or know that I was there. They then entered the house the same way they had come out.

There might have been a dozen persons concealed in that part of the house without ever having been discovered in that way which Captain Villar proceeded. I next returned to the front door of the house, where I saw Judge Ponce in a furious rage, and throwing some money on the table; and shortly we departed. But I was still perfectly confident that Manuel Winder was in the house of Judge Ponce. After we had proceeded a short distance from the house, a man came running after us, and called Captain Villar back, for what purpose I don't know.

As a courier, having travelled for many years in Europe and North America, I depose that I never saw any police authorities show so little care in searching a house where a thief was concealed, even in cases of trivial importance. I have been present where houses have been searched by the police in several towns in Europe, but it was always done in a very different manner from that pursued on this occasion, which was in truth but a pretended search, and no more.

I saw that Captain Villar did not his duty as he ought to have done, and that there was more opposition than assistance shown to Captain Carvell by the police officer Villar.

I, Alexander Lauezzari, native of Hamburgh, do hereby declare having assisted and accompanied, on the night of the 13th May 1861, Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell and friends into the house of the Judge, Doctor Don Luis Ponce, together likewise with Captain Villar and some police, so as to apprehend Mr. Manuel Winder, who (according to the information of some servant living in the house) was actually concealed in the house of the said Judge Ponce.

At arriving into the house of Judge Ponce we were received in the most scandalous way, and had it not been for Captain Villar's intervention there would certainly have happened a catastrophe, as Judge Ponce received every one with a pair of large pistols (one in each hand), and saying, that if they did not leave the room he would shoot us.

This extraordinary conduct on the part of Judge Ponce undoubtedly confirmed the information given us that Manuel Winder was concealed in his house. After opposing himself to execute the order immediately, he found a way by putting off all the lights for some minutes, to let Winder effect his escape.

The search of the house was afterwards only executed by Captain Villar and some officers, accompanied by Judge Ponce, notwithstanding that the order expressed that Mr. Carvell should enter and search himself the house, together with Captain Villar.

I likewise met in the house at the time Señor Panizo, who seemed rather perplexed at such a visit, and at the same time I beg to confirm that everything mentioned in the article published on the 17th instant in the "Comercio" by Mr. Henry de Wolfe Carvell is true.

I, José Buendia, native of Lima, "Peru," 40 years of age, and late a lieutenant in the Peruvian army, and brother to Manuel Buendia (who has this day made a declaration, before Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, in this city of Lima), do hereby declare, that on Sunday, the 19th May 1861, Judge Doctor Don Luis Ponce, having ordered the apprehension of my brother Manuel, whilst in the "Plaza de Acho," and inquired of him for me. I find myself under the necessity of putting myself in safety, with a view to preserve my life, as likewise to come and ask for English protection, until that time that the affair of Manuel Winder's concealment in the house of Señor Doctor Don Luis Ponce be explained.

I, Manuel Buendia, native of Lima, "Peru," 34 years of age, do hereby declare, that I was in the house of the Judge Doctor Don Luis Ponce on the night of the 13th May instant, when the police entered it, in company of Captain Villar, Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell, and other gentlemen.

That on entering the said house I met them at the street-door of the house belonging to Señor Doctor Don Luis Ponce, as we had arranged on that same day. I told them that Manuel Winder, Judge Ponce, and Señor Panizo were actually conversing together when Mr. Carvell and the police entered immediately.

That, on the night of Thursday, the 16th instant, whilst I was in my bed, in a room of the house belonging to Judge Ponce, and where he resides, and whilst I was in the company of a lad named Martin, the said Judge Ponce knocked at the door of the room, about 11 o'clock at night, and, ordering the lad Martin to open it, he entered the room with a pair of pistols, one in each hand, and, advancing towards me, said, "I do not shoot you, rascal, and then bury you in the orchard, as I am a gentleman;" at the same time accusing me of having denounced him, and informed that Manuel Winder was in his house, and ordering me to immediately leave the house, which I did at once.

That on Sunday, the 19th instant, on coming out from the "Plaza de Acho," and at the foot of the stairs, I met the Señor Judge Ponce, Señor Panizo, and Señor Conroy likewise, coming away from the "Plaza de Acho." Immediately they saw me, Señor Panizo advanced towards towards me, and said that Dr. Ponce wanted me. I went to him in company of Señor Panizo, and when I had done so, Judge Ponce gave me in charge to some soldiers who were there, and told them to take me to the barracks of the hussars.

They first took me to the palace, and as there was no one with whom to leave me there, they afterwards took me into the house of Colonel Távala, in the "Calle de Tarate."

Colonel Távala was dining at the moment, and ordered them, therefore, to take me into the barracks. They proceeded to do so; but on passing through the "Calle de las Descalzas" I took to flight, and ran into the house of the Señor Canonigo Garay, in the same street.

Señor Panizo used to visit Manuel Winder every day in the said house, and the room inhabited by the said Winder was that on the left, and the very same from which Judge Ponce came out, with a pair of pistols in his hands, on the night of the 13th instant.

Lastly, I must say, that in consequence of these incidents, and events already cited above, I find myself in great fear for my life, as some men exist in the house of Dr. Don Luis Ponce of a very bad character, and the same who are deserters, and I have no doubt but that they would execute any order which would tend to take away my life; and under these circumstances, I therefore pray and ask for protection from Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires.

(No. 26.)

Mr. Jerningham to the Right Honourable Lord John Russell.

My Lord,

Lima, 11 June 1861.

I BEG to have the honour to forward to your Lordship, by the wish of Captain Carvell, who came out to Peru for the purpose of executing the will of the late Michael Winder, copy of a letter which he has addressed me, stating that, in consequence of ill health, as shown by copy of Doctor Maclean's Certificate, in which it is said that, if he does not change climate for some weeks, his life may be endangered; he had recourse to my interference in order to obtain for him, from the Peruvian Government, permission to travel for a change of air (indispensable, as he adds, for the preservation of his life).

Such being the case, I wrote to Señor Melgar a note (copy of which is herein enclosed), requesting his Excellency to cause this permission to be granted, adding that Captain Carvell undertook to give his parole d'honneur, as a British officer and gentleman, to return to Lima when his recruited system permitted, and his presence be required to meet any charge that might be brought against him.

To-day I received an answer to my note from Señor Melgar, copy of which I beg to annex, stating that the Peruvian Government could not interfere in the matter, and referred Captain Carvell to the judicial tribunals who had put him under "arraigo," that is, confining him to the city of Lima, on account of the lawsuit with parties concerned in Michael Winder's will.

His Excellency therefore gives me to understand that for this "arraigo" to be suspended or taken off, application must be made to a judge, and an "apoderado" named to act for Captain Carvell during his absence.

I have communicated to Captain Carvell the contents of Señor Melgar's answer, in order that he may take those steps which he may deem proper.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 7.

Sir,

Lima, 6 June 1861.

As you are already aware, I came to Peru for the purpose of discharging the important duties imposed on me by Her Majesty's Court of Probate of Westminster, touching the private property (exclusively English) of the late Michael Winder, a British subject, who died in London, where he had resided, and made his last will and testament in the year 1860.

As my duties were purely administrative, and sought in no wise to affect or interfere with Peruvian property or Peruvian laws, I naturally concluded the Peruvian Government would have afforded me its assistance (if required) in the execution of my functions, and that my return to England would be speedy and unobstructed.

In each particular have my hopes been miserably disappointed. The Peruvian Government bound by treaty with Great Britain, as well as by solemn promises to you and me, and, as a Government, to society at large, to effect the simple object of preserving property within the walls of the city from plunder and robbery. Not only did the Peruvian Government disregard its obligations, but by flagrant neglect of stipulated engagements actually facilitated the perpetration of the crimes they were pledged to avert.

My expectation of being able to effect an early return to Europe has been frustrated, not only by the misconduct of the Government, but by the outrageous abuse of power, on the part of a judge over a British subject, who up to this hour has violated no law of the country, unless, indeed, it be esteemed violation thereof to invoke (although in vain), the execution of the laws, as written in the national code.

For doing this, and endeavouring to discharge my sworn duty respecting property exclusively British, over which British law only has or can have control, I have been placed by this judge under arrest, and am prohibited and unable to leave the country or the city of Lima. Nor is it solely that I have been denied by the Government and the judicial authority that real assistance which each was bound to render, but I have been positively obstructed by both. First, an imperative order from a Minister of State. One of its highest functionaries prevented the seizure of a large amount of the publicly advertised stolen property, when it could have been secured (as it ought to have been) by one of the Government subordinate officers, in whom a source of shame and honesty predominated over venal suggestions. Secondly, a judge of the land, after sheltering in the bosom of his family for several weeks the principal robber, and for whose apprehension a public reward had been offered, set an example of contempt and defiance to the law and constituted authorities (which by solemn oath he was bound to sustain) by resisting in his own house the party armed with a judicial warrant to arrest the criminal; and in the presence of the police officers, this Peruvian judge, venting oaths and imprecations, called aloud on his servants to arm themselves, and threatened to deprive me of my life (levelling a pair of pistols at my head), if I should advance one foot nearer the door of the room in which the culprit was at that moment concealed. The commander of the police force, Captain Villar, instead of vindicating the majesty of the law, joined the judge in forcing me from the room. The gas lights were then simultaneously extinguished. The criminal of course escaped.

This was Señor Ponce, one of the judges engaged in the criminal cause. Foaming with rage, he did not affect to conceal his hatred against Englishmen in general, and me in particular, and with many injurious explications openly declared that he had already successfully obstructed me in the prosecution of my duty. That he had caused me the loss of thousands of dollars, and would make me lose more. That for four reals a head he could command as many witnesses as he might require to swear for him, &c.

You, sir, already know how the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Peru has attempted to evade and shuffle out of the responsibility incurred by the Peruvian Government, and from what I have just mentioned, you will see that it would be worse than ridiculous for any British subject to indulge the hope of meeting impartial justice from legal tribunals over which such men as Señor Ponce are permitted to preside. But it may be said, he is a criminal judge!

Equity is to be found on the civil bench. From a number, each as flagrant as the other, let me cite one instance, its simplicity admitting of no doubt or contestation. More than three months have transpired since my arrival in Lima; and although I immediately produced the will and probate issued from Her Majesty's Court, these being the proper and only documents by which I could be, as I am, constituted sole executor of the British property in Peru, as elsewhere, belonging to the late Michael Winder, esquire; and although these all-sufficient documents were regularly recognized and authenticated as genuine by the Peruvian Minister's certificate, seal, and signature in London, yet, up to the present moment, the civil tribunals here have withheld from me their recognition of my rightful and undoubted official status, thus paralyzing the action of my executorial authority, and virtually casting suspicion, if not ignoring my rights to the name and authority of executor.

Sir, the rights of British subjects are disregarded and scoffed at in Lima by both benches, civil and criminal.

Early notice was given me of the general prevalence of corruption in every department of the administration of this country; but the English mind is not prepared for, nor can it well compass the amount of administrative depravity which prevails.

I was

I was openly told that if not disposed of by assassination, I should become the victim of an equally efficacious method to attain the same end; viz., the accumulation of legalized delays, impediments, official evasions and falsehoods, wrongs, and annoyances of every description; and that the known delicate state of my health on arrival here, constituted one of the grounds for the hope of success and impunity on the part of the Government officials and others having a common interest in the appropriation and division of large sums already stolen, and of those to be later plundered from the Englishman.

I acknowledge the sagacity in which originated this morbid and heartless speculation, for my previously enfeebled health has been fast yielding under the systematic action and wily combinations of the gang of conspirators who surround me, and who direct with one common aim their pre-arranged and corrupt manœuvres for a speedy attainment of the predicted and wished-for consummation.

Yesterday Mr. Fyeda, with whose high standing and honourable antecedents you are acquainted, after reviewing the incidents connected with my case, declared that, with shame and sorrow he felt himself bound to tell me, it would be folly and madness on my part to indulge any further hope of meeting justice from the Peruvian tribunals; for that he now clearly saw the combination to rob me had become general, embracing the highest chiefs and lowest subordinates of the judicial and Government administrative bodies.

After such an intimation from such exalted authority, there remains for me but one course to adopt; viz., to take the requisite steps to prolong my life for the future discharge of that duty which I never will consent to abandon.

Dr. Maclean, whose experience of Peru for more than thirty years has constituted him a sufficiently scientific authority, is my medical attendant. He declares my life to be in danger, and that change of air is indispensable to me. Enclosed is his certificate. I am arbitrarily detained here as a prisoner (having violated no law). For this scandalous outrage I have proffered, through you, my just claims for compensation, which I neither relinquish nor abate. But having no ambition that my death should be quoted in aggravation of the already swollen amount of British subjects recklessly murdered by Peruvians, and for which Peru will one day have to make weighty atonement to Great Britain, I now, sir, appeal to you, as Her Majesty's representative, for protection and prompt interference to obtain for me from the Peruvian Government permission to travel for change of air, indispensable for the preservation of my life; I undertaking to give my "parole d'honneur," as a British officer and a gentleman, to return to Lima when my recruited system may permit, and my presence be required, to meet any charge that may be trumped up against me.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 2, in No. 7.

(Translation)

I CERTIFY that Captain Carvell is suffering with the very grave disease of aneurism, accompanied by hypertrophy of the heart, and that he also suffers from very severe neuralgic pains, more especially when exposed to the influence of moral agitation, in consequence of which his general health becomes enfeebled, as is the case at this moment.

I have been in attendance on Mr. Carvell for several days, and from what I have observed in him, I am convinced that if he does not leave this city, and change climate for some weeks, his sufferings are likely to increase to such a degree as to endanger his life.

I give this certificate at the request of Mr. Carvell, to make use of it as may be necessary, being the truth what I have stated.

Lima, the 3d of June 1861.

Enclosure 3, in No. 7.

Lima, 7 June 1861.

HER BRITANNIC MAJESTY'S Chargé d'Affaires and Consul General has received a communication from Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell, who came out from England to Peru as an executor to the will of the late Michael Winder, British subject, in which he encloses a certificate from the well-known and generally esteemed physician Dr. Maclean, copy of which the undersigned has now the honour to forward to his Excellency Don José Fabio Melgar, Minister for Foreign Affairs, by which it appears that Captain Carvell is suffering from the effects of a grave disease, and that if he does not (according to Dr. Maclean's opinion) leave the city of Lima, and change climate for some weeks, his sufferings are likely to increase to such a degree as to endanger his life.

His Excellency is fully aware that this gentleman has, in consequence of proceedings which which he did not originate, been declared "arraigado," and is therefore not permitted to leave Lima. Against this act of the Peruvian tribunal, a protest has already been made to the Peruvian Government; but still Captain Carvell continues under the ban placed upon his personal liberty.

Thus he remained for the space, nearly, of three months; but now that such a question arises as the ill-health of this gentleman, and even danger of his life, if this arrest is not taken off, and he be allowed to travel for some weeks, according to the medical certificate of Dr. Maclean, the undersigned, who has been applied to by Captain Carvell to interfere in his behalf, now begs to urge upon his Excellency a request that the Peruvian Government cause permission to be granted to Captain Carvell to travel for change of air, indispensable for the preservation of his life.

Although the undersigned reserves for himself the right of being guided by the instructions he may receive from Her Majesty's Government respecting the validity of the act of "arraigado," placed upon Captain Carvell by the authorities in Peru; he however, impressed by the alarming statement made in Dr. Maclean's certificate, must now, for the present, waive all discussion on that point, and condescend to solicit his Excellency's prompt interference for the prompt acceding to a request which he feels sure the humanity of the Peruvian Government cannot permit them to refuse.

Captain Carvell undertakes to give his "parole d'honneur," as a British officer and gentleman, to return to Lima, when his recruited system may permit it, and his presence be required to meet any charge that may be brought against him.

His Excellency Don José Fabio Melgar,
Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Enclosure 4, in No. 7.

Lima, 9 de Junio de 1861.

HE tenido el honor de recibir la estimable comunicacion de V. S. H^e fecha 7 del presente, cuyo objeto es solicitar la pronta intervencion del Gobierno Peruano para que se suspenda el arraigo que los tribunales han impuesto al subdito ingles Enrique de Wolfe Carvell. A la citada comunicacion agrega V. S. H. un certificado del Dr. Maclean que prueba que Mr. Carvell esta padeciendo los efectos de una grave enfermedad, y que estos pueden aumentarse hasta el punto de peligrar su vida, si no muda de temperamento durante algunas semanas. V. S. H. concluye invocando la humanidad del Gobierno Peruano para que no se deniegue la solicitud de Mr. Carvell.

En respuesta á la estimable nota de V. S. H^e es de mi deber repetirle lo que ya en otras ocasiones he tenido el honor de decirle respecto á la causa que se signe ante los tribunales de justicia por Mr. Carvell contra los tenedores de los bienes del finado subdito ingles Miguel Winder. El Gobierno del Peru no puede tomar parte alguna en esta cuestion, pues ademas de serle expresamente prohibido por la constitucion pasar el limite que demarca la independencia de los poderes publicos, las partes interesadas en la causa de Winder han reconocido la jurisdiccion de los juzgados que conocen los incidentes del juicio, Mr. Carvell particularmente está convencido del camino que tiene que seguir en este asunto, pues en el mismo caso del arraigo que dá motivo á la suplica que ha hecho á V. S. H^e, ha solicitado la intervencion juridica, interponiendo apelacion del asunto, ante la corte superior.

Esta declaracion no significa sin embargo que llegado el caso de retardacion ó denegacion de justicia por parte de los Tribunales de la Republica, se excuse el Gobierno á atender á los justos reclamos de los interesados tanto en esta como en cualquiera otra cuestion.

No concluiré con todo sin llamar la atencion de V. S. H^e á las palabras "arresto" y "entredicho" (ban) "contra su libertad personal," empleadas para calificar el arraigo que ha decretado el juez contra Carvell. Es probable que este subdito Britanico haya querido interesar vivamente el ánimo generoso de V. S. H^e en favor de su causa calificandolo como arresto lo que tan distante esta de serlo. Segun nuestra legislacion el arraigo lo pide al juez una de las partes cuando tiene motivos para creer que su contrario puede burlar con la ausencia el fallo de la justicia; y no és en suma mas que la obligacion que se impone al litigante de responder con fiador de los bienes que forman la cosa litigiosa. Nuestras leyes por otra parte facilitan á los interesados el medio de allanar los efectos de un arraigo, pues no exigen á la parte, sea reo, sea actor, sino el nombramiento de apoderado expensado que responda por él en la escuela del juicio.

He entrado en esta explicacion por que V. S. H^e adopta las palabras arresto y entredicho como sinonimos de arraigo siendo muy opuestas en todo sentido; y por ser ademas necesario que se defina bien el hecho que motiva la suplica de Mr. Carvell y la nota de V. S. H^e, puesto que en la ultima se llega á invocar hasta la humanidad del Gobierno, como si Mr. Carvell sufriese una prision.

Aprovecho esta ocasion para renovar á V. S. H^e los sentimientos de distinguida consideracion con que me suscribo su atento seguro servidor.

José Fabio Melgar.

To the Chargé de Affaires y Consul General of Her Britannic Majesty.

Enclosure 5, in No. 7.

Sir,

Lima, 14 June 1861.

I HAVE had the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a copy of his Excellency Señor Melga's Despatch of the 9th instant, in reply to yours of the 7th instant.

Labouring as I am under heavy and painful indisposition, it is quite beyond my strength at this moment to demonstrate, by an enumeration of facts already on record, the utter fallacy of statements advanced in this letter of the 9th by his Excellency, who, with customary littleness and craft, seeks to detach attention from his misrepresentations, by entering into a disquisition as to the precise signification of the word "arraigo."

Sir, it seems to be no more than a refinement of cruelty towards the dying wretch, to dilate on the peculiar temper of the instrument of his torture and execution, whether it be called sword or hatchet, fabricated of steel or unwrought iron.

Let Señor Melgar strive to disguise or qualify the truth as he may, and does, the fact is that I am still, as I have been since the 14th of March, under arrest, and that the most eminent physician of Lima declares that my life is in imminent danger from confinement to the atmosphere of this filthy city, and that change of air for some weeks is indispensable for me.

With tenacity of purpose, equalled only by the continuous train of falsehood cunningly blended with a little truth, his Excellency perseveres in endeavouring to induce you to believe that the order for my arrest has resulted from some initiation of proceedings by me in the court of "Primera Instancia," and that as by such initiation I had acknowledged the jurisdiction of that court over me, I consequently should abide by its forms, and now address myself to it instead of to the Executive, which, on that account, he pretends, can take no part in obtaining for me relief from the arrest which has endangered my life.

Sir, this is pure fiction on his part, unsupported by any portion of that modicum of truth I have above alluded to.

I have not initiated the suit which is thus pleaded as pretext for my arrest. On the contrary, it is a suit instituted against me in my capacity of executor to the late Mr. Michael Winder's last testament.

Although, strange to say, up to this hour (after three months of vain application), the authorities have declined to recognise me as legally constituted executor.

The object of the suit is to ignore the power of Doctors' Commons and British law respecting property exclusively British. Far from acknowledging or recognising the authority of this Peruvian court in such a case, I have, from the very first intimation of the ridiculous and arrogant pretension, repudiated it, protested against it, and, declining to become a party in the suit, continue still to do so. Nevertheless, although perfectly well acquainted with these facts, Señor Melgar now writes to you, as he has done, in the hope of deceiving you, and entrapping me into an application to this tribunal for relief from arrest, in order that the act of so doing might hereafter be cited as a proof of acquiescence or recognition on my part of an usurped authority, which has dared to abuse its power by wantonly depriving me, a British subject (who has violated no law of Peru), of my liberty, and thus placed my life in imminent danger.

Later, sir, if my sinking health does not entirely fail, I shall demonstrate to your satisfaction that every other assertion made by Señor Melgar in his letter of the 9th is as groundless in point of accuracy and truth as that just described, but since that one is the ground on which he seeks to justify his refusal to acquiesce in your reasonable demand to protect my life, I must beg of you to resume your interference with the Peruvian Government. Sir, if it were about to hang me to-morrow, would you not, being convinced of my innocence and the illegality of the court that condemned me, use the high power vested in you to avert so fearful a consummation? I know you would, and could make this dastardly and paltry Government tremble for the consequences of the act they were about to commit.

Sir, you have the same right to interfere now; my life is, according to the testimony of the highest medical authority here, in danger; and if my birthright of a British subject be of any avail, it is now I require it, now I ask it, and now I demand it, and the just protection of that flag under which I have served in Her Majesty's Army with pride and honour.

I now have to request that, under the trying circumstances in which I find myself, and the Peruvian Government having refused to listen to your appeal, that you demand from the Peruvian Government, in the name of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, that I may be at once released (and you may guarantee my return), not as an act of grace on the part of the Peruvian Government, but as the demand of the British Government.

Sir, the British Government and the British people will support you in so plain and imperative a duty, so humane and necessary an intervention; I must not be sacrificed nor offered up as a victim to appease Peruvian vengeance because I respect and honour the laws of my country, and have the temerity to think they should be my guide in dealing with British property.

There is a limit to suffering undeservedly; there is a limit to forbearance; it has been reached.

Do not forget that I am acting under the instruction of Her Majesty's Courts and the Attorney General of the British Government.

I demand your prompt intervention in my behalf, and the use of that power vested in you (and such as you) all over the globe for the protection of even the poorest and most humble of the children of Great Britain.

You can save me from my impending fate (if the doctors speak truly); you are able, by the power vested in you, to do so, and will be supported by the Home Government in so doing; but if you do not, then I shall have been a British subject 36 years in vain, and become one more to be included in the list of British subjects foully murdered by Peruvians.

I have, &c.
(signed) Henry de Wolfe Carvell.

P. S.—On looking over his letter again, I perceive Señor Melgar says, regarding this point, "Mr. Carvell is himself specially convinced of the course he is to pursue, since in this same case of the arrest he has already solicited judicial intervention by presenting an appeal against it to the Superior Court." Sir, this assertion of Señor Melgar is not better founded than the others; it is totally false.

Extract from the "Panama Star and Herald," Friday, 24 May 1861.

PERUVIAN JUSTICE.

THE case of Captain Carvell is looked upon as one of such a glaring nature in Lima, even by Peruvians themselves, that, had it been in our power, we should have brought it before the notice of the public before this; but other matters of importance have occupied our attention so much, that we have been compelled to defer it until the present time.

Captain Carvell is an officer in the British Army, and a gentleman of high standing, who came out to Lima in February last as executor to the estate of Michael Winder, his father-in-law, for which purpose he was duly empowered by the courts of probate in London, properly certified to by the Peruvian agent there, under the seal of that Government.

Mr. Winder was also an English gentleman, who resided in Peru for many years, where he accumulated a large fortune; but owing to ill health, he returned home some years ago, and died in England, leaving a large portion of his assets in Peru, among which were a quantity of Peruvian bonds, amounting to upwards of half a million dollars.

Before Captain Carvell's arrival in Lima, it appears some 400,000 dollars of these bonds were stolen by a person who, at the time, it was supposed had absconded, but who, it since appears, is still in Lima, and his whereabouts known to the residents generally.

Immediately on Captain Carvell's arrival in Lima, he made known his mission to the proper authorities, had the numbers and other particulars of the stolen bonds duly advertised in the public journals, and made application to have the thief apprehended. The authorities promised every assistance, but our readers can judge of Captain Carvell's surprise when, in a few days after, instead of hearing of the delinquent's arrest, he was informed that he was himself a prisoner, and that he could not go beyond the limits of the city of Lima until he handed over to the Peruvian authorities about 35,000 l. left in London by Winder at the time of his death, the said authorities wishing to be considered the proper parties to take charge of Winder's effects. This arrest was made early in the month of March last, and still Captain Carvell is a prisoner, and unable to leave Lima, even to visit Chorrillas or Callao.

Through the British Minister, Captain Carvell applied to Señor Melgar, the Minister of Foreign Affairs in Peru, to have the bonds stopped when presented at the Consulado for the payment of the interest, and the latter official assured Mr. Jerningham that he would at once do so; this was in February, and as Captain Carvell had the same assurance from Mr. Melgar, both he and the British Minister rested certain the matter would be attended to. The interest on the bonds was payable on the 3d of April, and Captain Carvell feeling anxious on the subject, called at the Consulado the day previous, in order to assure himself that everything was right. He was no little astonished to find in reply to his inquiry, that Señor Melgar had never sent in any notification to have the bonds stopped up to that time. He, therefore, at once again applied to the British Minister, and though late in the day, procured a letter from him to Señor Melgar on the subject. On receiving the letter, Señor Melgar again assured Captain Carvell that he had that very day attended to the matter. Early next day, Captain Carvell went again to the Consulado, and was then informed by Señor Suerro, the Director del Credito Publico, that on the 2nd he had received a letter from Señor Melgar, dated in February, with instructions not to stop the bonds, but to stop the interest, and that unfortunately these instructions had reached too late, as Señor Camacho (who, we believe, is also a Government official), had already amortized some 60,000 dollars of them. Mr. Suerro further stated that prior to paying the 60,000 dollar bonds, and knowing them to be part of what were stolen and publicly advertised, he refused to pay them until he consulted with his superior in the office, the minister of Hacienda, who ordered him to pay them, which he was compelled to do.

This order was given when the fact of the bonds being stolen was notorious, and at the very time when the Government, through Señor Melgar and others, was pretending to use every every exertion to recover the property, and had given assurances to the British Minister that the utmost exertions were being made to do so, and after that instructions had been sent all along the coast, and even to their agent in Panama, to have the thief arrested.

Only three days after this occurrence, Captain Carvell informed the judge where the thief was concealed, and requested the house to be searched, but this the judge refused, stating that the owner of the house was a friend of his, and he would not insult him by ordering a search. We may add that proof exists of Señor Camacho having offered 5,000 dollars to the notary to forge a false power of attorney from Winder to his agent in Lima, which the notary refused to do for less than 25,000 dollars; that it is tolerably well established that the 60,000 dollars of bonds went as a gratificación, as bribery is called in Lima, to some of the leading officials there to lend their aid in protecting the thief; that Señor Melgar, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, broke both his word and good faith with Captain Carvell; that he is more than strongly suspected of being extensively bribed to deceive and mislead the British Minister, Captain Carvell, and to aid in the theft; and that the whole facts making these accusations are, by this time, before the British Government in London.

A mere narration of the facts in an article of this kind can convey little idea of the depth of the outrages perpetrated in this case; the whole story would be better suitable to fill a novel than a newspaper, and certainly if pictured fully in its true colours, would startle the reader. But it is to be hoped that a day of reckoning will soon come, and we shall, doubtless, before very long, hear Peru whining over a claim made by the British Government for this swindle on one of her subjects, and, after allowing such baseness to be perpetrated on a foreigner, try to evade punishment by a cry of her weakness and inability to oppose the force of Great Britain when the latter chooses to make such a demand, a cry which has already been too often resorted to, and too magnanimously listened to heretofore.

But if a nation is weak, that is no reason why it should escape punishment for the perpetration of wilful crime, and if Peru should be chastised for her shortcomings by a stronger power, it will only be a just retribution for the bullying manner in which she of late years has tried to ride roughshod over Ecuador and Bolivia; and the lesson would, no doubt, have a good effect on the country both morally and politically.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Mr. Jerningham, dated Lima, 28 June 1861.—
Received 29 July.

WITH reference to my Despatch, No. 26, of the 11th of June, in which I forwarded to your Lordship copies of a correspondence with Señor Melgar, soliciting his Excellency, in consequence of the illness of Captain Carvell, as attested by a medical certificate, to cause the “arraigo,” to which he had been subjected by a judicial authority in Lima, to be taken off, in order that he might proceed to travel for a few weeks, and respecting which the Peruvian Government had, for stated reasons, refused their interference, I beg now to have the honour to state that, as Captain Carvell again applied to me for protection, and I felt, from feelings of humanity, that I ought to make another effort in his favour, particularly as he himself had said before he would not apply to the judge for the removal of the “arraigo” against which he had protested, through this Legation, to the Peruvian Government, I determined upon writing another note to Señor Melgar, formally and officially demanding of the Peruvian Government to take efficacious measures for the suspension of the “arraigo” in question.

I have now the honour to forward to your Lordship copy of this note.

At three o'clock to-morrow I am to see Mr. Eldridge, one of my colleagues, who is charged to confer with Señor Melgar on the subject; but I fear that I shall not be able to send his Excellency's answer by this mail.

The “arraigo” under which Captain Carvell is placed is not what is properly termed “arrest,” but it is, however, a chain upon his liberty, as he cannot leave Lima without naming an “apoderado,” who, I believe, must be approved of by the judge, and I have heard, in his case, by the person also who entered the lawsuit against him.

People say that Captain Carvell, if he applied to the judge, armed with a medical certificate, and named an “apoderado,” who would only have to be responsible for costs of the lawsuit, he might leave Lima to-morrow; but he does not appear to be willing to recognize the rights of the Courts of Lima to interfere with him, the bearer and executor of an English will, and therefore, I suppose, will not stir in the matter. At the same time, he is very ill, and with the aneurism from which he is suffering, any mental exertion or excitement might prove fatal to him.

If in what I have done for Captain Carvell, as detailed in my note, exceeds the limits of my instructions, I have done so out of a sentiment of humanity, and with the desire to save the life of a British subject, as well as to prevent any blame being cast upon me for not making an effort to preserve his existence by officially requesting his "arraigo" to be suspended, that he might find his health in a more genial sphere.

Enclosures in N. 8.

Lima, 17 June 1861.

THE undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, &c., had the honour to receive the note of the 9th instant, which his Excellency Don José Fabio Melgar, Minister for Foreign Affairs, forwarded to him in answer to the request which the undersigned had made to his Excellency, that the Peruvian Government should, in consequence of the illness of Captain Carvell, as proved by the medical certificate which was enclosed in the note of the undersigned of the 7th instant, cause the "arraigo" to which Mr. Carvell had been subjected, to be taken off, so that that gentleman might be enabled to travel for some weeks to recruit his enfeebled health, as remaining in Lima might endanger his life.

To this request, made by the undersigned to his Excellency, it appears that the Peruvian Government declines to accede, and refers Captain Carvell, for certain reasons stated by his Excellency, to the Law Courts of Lima.

The undersigned has communicated his Excellency's answer to Captain Carvell, and this gentleman has since then applied again to the undersigned for that protection to which he, as a British subject, is entitled at the hands of Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul General, as his life, according to Dr. Maclean's certificate, is in danger.

The undersigned, therefore, in virtue of the commission with which he is provided, considering that, according to the medical certificate which has been produced at the British Legation, and which has been forwarded to Her Britannic Majesty's Government, that the life of Captain Carvell may be seriously endangered if he be not allowed to travel, and leave Lima for some weeks, now formally and officially requests of the Peruvian Government, with all true and due respect, that they should take such measures as may be within the sphere of their attributions, so as to prevent any hindrance whatsoever on the part of any authority in Peru being opposed to the free departure of Captain Carvell from this country for the recovery of his health.

Captain Carvell has given his word of honour to the British Legation to return to Lima when his recruited system shall permit it.

In the earnest hope that his Excellency will deeply consider the above request made by the undersigned, inspired as it is by the liveliest desire to preserve the life of one of Her Majesty's subjects, and proceed so as to arrive at a favourable solution, the undersigned has now the honour to reiterate to him the assurances of his highest consideration and esteem.

His Excellency Don José Fabio Melgar,
Minister for Foreign Affairs.

William Stafford Jerningham.

THE CERTIFICATE of Three Physicians who held a Consultation on Captain Carvell's State of Health.

WE, the undersigned physicians, practising in Lima, hereby certify that we met in consultation on the case of Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell, at 4 p.m. of the 24th instant. That we found him in bed, to which he had been confined for some days past, under the care of Dr. Maclean; that after a careful and prolonged examination, we have satisfied ourselves that he labours under chronic affections, resulting from an aneurism of the aorta, and hypertrophy of the left ventricle of the heart, which, according to information received, have been of more than four years' standing, subjecting him to violent neuralgic attacks, of lengthened duration, which usually return with intense agony when his ordinary state of health becomes affected, as it now is, by injurious atmosphere.

In addition to the above, we find that he is now attacked by severe catarrhal, and also intermittent fever, incidental to this season in Lima, which he might have avoided had he absented himself in time, and which is calculated to augment his sufferings, and to further compromise the previously dangerous state of the patient.

The

The climate of this town being notoriously prejudicial to the case of Captain Carvell, and having this day confirmed our previous convictions, we recommend his early change of air, as a measure of urgent and absolute necessity, and that without loss of time, as indispensable for the safety of his life.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Mr. Jerningham, dated 12 July 1861.—Received 13 August.

WITH reference to my Despatch of the 28th of June last, I beg now to state, that upon the presentation of my note, Señor Melgar wrote me another, not acceding, for reasons therein mentioned, to the request I had previously made to his Excellency. Copy of this note I beg now to enclose to your Lordship.

Since the reception of this communication, I have had no more official correspondence with the Peruvian Government on this subject.

I have done what I could officially in the matter, and perhaps more than I was warranted in doing, and, therefore, if any harm occurs to Captain Carvell, no blame whatever must rest with me, especially as there was, and is still, a door open to him for doing away with the “arraigo,” by applying directly to the judicial powers for its removal.

Whether he would be able to succeed in that is a different question, as he might find much difficulty in finding an “apoderado,” or representative, who would undertake to supply his place, to meet with the approbation of the judge and the parties concerned in the lawsuit inaugurated against Mr. Carvell.

Since last post, Captain Carvell has recovered somewhat from the attack of illness, and is now about again; but the aneurism from which he is suffering renders him, I should suppose, quite an improper person to bear the brunt of lawsuits and legal proceedings.

Enclosure in No 9.

(Translation.)

Lima, 19 June 1861.

THE Chargé d’Affaires and Consul General of Her Britannic Majesty will permit the undersigned Minister for Foreign Affairs of Peru to express to him the regret he has felt on reading the note of his Honor, dated 17th instant, in which he insists in the request that the Government should procure that the authorities of the Republic place no impediments to Captain Carvell’s travelling for some weeks, with the object of re-establishing his health, notwithstanding the interdiction to which he is subjected by orders of a competent judge.

The undersigned believed that the well-founded reasons which he expressed to Mr. Jerningham, in his note of the 9th instant, would be sufficient for his Honor to be persuaded of the impossibility, in which the Government finds itself, to interfere in the matter submitted to the tribunals of Peru, and, consequently, foreign to the powers which the political constitution concedes to the executive power, because Mr. Jerningham is not ignorant that the Government cannot in any manner interfere in those jurisdictional acts, and much less in the present case, in which Captain Carvell himself has submitted to them.

The undersigned, therefore, for these motives, cannot accede to the last indications of the Honourable Mr. Jerningham, who can counsel Captain Carvell to apply to the judge who has charge of the cause, so that he may do him the justice to which he may be entitled.

The undersigned renews, &c.

 Her Britannic Majesty.

— No. 10. —

(No. 31.)

The Right Honourable Lord John Russell to Mr. Jerningham.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 31 July 1861.

I HAVE had under my consideration, and have consulted the law officers of the Crown upon your Despatches, respecting the difficulties with which Captain Carvell has been met in Peru, in his endeavours to administer to the property of his father-in-law, the late Mr. Michael Winder.

In the first place, I have to state that this matter appears to be one that is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Peruvian courts, and Captain Carvell is wrong in supposing that he is exempt, by reason of being a British subject, from such jurisdiction, so long as he remains in Peru, and in a case which concerns property existing in that Republic.

The liability of the Peruvian Government in respect to any negligence relating to the bonds, or to the non-arrest of Manuel Winder, or in respect of Captain Carvell's demand for damages for his own detention, cannot be finally considered until the termination of the legal proceedings now pending; and Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere for the present in the matter.

The conduct, however, of Judge Ponce, as stated in your Despatch No. 22, in sheltering Manuel Winder in his house, in resisting the execution of the warrant for his apprehension, and in presenting pistols and threatening to shoot Captain Carvell, appears to have been disgraceful, and it should certainly disqualify this judge from having anything further to do with the case, and it is to be hoped that it may lead to his disgrace.

Moreover, your Despatch No. 21, discloses an apparent want of good faith in the matter on the part of the Peruvian authorities, especially of Señor Melgar, who seems to be connected with Mrs. Winder; and the facts alleged by Captain Carvell, in his letters of the 19th and 20th of April, as to two of his counsel having been tampered with, have a most discreditable aspect, and give rise to grave suspicions as to the conduct and motives of the Peruvian Government; but it is sufficient that your attention is fully awake to these circumstances.

Your proceedings with regard to the return of the property delivered to you by Mr. Pike and Captain Carvell, were perfectly right and proper, and I must add that, though you may have in some measure gone beyond what the law officers now advise in your interference on behalf of Captain Carvell, your proceedings, on the whole, in this case, meet with the approval of Her Majesty's Government.

With respect to the detention at present imposed upon Captain Carvell, I observe from your Despatch No. 26, that Señor Melgar states that the executive cannot interfere with the tribunals, and that Mr. Carvell must apply to them for leave of absence on medical certificate; and that he can be released from detention by naming an "apoderado," or finding security. I do not find that Señor Melgar's statement is satisfactorily answered either by you or by Captain Carvell, and I cannot, therefore, authorise your making a formal demand for his release on parole; but you may facilitate it as far as possible upon such terms and conditions as may be practicable.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Mr. Barton, dated Lima, 14 August 1861.—
Received 13 September.

A FEW days after the departure of the Honourable Wm. Stafford Jerningham, I received from Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell four letters, dated the 3d, 4th, 5th, and 9th instant, copies of which I have the honour to transmit herewith, as also of my reply to them, by which your Lordship will perceive that Captain Carvell was threatened with imprisonment for not complying with the orders of a judge to deliver up certain property which he states it was impossible to do, he having transmitted said property to England, and requesting me to inform him him "if it was in my power to protect him from the outrages and indignities to which he was daily subjected, and if in my official capacity I would prevent him from being thrown into prison."

On the 7th instant, M. de Lesseps, the French Chargé d'Affaires, wrote me a note, copy and my answer to which I have the honour to transmit herewith, dated midnight, informing me that Captain Carvell had requested his protection and received it, for which act I returned M. de Lesseps my thanks, and no further steps have up to the present time been taken against Captain Carvell that I am aware of.

Enclosure 1, in No. 11.

Sir,

Lima, 3 August 1861.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that on the 29th ultimo (two hours after the departure of the Honourable William S. Jerningham from this city), a sentinel was placed on the door of my apartments at the Hotel Morin; and I have been officially informed that at the expiration of six days from the 29th ultimo inclusive, I shall be removed by force to the loathsome dungeon called the "Carceletas," situated in the "Plaza de la Inquisicion," unless I effect an utter impossibility, namely, the recall and return from England, whither it was my sworn duty to transmit it, of certain British chattel property, delivered to me for that purpose by Her Majesty's representative in Lima, I being the only individual in existence recognised by Great Britain, and especially appointed by her laws to discharge such duty.

Sir, Her Britannic Majesty's High Court of Probate in Westminster, constituted me sole executor of the last will and testament of Mr. Michael Winder, a British subject, domiciled and deceased in England, where he executed that will; the authenticity of which, together with the probate, have been duly recognised and certified by the Peruvian Minister in London.

I have repeatedly presented both to the authorities here, and for nearly six months have been unable to obtain either the recognition of its validity and authenticity, or what would be equally conclusive, their negation of its true character.

On my arrival here, the Government promised to afford me, as it was bound to do, protection and assistance in the execution of my duties. These promises have not only been shamefully violated, but every possible impediment has been thrown in my way.

The robber who made away with nearly half a million of the property which the Government had pledged itself to secure from plunder, has been protected and concealed in the house of one of their judges, and is still at large, although it is notorious that he is in Lima enjoying the society of officials, and spending his evenings playing at "rocambo," while I, in a precarious state of health, who have violated no law of Peru, am to be flung into a dungeon for strictly adhering to the instructions of Her Majesty's late Attorney General, at this moment Lord High Chancellor of England.

Sir, it is under these circumstances that I request you will at once inform me, if it be in your power to protect me from the outrages and indignities to which I am daily subjected, and if in your official capacity, you can and will prevent my being thrown into prison; a step which, if not averted, will probably cost me my life.

I have, &c.

(signed) Henry de Wolfe Carvell.

John Barton, Esq.,
Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires,
Lima.

Enclosure 2, in No. 11.

Sir,

Morin's Hotel, Lima, 4 August 1861.

In my letter delivered to you yesterday, to which I have the honour to refer, are the following words: "It is under these circumstances that I request you will at once inform me if it be in your power to protect me from the outrages and indignities to which I am daily subjected, and if in your official capacity you can and will prevent my being thrown into prison."

When those lines were written, I laboured under an impression that you had been received and recognised as Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires (ad interim).

Misconception on that head in no manner alters my unpleasant and precarious position, nor affects my right to demand protection from you, one of Her Majesty's consuls, against pending and immediate wrong.

I am, therefore, under the necessity of addressing to you in this latter capacity, the same words above quoted; to-morrow being the day named for throwing me into the vile dungeons of the prison of the Inquisition.

You must be aware that your official reply coming to me on or after Wednesday next (as you suggested last evening), could in no wise affect or avert the fate impending over me at this moment, and to be executed to-morrow. With the view, therefore, to ulterior and efficient measures for my protection and safety, which cannot now be postponed, I must solicit again the favour of an immediate reply from you in any official capacity you may see fitting to render it.

John Barton, Esq.,
&c. &c. &c.
Lima.

I have, &c.
(signed) Henry de Wolfe Carvell.

Enclosure 3, in No. 11.

Sir,

Morin's Hotel, Lima, 5 August 1861.

I HAVE the honour to inform you, that not having received any reply to my official letter of the 3d instant (save the unsatisfactory information given verbally by you, when I accidentally met you at the house of the Brazilian Minister on that evening), and not having received any reply whatsoever to my despatch of yesterday, "earnestly requesting you to inform me if you were in a position to afford me protection from the unmerited persecution and injustice which I am suffering in this city at the hands of the Peruvian authorities, and if you could and would prevent my being thrown into prison," and being officially informed that I should be thrown into the dungeon of the "Carceletas," this day (5th), which, according to the opinion of my medical advisers, would cost me my life. Under these grave circumstances, I was compelled to adopt at the last hour the indispensable but painful expedient (the only one remaining to me), of throwing myself, for the safety of my life, on the representative of Her Britannic Majesty's ally, the Emperor of the French, who has most graciously accorded to me that protection and asylum to which I was entitled, but which I sought in vain from the British flag, and which you refused in your verbal communication, informing me, "that you declined to interfere officially, but that when taken to prison, I might address to you a protest, which you kindly stated you would forward to England by the next mail, which does not depart from Lima before the 14th instant;" long ere the arrival of which period (if the unanimous declaration of my medical advisers is to be relied on), I should have been consigned to a Peruvian grave.

John Barton, Esq.,
Her Britannic Majesty's Consul,
Lima.

I have, &c.
(signed) Henry de Wolfe Carvell.

Enclosure 4, in No. 11.

Sir,

Legation de France, Lima, 9 August 1861.

By my letters of the 3d, 4th, and 5th instant, which still remain unanswered, you were made acquainted with the particulars of my painful and critical position, as well as the unjust and illegal conduct of the Peruvian authorities in my regard.

It having been formally and solemnly announced to me, that incarceration in the foetid dungeon of the Inquisition in my present broken state of health, would be attended with certain death, I urgently sought at your hands that protection and asylum which I had a right to expect from the flag of my country, and which you, whether as consul or Chargé d'Affaires ad interim, were bound to extend under circumstances so peculiar and unprecedented.

You peremptorily refused any assistance, substituting instead the volunteer announcement of your opinions being completely opposed to those of Mr. Jerningham; but that, nevertheless, I should have, forsooth, your sympathies and private influence; and further, that you would undertake to send home any protest I should forward you from prison.

I am most unwilling to suppose you could have meant this as a mockery. What you so positively refused, has been frankly and cheerfully accorded by the humane and spirited representative of Her Majesty's ally (the Emperor of the French), and to the scandal of the British community, a fellow subject has been constrained to take refuge under a foreign flag.

Sir, to my Government, as well as to my countrymen and comrades scattered over the globe, it will be requisite to communicate distinctly the causes which have placed me in a position, which I venture to say is without a precedent or parallel in any locality where the rights, privileges, and safety of British subjects were supposed to be carefully watched over and maintained by those appointed (as you have been, whether as Consul or Chargé d'Affaires), by Her Majesty's Government, for these specific objects.

At present, I desire to place on record the expression of my warm gratitude to those honourable representatives of foreign countries, Mr. Eldredge and M. de Lesseps, who, recognising the self-evident fact of the monstrous injustice of which I have been made the victim, took the trouble to remonstrate with the Peruvian Government on my behalf.

Their disinterested interference, however, was ineffectual to avert the display of Peruvian malignity, directed against me, by the appearance of armed soldiers and bailiffs at my hotel, accompanied by a mob invited to witness the degradation of an English gentleman while being being dragged through the streets to the cells of the Inquisition. The disappointment of the "rabble route" is due to French, not English, timely intervention.

Guilty of no offence whatever against the laws of Peru, I have been an object of persecution and obloquy, and my life placed in jeopardy, for presuming to assert my belief that Great Britain would never submit to have her laws and the mandates of Her Majesty's Courts rendered subordinate to Peruvian pretension and dictation.

It is universally known, that the pretext for ordering me to the dungeons of the Inquisition is the supposition that I obstinately refuse to effect (what is, in point of fact, an impossibility), viz., the immediate transference into the hands of Peruvian authorities, of certain British chattel property which Her Majesty's representative in Lima, the Hon. William Jerningham, in the discharge of his duty, handed over to me in the double capacity of executor and guardian of minors, and the sole individual appointed by the laws of Great Britain to receive and transmit it to England.

Sir, while such has been the nature of my offence, and such the pretext for the wrongs inflicted on me, I must not permit it to escape my notice, that the protection which you so jauntily refused to afford to me, and which I enjoy under the French flag, must be a source of very great inconvenience to Monsieur Vion, "Chancellerie du Consulat Général de France à Lima," who has generously assigned to me his apartments in the Legation. Reluctant to trespass on this gentleman's kindness one moment longer than may be absolutely indispensable, I desire to communicate officially a suggestion, which, if realised by you, cannot fail to meet and remove existing difficulties.

The portion of British chattel property handed over to me (the legally appointed executor and guardian) by Her Majesty's representative, the Hon. Mr. Jerningham, constitutes the property which the Peruvian authorities demand at my hands. It has struck me, that as you have no difficulty in expressing your dissent from Mr. Jerningham's views, neither can you have any in acting on your own, and as you now occupy his place ad interim, if you will write to me in your official capacity, desiring "that the property delivered by your predecessor shall be restored to your custody in the British Legation," (you, of course, adopting all responsibility for such order before the Courts of Probate and Chancery of Great Britain,) I will immediately, on receipt of such order from you, take measures to have the amount redeposited in your custody in the British Legation. Then the Peruvian authorities, being made officially acquainted with the facts, cannot persevere longer in their illegal and tyrannical line of conduct towards me (who neither have been guilty of any breach of their laws nor desire or intend to violate any of them).

I have, &c.

Enclosure 5, in No. 11.

Sir,

British Legation, Lima, 10 August 1861.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your four letters of the 3d, 4th, 5th and 9th instant, which I regret not having been able to answer before, from the peculiar situation I was and am still placed in with the Peruvian Government, arising out of a point of etiquette on the part of Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires on his taking leave of his Excellency the President of the Republic.

I informed you verbally some time since, that I must decline interfering officially in your case, which I consider altogether a judicial one, until I receive instructions from Her Majesty's Government, nor can I accede to the plan which you propose, of restoring to this Legation the remainder of the property in your possession, which was delivered to you by Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, the Hon. William Stafford Jerningham, I believe, at your own request.

On the 7th instant Monsieur Lesseps informed me, by note, that you had taken refuge at the French Legation, and that he had received you, for which act of kindness I have expressed to him my thanks; and as you are now in a place of perfect security, both as to person and property, my determination at present remains unaltered.

I am, &c.

Enclosure 6, in No. 11.

Mon cher Monsieur,

Lima, le 7 Août, à Minuit.

M. LE CAP. CARVELL, craignant d'être arrêté ce soir, s'est réfugié à la Chancellerie; je l'ai accepté, pensant vous êtes agréable, d'abord parceque vous n'êtes pas encore accrédité auprès du Gouvernement comme vous l'avez été avec empressement parmi nous; 2°, parce-que M. Carvell me semble poursuivi pour des actes dont la responsabilité n'incombe qu'à la Chancellerie de votre Legation, quelque soit l'opinion des tribunaux du pays.

Du reste, j'irai vous voir demain matin, pour causer plus à l'aise de cette délicate affaire dont nous chercherons ensemble la solution. J'ai cru bien faire en instruisant notre Doyen en même tems que vous.

Je profite de l'occasion, mon cher collègue, pour vous offrir l'assurance de mes sentimens les plus distingués.

Monsr. Barton, Lima.

Enclosure 7, in No. 11.

Mon cher Monsieur,

Lima, le 8 Août 1861.

JE vous remercie bien pour vos égards envers M. le Cape Carvell, et je serai charmé de vous voir à l'heure que vous voulez; et si cela vous plaira, nous irons ensemble après chez Monsieur Lisboa.

Veuillez bien recevoir, mon cher collègue, mes sentimens affectueux.

My Lord,

Enclosure in No. 12.

Sir,

French Legation, Lima, 22 August 1861.

I HAVE the honour to inform you, and thus place on record, that on the 2d of March last, the Peruvian authorities took possession of the ledgers, cash and account books, &c., belonging to the estate of the late Michael Winder, and of such papers and documents, &c. (amongst the latter being consolidated bonds to the amount of 5,800 dollars), as had been left by Manuel Winder, after the robbery committed by him, and his flight on the 23d of February last; and which had been subsequently handed over to me, as executor, by Mr. Holguin, the late Mr. Winder's cashier.

Judge Carrillo, accompanied by some officials (of whose names and position I am ignorant), came to the office on the date alluded to, viz., 2d of March, and, on pretence of making an inventory, took from me the ledgers, books, &c., locked them up in the iron safe, himself keeping the key; and, ordering every one out of the office, he then locked it up, and took the key of that also, placing upon the door a seal (which disappeared in a day or two after).

Since that date, I have been unable to obtain any satisfactory intelligence concerning those most important ledgers, books, papers, &c.; and, although I have repeatedly applied to have them delivered to me, I have been unable to obtain them, and have been met by various excuses from time to time, until I am convinced that there is no intention whatever on the part of the authorities to give them up, imagining that the amount of the robbery to which they (the Peruvian Government) have so palpably lent themselves, can be screened by their keeping the books in their possession, or making away with them; and that the perpetrators may enjoy, with greater security and impunity, this immense spoliation of British property.

Neither can I get any information relative to the documents belonging to the estate of the "Hacienda del Ingenio de Huaura," they being in the hands of the legal authorities, and amongst which there is a document for 120,000 dollars in favour of the deceased Michael Winder.

I have, &c.

(No. 9.)

Mr. Barton to the Right Honourable Lord John Russell.

My Lord,

British Legation, Lima, 29 August 1861.

I HAVE deferred closing my Despatch until the last moment, awaiting a communication for the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, to an earnest request both from Monsieur de Lesseps and myself to allow Captain Carvell to return to his house, and remain there unmolested until instructions are received from your Lordship by me; and also a request made by myself, verbally, that Mr. Melville White might be transferred to the hospital of "San Andres" on account of the bad state of his liver, to be taken care of by the "Sisters of Charity," who have the charge of that establishment; but, as no answer has yet arrived, although I was twice at the Palace yesterday, without being able to obtain an interview with his Excellency, I feel it my duty to acquaint your Lordship that Monsieur de Lesseps has hinted, that as I have been acknowledged by the Peruvian Government, I ought to relieve him from the responsibility he now labours under in keeping Captain Carvell in the French Legation.

On receiving this insinuation, I called on Monsieur de Lesseps, to whom I expressed my grateful thanks for the protection afforded to Captain Carvell, and assured him that I was most anxious to relieve him from his charge, but, at the same time, as I felt assured that my Government would not have sanctioned my taking him out of the hands of the judges at the time he took refuge in the French Legation, I requested that he would pass me an official note on the subject, when I would immediately receive Captain Carvell at the British Legation, as I consider there is a wide difference in receiving Captain Carvell from the French Legation, or giving him an asylum under the circumstances in which he was received by Monsieur de Lesseps.

I beg also to acquaint your Lordship that Monsieur de Lesseps did not consult with me previous to receiving Captain Carvell at the Legation, nor do I know if Monsieur de Lesseps was aware that Captain Carvell intended to seek that protection, should the attempt be made by the Peruvian authorities to make him a prisoner.

The reasons that have induced Monsieur de Lesseps to take upon him this heavy responsibility are three, copies of which I have the honour to transmit herewith, one in Spanish, with translation; the other two in French.

I beg also to acquaint your Lordship that the opinion of the corps diplomatique is, that, in conformity with international law, the Peruvian authorities have no right over the chattel property (bienes muebles) of the deceased Mr. Winder, much less over the person of the executor of that estate, besides which, by their own code of laws, Article 5, only the (bienes muebles) landed property, &c., are subject to the Peruvian laws (copy and translation of which article I inclose herewith).

Under all these circumstances, had Captain Carvell unfortunately been made a prisoner, I should have considered it my duty to make a strong remonstrance to the Peruvian Government, and have demanded his immediate release; but, as Captain Carvell is at present in a place of safety, and can be transferred to this Legation whenever Monsieur de Lesseps thinks proper to pass me the official note requested by me, I consider it more prudent to wait the arrival of instructions from your Lordship, which I hope to receive on the 2d of the ensuing month.

I make no comments on the style of Captain Carvell's correspondence addressed to me, nor have I thought it necessary to explain to that gentleman the motives of my conduct; but, at the same time, I cannot but consider that he has evinced towards me, in my public character, a great want of proper respect to the position I hold.

I have, &c.

FROM the fact that the foreigner continues a citizen of his own country and a member of its nation (according to Article 107), the property he may leave at his death, in a foreign country, should naturally devolve to those who are his heirs, in conformity with the laws of the State of which he is a member. But this general rule does not prevent that the immovable property shall continue under the disposition of the laws of the country where it may be situated.

CIVIL CODE.—Preliminary Title of the Laws in general.

Art. V. Landed properties, whatever may be their nature and the condition of the possessor, are subject to the laws of the Republic.

— No. 14. —

(No. 10.)

Mr Barton to the Right Honourable Lord John Russell.

My Lord,

British Legation, Lima, 29 August 1861.

I HAVE just received another communication from Captain Carvell, of the same class as his former ones, copy of which I have the honour to transmit herewith.

The Right Hon. Lord John Russell,
&c. &c. &c.

I have, &c.
(signed) John Barton.

Enclosure in No. 14.

Sir,

British Legation, Lima, 27 August 1861.

SINCE you did me the honour to call upon me at this Legation on the 23d instant, I have been waiting with great anxiety to know the results of your correspondence and interviews with the Peruvian Government relative to my present situation; and my surprise was consequently great, when I yesterday received a note from you containing the following paragraph:—

"I have nothing to communicate concerning your affairs; but you will find, as I have found by long experience, that patience in this country is not a virtue, but an absolute necessity."

Monsieur Edmond de Lesseps, Chargé d'Affaires for France, has done me the honour to inform me that, at a meeting held on the 22d, at the residence of the Chevalier Lisboa, Ministre du Brésil, the Corps Diplomatique unanimously declared that the conduct of the Peruvian Government towards me was a gross and flagrant violation of the rights of a British subject, as established by international law, and that the attempts of the Peruvian authorities to throw me into prison, whereby I was compelled to seek refuge and asylum under the flag of the French Legation, was not only illegal, but outrageous.

You did me the honour to call upon me on the 23d instant, accompanied by Monsieur Edmond de Lesseps, French Chargé d'Affaires, and found Admiral Larrien (commanding the French squadron), General Miller, Colonel The O'Gorman Mahon, Monsieur Eldredge (the

(the Minister), and one or two other gentlemen, in my apartments at the Legation. You were pleased to say, in the presence of those gentlemen, that you were now fully convinced that the Peruvian Government was acting unjustly and illegally towards me, and that you had been received in your official capacity the day before, and would at once exercise your official authority to have me righted; upon which I offered you my thanks for your kind words.

The sudden change in your views (you having previously stated my case to be a simple judicial matter, and that your opinion could only be changed by orders from England) caused me not a little surprise, no mail having arrived from Europe since you made that declaration.

However, after your expressions and promises, backed up as you were by the whole Corps Diplomatique and your own strong conviction (as expressed to me), I imagined that you would at once have formally and officially demanded from the Peruvian Government my immediate and unconditional release, and that you would insist on an immediate and definite answer; my health being in a most precarious state, having already been confined to my rooms in the French Legation three weeks this day.

You state that Señor Melgar had informed you that he had not been able to see all of the judges whom he wished to consult, and that he could not see yourself and M. de Lesseps until Monday (yesterday). I beg to observe that the case has nothing to do with the Peruvian judges, being purely diplomatic, and Señor Melgar's conduct is only part of a well-organised system of delay, whereby he, knowing that his Government is acting tyrannically and illegally, and in open disregard and violation of international law and my rights as a British subject, yet persists, in defiance of all this, to prolong my confinement to the danger of my life, as shown by a Board held on my state of health by three medical gentlemen, the proceedings of which have been forwarded to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

You were received as Chargé d'Affaires on the 22d instant, and I supposed that delicacy as well as duty would have suggested to you to offer me the protection of Her Majesty's flag, in order to disembarrass my kind French protectors of my presence; the more so as you wrote to Monsieur Edmond de Lesseps, French Chargé d'Affaires, to thank him for according me protection and asylum, you not being at the time in a position to do so, not having been received by the Peruvian Government.

Sir, you recommend patience. I have, indeed, much need of patience, to endure the persecution and villanous conduct of the authorities of this country, exercised against me since last March.

Recognising the illegal proceedings of the Peruvian authorities, how can you allow them to evade your just demands by talking of their judges?

Is the Peruvian Government, in defiance of every principle of law and justice, to be permitted to trifle with the life of a British subject, and mockingly prate to you (as Her Britannic Majesty's Representative) of its judges?

Since the 22d instant, have you demanded from the Peruvian Government (in your official capacity as Her Majesty's Representative) my immediate and unconditional release? Or have you communicated with the said Government officially, and in writing, on my account, making such demands?

Sir, it would be very gratifying to me, under existing circumstances, to be made acquainted with the date and tenor of such official despatch (if it ever had an existence); you would thus remove an impression under which I labour, that no such demand has been submitted by you to the Peruvian Government.

Why am I this day in the asylum and under the flag of the French Legation; my own honoured flag flying at the British Legation, you having previously written to thank the French Chargé d'Affaires for affording me this very protection and asylum?

Sir, those are most unpleasant inquiries for me to make, but I think you will find them even more unpleasant and difficult to answer.

Having expressed your conviction that the Peruvian Government was acting unjustly and illegally, and supported as you are by the unanimous voice of the Corps Diplomatique in Lima, who recognise in the conduct of the Peruvian Government towards me a gross and flagrant violation of international law and "le droit des gens," against which they find it their duty to protest.

How you will hereafter explain your conduct under circumstances such as those remains to be seen.

I have, &c.

(signed) Henry de Wolfe Carvell.

P. S.—I beg further to remark, that at the meeting of the Corps Diplomatique already referred to, the Chevalier Lisboa, "Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plenipotentiaire de S. M. l'Empereur du Brésil," opened such meeting by bringing before the diplomatic body the conduct of the Peruvian Government towards me, which he characterised as illegal, and a flagrant violation of international law and "le droit des gens," in which view and declaration he was supported by the Corps Diplomatique unanimously.

Mr. Barton to the Right Honourable Earl Russell.

My Lord,

British Legation, Lima, 2 September 1861.

In continuation of the subject of the latter part of the first paragraph of my Despatch of the 29th of August, numbered 9, I have now the honour to acquaint your Lordship that, on the 30th ultimo, Monsieur de Lesseps, the French Chargé d'Affaires, addressed me a note, copy of which I have the honour to transmit herewith, holding at my disposition the person of Captain de Wolfe Carvell, to which I immediately replied, that I was perfectly ready to receive him in the manner and at the time proposed, as your Lordship will perceive by the copy (herewith enclosed) of my reply to Monsieur de Lesseps.

The French Chargé d'Affaires and myself addressed a letter, marked "confidential and private," to Señor Melgar, to which he returned an answer the following day, copies and translation of both of which I have the honour to transmit herewith; and we brought Captain Carvell to this Legation at mid-day of the 31st, where he is at present.

Trusting that your Lordship will approve of my acceding to the request of Monsieur de Lesseps on this occasion,

The Earl Russell,
&c. &c. &c.

I have, &c.

En vertu de cette reconnaissance, je crois devoir vous informer officiellement, et par un sentiment de déférence pour votre Gouvernement, que je tiens à votre disposition la personne de M. le Capitaine de Wolfe Carvell, lequel, décrété de prisé de corps, s'était réfugié sous le pavillon Français, à l'époque où votre caractère et vos privilèges vous étaient contestés.

(Confidential and very private.)

Lima, 30 August 1861,

Four o'clock, P.M.

Señor Minister and very esteemed Friend,
 We hasten confidentially to acquaint you that, by mutual consent, Captain de Wolfe Carvell will be transferred to-morrow to the Legation of Her Britannic Majesty in Lima. This transference will be made in the coach of the Minister of Brazil, who with much goodness has placed it at our disposal, and it will take place at twelve o'clock in the day, in our company and that of the Secretary of the Legation of that Empire. We have believed it our duty to notify this change to your Excellency, who has acted in this matter with so much delicacy; and we flatter ourselves with the hope that the necessary steps will be taken to prevent any obstacle on the part of the agents of the public peace. We shall be very grateful for your reply, that there is no impediment at the hour fixed upon.

We take this opportunity, &c.

(Confidential, private.)

Very esteemed Friends and Gentlemen,

31 August.

It was not possible for me to read, until last night at 11½, the esteemed private letter which you addressed to me at four o'clock in the afternoon, relative to Mr. Carvell.

You will do me the favour to believe that I do not know what to reply at this moment, your esteemed letter having upset all the data which, until yesterday, I had a knowledge of upon this matter. It is necessary that I should amply explain myself verbally.

But as regards the act, which you look upon as possible on the part of the agents of the public order, I can state that, according to the steps which I have observed the judges and the police to follow, it appears to me that that act will not take place.

I am extremely occupied with the attention which on this day I have to give to his Excellency the President, and therefore you will be so good and excuse the imperfections of this letter.

I am, &c.

— No. 16. —

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Mr. Barton; dated Lima, 14 September 1861.

—Received 14 October.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's Despatch of the 31st of July last, numbered 31, and in conformity with the principle expressed at the conclusion of the 3d paragraph, that "Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere for the present in the matter," I have abstained from any official communication with the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs in Captain Carvell's case, until I receive further instructions on the subject; but as your Lordship has authorised me, at the end of your Lordship's Despatch, "to facilitate Captain Carvell's release, as far as possible, upon such terms and conditions as may be practicable," I have had an interview with the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, at which I urged his Excellency's interference with the Judge "Gamboa" (who issued the order for Captain Carvell's arrest for not giving up the property which was received from this Legation, and upon which property

I told his Excellency that the judicial authorities of Peru had no claim, neither by the Peruvian Laws nor by the Law of Nations) to withdraw such order of arrest, and allow Captain Carvell to return to his house and continue the lawsuit, promising that should Captain Carvell's person be respected I would not in any way interfere until I received further instructions from your Lordship. To this request his Excellency gave me a decided refusal, stating that it was against the Constitution of Peru for the Executive to interfere in any way with the judicial authorities.

I omitted, in my Despatch of the 29th of August last, No. 9, to forward to your Lordship another article of the Code of Laws which bears on Captain Carvell's case, and have now the honour to transmit copy and translation of it (Article No. 33 of the Code of Laws), which expressly states that "Foreigners enjoy in Peru all the rights relating to the security of their persons and property, and to the free administration of the latter."

Captain Carvell has named an "apoderado," and has petitioned the "Corte Superior" to allow him, on medical certificates, to go to Chili for the benefit of his health.

I have the honour to transmit herewith a letter from Captain Carvell, dated the 12th instant, with two enclosures, and their translations.

Enclosure in No. 16.

Sir,

British Legation, Lima, 12 September 1861.

I BEG to enclose the accompanying extracts, from the Civil Code of Peru, which bear upon the fraud and embezzlement of British chattel property committed by Peruvians, aided and abetted by the Peruvian Courts and Executive authorities; also articles which refer to the property of foreigners in Peru.

I also wish to call particular attention to a case relative to the will of an Englishwoman dying in France, which was submitted to the Imperial Court on or about the 14th of June last.

An unmarried lady named Kelly died at Versailles, in which place she had resided for some years.

The Prerogative Court of Canterbury, in England, decreed that the property of the lady be taken by Mr. Wassal, who was the executor, and should be distributed by him according to the will. That gentleman called upon the French Domaine to give up the property to him, but that department refused.

An action was brought before the civil tribunal at Versailles, by Mr. Wassal, as testamentary executor. The Court postponed its decision until Mr. Wassal should produce some information, which he did not consider himself bound to do, and appealed to the Imperial Court, which Court gave judgment as follows:—

"Although Miss Kelly was proved to have resided in France 25 years, she had never been naturalised, nor even domiciled, and consequently, as regards her property, she was under the law of England."

I fear that many of the salient points of the case have been lost sight of on account of the lengthy correspondence rendered necessary by the various phases which the case has assumed, owing to the tortuous policy pursued by the Peruvian Government.

Of the accompanying articles, extracted from the Civil Code of Peru, Nos. 5, 33, 41, and 694 refer more particularly to the illegality of the acts of the Peruvian Authorities, and their conduct towards me when in the execution of my duty as executor to British property, in conformity with the orders and instructions of Her Majesty's Courts; Nos. 759, 1326, 1327, and 1359 refer to the property belonging to the estate of the late Michael Winder, now in possession of different persons in Lima. I have to request you will be pleased to call the special attention of Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to those Articles.

I beg to thank you most sincerely for the interest and trouble you have taken in this business during the last fortnight, and also for your kindness and attention since I have enjoyed your hospitality and protection under the flag of this Legation.

I have, &c.

(No. 6.)

The Right Honourable Earl Russell to Mr. Barton.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 16 October 1861.

I HAVE consulted the law officers of the Crown on your Despatches Nos. 3, 8, 9, and 10, of the 14th and 29th of August, respecting Mr. Carvell's position at Lima; and I have to state to you that they do not in any way alter my views on this case, as stated in my Despatch No. 31, of the 31st of July.

The only new fact of any importance stated in these Papers is that Mr. Carvell, on being threatened with imprisonment for disobedience to an order of the Peruvian Court, whose jurisdiction and authority he still refuses to acknowledge, took refuge in the French Legation, where, by the last account, he was secure from molestation.

The only observation that I have to make on that point is, that you would not have been authorised to afford such asylum to Mr. Carvell with a view of enabling him to evade obedience to the Peruvian Courts in a matter in regard to which, whatever may be the conduct of certain parties in Peru, Her Majesty's Government has not a legal right to interfere.

I have further to state to you, that I approve of your having declined to accede to Captain Carvell's request that he might be allowed to redeposit the property in dispute in the British Legation.

It is evident, from all Mr. Carvell's letters, that he has never correctly understood his own position. He mistakes the nature of a British probate, and erroneously imagines himself to be exempted by it from Peruvian jurisdiction, on the ground that he is "the delegate of Her Majesty's Courts." While Mr. Carvell asserts a position so entirely untenable, it is not easy to disengage any real ground of complaint which he may have, on the score of the malversation of the Peruvian officials, from the obvious difficulties in which he has placed himself by denying a legal jurisdiction.

With regard to the opinion which appears to be entertained by some of the Diplomatic Corps at Lima, I have to observe that the question of jurisdiction, and the question of the law by which the succession of a British subject dying possessed of moveable property abroad ought to be regulated, have been confounded. The latter question ought to be determined according to the law of the deceased person's domicile; but the determination of it, as regards all moveable property situate and brought into litigation in Peru, rests with the Peruvian Courts.

You will continue carefully to watch the proceedings in this case, and report to me thereupon from time to time.

There is, however, a further view of the question, apart from strict considerations of International Law. It appears that the administration of the law in Peru is so defective, that what ought to be a simple detention of the person is often perverted into a vindictive imprisonment of an individual, to the injury of his health, and even to the danger of his life.

In consideration of these exceptional circumstances, I approve of your having received Mr. Carvell into your custody, as stated in your Despatch No. 11, of the 10th instant; but it must be clearly understood that his residence in your premises is intended only to secure him from arrest and illtreatment, and is in no other manner to affect the decision of the main question, which, as explained in this Despatch, belongs to the tribunals of Peru.

I am, &c.

The Right Honourable Earl Russell to Mr. Barton.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 13 November 1861.

I HAVE to state to you that Colonel The O'Gorman Mahon, M.P., having called my attention to the case of Captain Carvell, I requested Her Majesty's law officers to place themselves in communication with him, in order that they might avail themselves of such verbal explanations and statements as The O'Gorman Mahon might have to offer in support of Captain Carvell's case.

The law officers have, in consequence, entered into a full discussion of the matter with The O'Gorman Mahon, and they inform me that the facts stated to them are not such as to alter the opinions they have already expressed on the case, and on which my instructions to Mr. Jerningham have been founded.

The law officers also inform me that, as they understand from The O'Gorman Mahon, there are at least nine different suits or proceedings pending in Peru in relation to the effects of the late Mr. Winder, in eight of which Captain Carvell does not deny the jurisdiction of the Peruvian Courts, and that the ninth appears to them to stand on the same footing in this respect.

No. 2.

Enclosure 1, in No. 19.

Sir,

British Legation, Lima, 5 November 1861.

I HAVE the honour to enclose copy of a letter I received, a few days since, from Mr. Henry who is acting for me, by power of attorney, touching my affairs here.

Before and since the receipt of Mr. Henry's letter I endeavoured to get some lawyer, among those reputed to be the best in Lima, to conduct my case, and defend my interests, before the Supreme Court; but I have been altogether unsuccessful.

After my case had been shamefully abandoned, at a most critical moment, by Dr. Tejada (the lawyer who first had charge of it), I induced Dr. Gutierrez to take the cause in charge, and for a few weeks he showed energy and determination in conducting it; but I regret to state that he (Dr. Gutierrez) has also succumbed, either to the cajolery or intimidation of the Peruvian authorities, and has of late shown himself inimical to the interests I represent, and, as my lawyer, has committed three distinct acts, greatly to my prejudice, so that, in self-defence, I have been obliged to decline having any more to do with him.

The cause was tried yesterday before the Supreme Court, and all my attempts to get a lawyer to take up and defend my interests, to demand justice, and maintain the majesty of the law before the said Court were frustrated by some secret influence of the Peruvian authorities.

It seems scarcely credible that, in a country professing to be civilized, I could not find a lawyer of any considerable social standing or ability to prosecute my just rights, and to demand from the highest legal tribunal in Peru the impartial administration of the law, in a question involving the robbery and loss of nearly half-a-million dollars of British property, belonging to minors.

The excuses offered by the lawyers were various: some said they had formerly been on terms of intimacy with Manuel Winder, and, whilst expressing themselves warmly against the atrocious crime committed by him and his accomplices, begged to be excused from having anything to do with the case; others stated that it would not be patriotic to employ their talents against a Peruvian in support of a foreigner; others there were who expressed their willingness to take up so clear and plain a case, if they were free to act, but, with reference to their future prospects in their profession, stated they would be absolutely ruined if found taking part against the views entertained by the Government authorities here—the determined hostility of the Peruvian Government towards me being notorious. Yet Manuel Winder, an absconded felon, against whom an order of imprisonment has existed for over eight months, is allowed to be represented by a person holding his power of attorney, bearing date 23d February 1861, the very day on which he disappeared, and is also allowed to appear by his lawyer before the Courts.

It is matter of notoriety that Manuel Winder is at this moment concealed in the house of one of his accomplices in the crime committed, occasionally changing his residence to an adjacent convent, for the benefit of exercise in the grounds thereunto belonging.

The order for his imprisonment, given by and signed by Judge Carrillo (one of the criminal judges of Lima), has not been carried out, and has proved to be of no more value than the paper on which it is written; and yet the Peruvian Government have frequently expressed to the Government of Her Majesty their wish to afford justice to foreigners, more particularly to those being subjects of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain.

The hollowness and mockery of such promises are so apparent, that I trust Her Majesty's Government will readily recognise the bad faith which has characterised the conduct of the authorities of Peru.

Enclosure 2, in No. 19.

Monsieur,

Mardi soir, le 22 Octobre 1861.

J'ai le regret de vous annoncer que, malgré toutes les démarches que j'ai faites, et tous les efforts que j'ai tentés, il m'a été absolument impossible jusqu'à présent de trouver parmi les membres distingués du bureau de Lima, un avocat qui veuille bien se charger de présenter la défense verbale de votre affaire devant la Cour Suprême.

Ceux mêmes sur qui nous comptions le plus, nous ont lâchement abandonné au moment de l'action.

Vous savez combien nous avions crû de bonne foi en la promesse de Monsieur Cisneros; il a refusé; Monsieur Loaysa en a fait de même; Tejada, Albertini et consorts en ont fait de même; d'autres m'ont témoigné des dispositions presque hostiles. Monsieur Arenas, comme associé de Monsieur Loaysa, n'a pu que faire comme lui, malgré son incontestable talent; il n'était pas propre à développer cet exposé verbal; tout le reste m'a paru très froid, et j'en conclus que ces gens là ont peur de se compromettre en s'occupant de votre affaire.

J'opine qu'il sera plus sûr et plus prudent de faire vous-même un informe écrit auquel nous pourrions ajouter toutes les preuves qui tout récemment encore sont venues à l'appui de votre droit, et présenter à tout hazard cet informe écrit à la Cour Suprême; si la cour a encore un certain fonds de pudeur, et veut bien vous faire justice, votre relation écrite aura tout le succès qu'aurait un exposé verbal; le principal en tout ceci, c'est qu'on veuille bien oublier un peu que vous êtes Anglais, et vous faire justice absolument comme si vous étiez un sang pur descendant de feu Manco-Capac. Réfléchissez d'ici demain; car il faut vous reveil le matin avec une bonne et décisive détermination.

A vous de cœur,

(No. 32.)

Mr. Barton to the Right Honourable Earl Russell.

My Lord,

British Legation, Lima, 29 November 1861.

In conformity with the instructions contained in your Lordship's Despatch, No. 6, of the 16th October last, "to continue carefully to watch the proceedings in this case (Captain Carvell), and to report to me thereupon from time to time," I have the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship copies of two letters received from Captain Carvell, with their enclosures, as only through him am I enabled to get any information regarding the proceedings in his case.

In the letter marked No. 1, Mr. Carvell states that "the conduct of the French Chargé d'Affaires in affording me asylum and protection has been approved of by the Government of the Emperor of the French;" but I consider it expedient to transcribe the exact terms of said approval for your Lordship's information, which terms were sent to me by Monsieur de Lesseps in a private note, dated the 19th of November; they are as follows:—

"M. de Thouvenel me dit en propres termes,

"Monsieur: J'ai reçu les dépêches que vous m'avez fait l'honneur de m'écrire jusqu'au No. 33. Il m'a paru que dans l'incident relatif à Mr. Henry de Wolfe Carvell, vous aviez, autant que les circonstances de cette affaire vous le permettaient, concilié toutes les convenances."

In my Despatch, No. 19, of the 29th of September last, I informed your Lordship that Mr. Carvell had named an "apoderado," and I now beg to acquaint your Lordship that the Judge "Gamboa" has, at the request of the Widow Winder, refused to admit the party named.

The criminal suit against Manuel Winder has been decided against him in the "Corte Superior," and the Judge Carrillo has been ordered to condemn him, against whom Manuel Winder has appealed; but as the sentence of the Supreme Court has not yet been sent to Captain Carvell, I cannot furnish your Lordship with the full particulars at present.

I presume I am not to consider Mr. Carvell as a prisoner, although your Lordship has used the word "custody" in approving of my having received Mr. Carvell into the Legation.

I will take leave to state to your Lordship that, in all human probability, the lawsuit between Mr. Carvell and the Widow Winder will last for several months, and possibly for years.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 20.

Monsieur le Capitaine,

Lima, 29 Septembre 1861.

J'AI reçu la lettre que vous m'adressiez le 19 de ce mois en me remerciant de l'asile que vous avez trouvé dans la Chancellerie de France à l'époque où l'Honorable Monsieur Barton, n'avait pas encore été reconnu comme Agent Diplomatique de votre Gracieuse Souveraine; car il ne vous était pas permis alors de vous réfugier sous votre propre bannière, pour vous soustraire au décret d'arrestation rendu contre vous, et qui compromettait à la fois vos jours et votre liberté.

Tout

Tout en vous remerciant avec effusion des termes flatteurs qu'emprunte votre reconnaissance, et en rendant hommage aux sentimens qui les ont dictés, vous me permettez, Monsieur, de ne pas les accepter dans toute leur étendue. Notre rôle en pareille circonstance, nous était rigoureusement indiqué; d'un côté, par l'intime et solide alliance qui unit nos puissans Souverains et nos deux nations. N'était-ce pas en l'absence d'un représentant accrédité de l'Angleterre à l'agent de l'Empereur que revenait l'honneur et le devoir de protéger et de défendre les intérêts et les droits de vos compatriotes? d'autre part, ne donnions nous pas un nouveau gage de nos sentimens envers le Pérou que nous servions au risque de lui déplaire, en rendant impossible l'exécution d'un jugement sans base comme sans motif qui n'est que l'erreur de juges oublieux des principes les plus élémentaires du droit des gens. Ni gouvernement ni tribunaux ne pouvaient s'immiscer dans des actes passés en Chancellerie entre un chef de mission et son administré, sans violer le privilège de la juridiction personnelle, consacrée par la pratique universelle, et par l'unanimité des publicistes sur la matière. Un but multiple était donc atteint, défendre un droit dont le corps diplomatique était solidaire, et qu'il s'est empressé de réclamer dès qu'il l'a vu méconnu, sauvegarder votre existence menacée au dire des gens de l'art les plus autorisés, enfin, épargner au Pérou une dangereuse responsabilité, si vous eussiez succombé dans ses prisons. Cet événement devenait le point de départ d'accusations aussi graves que méritées de votre Cabinet contre celui de Lima, d'autant plus compromis qu'il avait été officiellement averti de la gravité attestée de votre maladie comme des conséquences mortelles d'une incarcération.

D'après cela, Monsieur, rien de plus naturel que vous trouviez un refuge sous le pavillon Français. L'alliance de nos pays, l'humanité, le droit, et notre bon vouloir envers le Gouvernement du Général Castilla, tout semblait s'être réuni pour l'expliquer et le justifier.

Passons maintenant, Monsieur, à un autre point important sur lequel je serais heureux d'être également d'accord avec vous. Tandis que vous paraissiez croire que le Gouvernement Péruvien s'est fait le complaisant exécuter des décisions erronées de juges, la preuve du contraire ne ressort-elle pas du silence et de l'inaction de l'autorité qui ne vous a jamais réclamé à l'époque où vous étiez sous notre pavillon?

Veuillez croire que dans mes communications fréquentes à votre sujet, il n'a rien été dit qui révélât les intentions attribuées au Gouvernement Péruvien. Je me plais à espérer que vous en serez convaincu le jour prochain où vous devrez aux démarches de Monsieur Barton, qui défend votre cause d'une main aussi ferme que mesurée, la faculté de rétablir votre santé sous un autre climat moins contraire à l'affection dont vous êtes atteint. J'apprendrais donc avec plaisir pour vous, comme pour les autorités Péruviennes, qu'elles vous eussent accordé l'autorisation que réclament vos souffrances.

Je termine en vous assurant que je suis profondément pénétré des souhaits que vous formez pour ma carrière; je vous les rends bien sincèrement en faisant des vœux pour le rétablissement de votre santé et le succès de votre procès.

Recevez, Monsieur, l'assurance de toute mon estime, et de mes sentimens les plus dévoués.

Monsieur Henry de Wolfe Carvell, Capitaine au Service de Sa Majesté, la Reine
de la Grande Bretagne.

Enclosure 2, in No. 20.

Sir,

British Legation, Lima, 25 November 1861.

I HAVE the honour to enclose copy of a letter I received some time since from Monsieur Edmond de Lesseps, the French Chargé d'Affaires accredited to Peru.

At the time the letter was written, Monsieur Edmond de Lesseps felt assured the Peruvian Government would speedily correct the errors and wrongs arising out of either the ignorance or perversity of the Peruvian judicial authorities.

In that expectation, Monsieur de Lesseps has been mistaken, and the illegal proceedings against me are still permitted.

The conduct of the French Chargé d'Affaires, in affording me asylum and protection from the wrongs and injustice to which I was exposed, on account of the illegal proceedings of the Peruvian Courts, has been approved of by the Government of the Emperor of the French.

Monsieur de Lesseps, from having fully discussed my affairs here with Mr. Jerningham, was in a position to thoroughly understand them, when he stepped between me and the Peruvian authorities to prevent the execution of an unjust sentence.

I forbear to make any comments on the letter, as his opinions are clearly expressed therein, but merely observe that his (Monsieur de Lesseps) anticipations that the Peruvian Government would correct the abuses from which I was being so victimised, have not been realised.

I have to request you will be pleased to draw the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the enclosed letter.

I have, &c.

P.S.—I have the permission of Monsieur de Lesseps to make use of his letter.

John Barron, Esq.,
Her Britannic Majesty's Acting Chargé d'Affaires,
&c. &c. &c.

Sir,

British Legation, Lima, 27 November 1861.

I HAVE the honour to enclose the accompanying documents, marked respectively (A.) (B.) and (C.) which clearly and manifestly establish the injustice to which I have been subjected by the ignorance and hostility of a Peruvian judge.

The Judge Gamboa, of whom I have so much to complain, has violated at the same time the laws of this country and those recognised and practised by civilised nations as "international law." He has violated the laws of Peru, in suspending the effects of the will of the late Mr. Michael Winder (a British subject), and placing interdiction on me as executor thereof, in opposition to Article 792 of the "Codigo de Enjuiciamientos," which says, "La nulidad deducida no suspende los efectos del instrumenta."

Other laws, and the practice of this country, fully show the illegality of the proceedings of this judge. He has violated the principles of "le droit des gens," in placing an interdiction on me as executor to the will of a British subject, made and proved in England, in due conformity with the requirements of English law, it being fully and thoroughly established by all writers of eminence on international law (of whom more than forty can be quoted), that Judge Gamboa was incompetent to revoke or suspend the effects of the will of a British subject, dying and domiciled in England; and the accompanying consultations and opinions of the first jurists in Peru condemn the proceedings of Judge Gamboa as illegal.

By placing interdiction on me, as executor, the judge has suspended the effects of the will, and attacked its validity; yet, according to the law of this country, he should first have declared the will null and void before he could lawfully place interdiction against me, or attempt to revoke the power conferred upon me in a public instrument by an English Court.

On the 13th March last, this judge, on the mere application of Mrs. Winder, who was not even named executrix, launched an order of interdiction against me, accompanied by an order of arrest, and taking from under my care and charge the testator's legitimate son, Michael (a minor), of whom I was named guardian in the will, and approved of by the Court in England, my offence seemingly consisting in having received letters of administration from the Court of Probate of England, and presented them in this country, as I had not at that time received one farthing of the property, which was subsequently handed me by Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, the Honourable William Stafford Jerningham.

The laws of this country state that an inventory should at once be taken of the estate of a person deceased. I applied for such inventory, in conformity with the law, on the 25th of February last, but it has not been granted up to this date. Yet, Mrs. Winder has been placed in possession of various houses in this city belonging to the estate, and is recovering the rents arising from them, such a proceeding, previous to an inventory, being in direct opposition to the written laws of this country.

Indeed, so numerous are the arbitrary and unlawful acts which have been practised, that, to refer to them here would be to defeat the object of this letter, which is that of bringing the accompanying consultations under the special notice of Her Majesty's Government.

The paper marked (A.) is the result of a consultation held by the late the Right Honourable the Attorney-General for the Crown, Sir Richard Bethell, and Mr. George Druce, of Lincoln's-inn, having deemed it necessary, before leaving England in January last, to have the best advice as to my power and duties as executor, and the mode of procedure, as such, to the large estate of my late father-in-law.

The opinion of Sir Richard Bethell and Mr. Druce was confirmed by the Court of Probate at Westminster (Sir Cresswell Cresswell presiding), and letters of administration granted me by the said court.

The paper marked (B.) is a consultation held by the lawyers, Doctors Don Antonio Arenas, Don Luciano Benjamin Cisneros, and Don José T. Loayza.

Dr. Arenas is considered to be the most profound lawyer in Peru, enjoying the highest social position, his high character and integrity being recognised by all. He is President of the "Comision Permanente Legislativa," a body appointed by Congress to guard the interests of the country during the recess, and was formerly Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Dr.

Dr. Cisneros is a very distinguished lawyer, and after Dr. Arenas, is considered the best at the Peruvian bar. He is Professor of "le Droit des Gens" (international law) at the National University of San Carlos in Lima, where he holds the Professor's chair in that branch of the University.

Of the third, Dr. Loayza, I know nothing more than that he is considered a respectable and able jurist.

The paper marked (C.) is the result of a consultation on one of the several questions submitted to Dr. Don Coribio Pacheco, and Dr. Don José Ciriaco Hurtado. The first is a very eminent jurist, and an author who has written learnedly on jurisprudence and international law.

I have consulted those gentlemen referred to as being the most eminent; but there are many others, or, in fact, I believe all the respectable portion of those gentlemen who compose the Peruvian bar, are of the same opinion.

I feel assured that I must have hitherto failed in making this case intelligible to Her Majesty's Government, or the law officers of the Crown, judging from the results of the information I have already afforded.

By attempting to deal with the numerous phases of the case, which rapidly succeeded each other, and to follow the tortuous and incomprehensible conduct of the Peruvian authorities in this matter, I fear I may have, in so large a correspondence, somewhat departed from and lost the kernel of the main question, that of "interdiction" pronounced against me; a fault which I have endeavoured to correct in this communication, more particularly in reference to the said "interdiction," which the first jurists in this country declare to be illegal, as will be seen on reference to the enclosed documents, and which I trust may serve to elucidate the question.

I have, &c.
(signed) Henry de Wolfe Carvell.

Note—You will please observe that these opinions are given by the same parties who declined to defend me in Court.

John Barton, Esq.,
Her Britannic Majesty's Acting Chargé d'Affaires,
&c. &c. &c., Lima.

ON the part of Mr. Carvell, the executor, the opinion of Mr. Attorney General and Mr. Druce, in consultation, is requested upon the following questions:—

1st. Whether the Consolidated Bonds of the Peruvian Government, belonging to the testator in Peru, are comprehended within the gifts contained in his Lima will of "Cash belonging to him, and in deposit at his Lima house;" or, "of all the other documents of amounts owing him, such as that of Reborg, Dartnell, and others;" or are to be considered as altogether undisposed of by that will?

2d. If it should be considered that the Lima will has no operation upon the Consolidated Bonds, whether they fall into the general residue of the testator's property given by his English will, dated the 12th June 1860, or are to be dealt with as altogether undisposed of by him, as in the case of an intestacy?

And,—

3d. Whether the testator's Lima will is to be construed according to English law, and his estate in Peru be administered according to that law, or according to the law of Peru?

1st. We are of opinion that, according to the true construction of the Lima will, the testator's consolidated Bonds of the Peruvian Government are not comprehended in the gifts above referred to, but are undisposed of by that instrument.

2d. We are of opinion, that the Consolidated Bonds, and all other the testator's moveable property, as well as that in Lima or elsewhere, not effectually disposed of by the Lima will, are comprised in, and pass by the residuary bequest contained in the English will of 12th June 1860.

3d. The law of Peru must regulate the disposition of the testator's real estate situate in that country. As regards the testator's moveable property; both wills, when proved, will have to be construed, and the testator's personal estate will have to be administered, according to the law of the testator's domicile, which was clearly English.

The will called the Lima will must be proved in this country.

(B.)

Mr. Henry de Wolfe Carvell.

THE undersigned, Doctors of Law having attentively examined the grave questions which you have submitted for their consideration, relative to the will of the late Mr. Michael Winder, after a lengthened discussion on the matter, in which they have endeavoured impartially to discover the truth, now proceed to remit you their opinions, responding in this manner to the confidence which has been manifested by you in their integrity and professional knowledge.

The undersigned are of opinion,—that the bonds of the Consolidated Internal Debt, even if considered as bonds to bearer when endorsed in blank by the persons in whose favour they were issued, are not subject to such condition so long as the endorsement of the first owners be given in favour of a particular person. In this last case, the bonds cannot be prejudiced nor disposed of, unless by the endorsee himself, or by one whom he may have sufficiently authorised to dispose of them. This rule is founded on the legal dispositions (natural fitness), and on the juridical doctrines, which protect the right of property. The rights which constitute the control of a thing cannot be transferred to another person, neither in whole nor in part, unless by the consent of the owner himself; and in a case in which those bonds are endorsed in favour of a particular person, the owner is not any person or holder, but solely the endorsee. To suppose that against the will of the latter a disposal of them could be effected, is to overthrow the whole theory of right, and confound endorsements in favour of particular persons with those which are general and undetermined, in which the endorser agrees to transfer his rights to the holder of the bonds.

The undersigned Doctors of Law, in virtue of the above considerations, and that Mr. Manuel Winder did not obtain from his father, Mr. Michael Winder, power to dispose of the bonds, are of opinion: that the alienations made by the said Mr. Manuel Winder are not legitimate, it being the right of the other inheritors of the said Mr. Michael Winder to claim the said bonds from the actual holders.

You likewise ask us whether the will made by Mr. Michael Winder, in England, and invested with all the formalities and requirements which the English law demands, is of any value.

The answer seems to us very simple. The solemnities of a will are those which are determined by the law of the testator's domicile, excepting the requisites to prove its authority, which the law of the country may demand, where it may have to produce its effects. According to this principle, the will under consideration must be reputed valid as regards its requirements, if the formalities have been observed, which are designed for such acts by the English law.

Consequently, those who appear named as executors in that testamentary disposition are authorised to exercise their functions in Peru, notwithstanding that certain clauses of the will be contested by any of the heirs.

As regards the question which you address us, relative to the claims made by Mrs. Carmen Lored, for the delivery to her of one-half of the total of the property, the undersigned think it unnecessary to detain themselves in considering whether Mrs. Winder, by the mere fact of her marriage with Mr. Winder (an Englishman), has lost her nationality; because, the laws of this Republic, which concede to married women the right over one-half of the property which has been acquired during the matrimony, does not exact the quality of being Peruvians.

It being, however, a rule of international law, that moveable property is subject to the law of domicile, and the immoveable to that of the country where it may be situated, the undersigned do not hesitate to affirm, that to Doña Carmen belongs, without any dispute, one-half of the immoveable property existing in Peru, whether it appears as having been bought by herself, or by her husband, Mr. Michael Winder; and, as regards the moveable property, the dispositions of the testator must be complied with.

Lima, 25 October 1861.

SECOND QUESTION.

Is a will valid which is made in a foreign country, with the formalities required by the law of that country? Can the executor instituted in that will be deprived of his office solely on account of the testament or will being objected to as null?

To resolve the first of these two points, we have in our codes very clear and definite laws.

The Article 679 of the Civil Code declares a will to be valid made by a Peruvian in a foreign country, either before a Diplomatic or a Consular Agent, according to the dispositions of that code, and in the forms established by the laws of the country where the testator may be.

Therefore, by induction, the will of a foreigner made in his native country, and according to law, will likewise be valid.

What this means is, that a Peruvian shall have, in a foreign country, two ways of making his will, whilst the native shall only have one. It is superfluous having recourse to inductions in this matter.

A will is a public instrument, and, according to Articles 810 and 811 of the Code of Procedure (Codigo de Enjuiciamientos), public documents made in a foreign country ought to be received in good faith in judicature (hacen fé enjuicio), so long as they have been certified at a Peruvian Legation or Consulate existing in that country, or at the office of Foreign Affairs of Peru. Consequently, if the will made by Mr. Winder in England, according to the formalities prescribed by the English law, be duly certified, it must be received in full faith (plena fé) in judicature; only the fact of its not being duly attested could reduce it to the class of a private document. Furnished with that requisite, and notwithstanding it may be objected to as null, its effects must not be suspended during the proceedings on the question of nullity. The Article 729 of the Code of Procedure (Codigo de Enjuiciamientos) orders and so disposes.

We now come to the second point, that is, to know if the nullity of a will be simply deduced, can the executor of that same will be deprived of his office before the nullity be declared? It must categorically be answered—No.

The naming of an executor, and the exercise of his functions, are effects of the will itself; and, since the law declares that a public document must produce its effects, notwithstanding the nullity deduced, it is likewise very clear that the executor named in it shall be considered as such, and that he shall continue in the exercise of his functions, so long as the lawsuit about the nullity may last; and only in the case of its being declared null, shall he cease to be executor.

To suspend the exercise of his functions, it must first be necessary to deny his office as executor; that is to say, if in case of two or more individuals being designated as executors, it was required to know to which of them devolved the charge; in this case the question of the executorship can be discussed before that of nullity, or even both together.

Mr. Barton to the Right Honourable Earl Russell.

My Lord,

British Legation, Lima,
14 January 1862.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship copies of two letters received from Captain Carvell, at the last moment, although dated the 13th instant, which, as he is very anxious to have forwarded by the present mail, I forward without any comments.

No. 3.

Enclosure 1, in No. 21.

Sir,

Lima, 13 January 1862.

I HAVE the honour to state, for the information of Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, that I send home by this mail, certified copies of the proceedings of the Peruvian courts of law against me, as executor to the estate of the late Mr. Winder.

The proceedings in the case of the demand (by Mrs. Winder) have passed the Supreme Court, so that I have no further appeal in this country.

The best and most respectable lawyers here declare the proceedings taken against me illegal, and I doubt not but that the law officers of the Crown will not only pronounce them illegal, but an outrage on the law and comity of nations as understood and practised by civilized States.

Since my arrival in Lima I have been the victim of mere caprice on the part of Peruvian authorities, and not treated as a person prosecuting and defending his rights before legal tribunals.

I will not here enter into the long series of wrongs and the injustice I have suffered since my arrival in Peru; some of these have been already recorded in former correspondence. Suffice it, for the present, to say that I have been 10 months confined as a prisoner to the city of Lima, the last five of which in close confinement, and this to avoid a loathsome imprisonment in a Peruvian gaol, arising out of unjust and unjustifiable proceedings on the part of the authorities of this Republic.

It is almost superfluous to add, that my eyes are anxiously turned to my own Government for deliverance from the cruelty and injustice practised towards me by the Peruvian authorities, and which I have borne for so many long and weary months.

Before leaving London I consulted the late Attorney General (Sir R. Bethell) as to my duties, and the manner in which I was to perform them. I remarked that, "I hoped I should not meet with any difficulties, but that South American Republics generally, and Peru in particular, were notorious for the bad faith and venality of their judicial and executive authorities." He replied, "If we have to deal with a civilized people in a transaction so clear, there can be neither delay nor difficulty; but should they act as barbarians, Her Majesty's Government will know how to treat them."

Sir, they have acted as barbarians, and I hope the words of the late Attorney General may be verified.

I beg to add, that Señor Olivares, the judge who had been from the commencement directed by the executive authorities to afford me the necessary judicial assistance in the case, and who sent to me for the will on the 26th February (to whom it was on that day delivered), has been superseded, and another judge nominated in his place, at the request and on the instigation of Mrs. Winder, a family relative of Señor Melgar (Minister for Foreign Affairs at that time), to whom he accorded a lengthened interview at the Foreign Office immediately after he had bluntly and coarsely refused to see me when I called on the same business.

One of my counsel, Señor Albertini, having been sent for and spoken to by Señor Melgar, afterwards informed me that he could no longer protect my rights nor afford me assistance, as his own ruin would be the consequence of his doing so. Señor Fejedo resigned from intimidation, and repeated the same thing, that he should be ruined, &c. Thus I have been deprived of the assistance of the most respectable lawyers of this wretched country.

I have endeavoured for the last four months to get some lawyer of ability and respectable standing to prosecute and defend my interests. I have applied to seven or eight, and have been refused; they acknowledged the hardship of my case, and that it was clear that I had been, and was being, treated most unjustly, but they must decline publicly lending me their support. When pressed for reasons for so extraordinary a proceeding, they made various pleas. Some said it would not be patriotic to defend a foreigner against native interests: some said that on account of the illegalities hitherto practised by the Peruvian judges in this case, that it must become a diplomatic and international question, and they would not take a part against their own Government. They all seem to have received the "mot d'ordre" from the executive authorities, and I cannot get any assistance in consequence.

These matters have now reached a position from whence I have no appeal but to my own Government, and to that Government I do hereby formally appeal, sending home the judicial proceedings, and humbly asking for that justice to which, as a loyal and faithful British subject, I am entitled.

Enclosure 2, in No. 21.

Sir,

British Legation, Lima, 13 January 1862.

I HAVE the honour to state, with reference to a paragraph in Earl Russell's Despatch stating that there were "nine lawsuits against the late Mr. Winder's estate," that this is an error, as there is no lawsuit against the estate, with the exception of one claim for the trifling sum of 700 L., and this made by a man for a deposit left with Manuel Winder, and after after he absconded he made his claim against the executors, for a transaction which was purely personal between himself and Manuel Winder. The estate does not owe one dollar, but there are large sums owing to it. It is true that after the detected concealment of Manuel Winder in the house of Judge Ponce, the latter sent a person to make some fabulous claim. He came to me, and before he left he acknowledged before several witnesses that he had no claim, but had been advised by Judge Ponce to make one! He seemed ashamed of himself, and went away, and that was the last I heard of him or of his claim.

There are two bonâ fide lawsuits in this case: the criminal one against Manuel Winder, and the suit instituted by Mrs. Winder to have the will declared null and void, myself placed under interdiction as executor, &c. The others are mere incidents, and, with the exception of my application for inventories and my complaint against Judge Ponce, were merely got up to create embarrassments, and being without foundation and mere absurdity, were not proceeded with.

I beg to enclose a list of the two bonâ fide lawsuits, and the incidents arising out of them.

Enclosure 3, in No. 21.

No. 1. Lawsuit instituted by the widow to declare null and void the will of Michael Winder, Esq. Sentence of interdiction and arrest against Henry Wolfe Carvell, Esq., and deposit of bonds held by him. Before Dr. Emmanuel German Gamboa.

No. 2. Criminal lawsuit instituted against Manuel Winder for robbery, by Henry Wolfe Carvell, Esq., before the Judge, Dr. William Carrillo.

No. 3. Proceedings regarding inventories, instituted by Henry Wolfe Carvell, Esq., before Judge Dr. Emmanuel Olivares.

No. 4. Proceedings regarding inventories, instituted by Mrs. Carmen Lorea Winder, before Judge Dr. Simon Gregorio Parades.

No. 5. Proceedings regarding inventories, begun by John Michael Winder, Esq., before Judge Dr. Emmanuel German Gamboa.

No. 6. Proceedings instituted by Dr. Luis Ponce, regarding the forcible entrance of his dwelling-house, which he imputes to Mr. Carvell. Before Judge Dr. Mariano Dorado.

No. 7. Proceedings instituted by Mr. Carvell against Dr. Louis Ponce for armed resistance to judicial authority, before Judge Dr. William Carrillo.

No. 8. Proceedings instituted by Mr. John Vincent Canacho, representative of Manuel Winder, against Mr. Carvell, for an advertisement published in the papers. Before Judge Dr. Luis Ponce.

No. 9. Another separate suit has been instituted, regarding "interdiction"; entitling it "restitution."

The above is a list of the lawsuits, and the incidents arising therefrom, handed me by the procurador, some six months ago.

The criminal prosecution against Manuel Winder, and the suit of Mrs. Winder against myself and the will, have been proceeded with. The others have not been followed up, and died from lack of vitality, being spurious causes, got up to create embarrassments, with the exception of my application to Judge Olivares for inventories.

Foreign Office, 16 January 1862.

WITH reference to your Despatch No. 32, I have to state to you that it gives no new reasons for the interference of Her Majesty's Government in Captain Carvell's case, either in regard to the general question raised and pending before the Peruvian courts, or as regards Captain Carvell's complaints against the proceedings proceedings and decisions of those courts in matters pending before them, and within their jurisdiction.

Mr. Barton to the Right Honourable Earl Russell.

British Legation, Lima,
27 January 1862.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship copy of a letter received this day from Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell, as also copies and translations of a letter addressed by his lawyer, escribano, Don Diego L. Aliaga, to the commercial house of Messrs. Zaracondegui & Co., with their reply.

By these documents your Lordship will perceive that the order issued by Judge Gamboa on the 13th of March 1861, and presented both to the widow of the deceased Mr. Winder and to Captain Carvell, "to deposit in the hands of Messrs. Zaracondegui & Co. any amounts belonging to the estate of the deceased Michael Winder," was carried out only against Captain Carvell, who is a foreigner, and from the effects of which he escaped from being thrown into prison, by seeking an asylum in the French Legation, but had no effect whatever against the widow Winder, a Peruvian, as is clearly proved by the answer given to Mr. Aliaga's note by Messrs. Zaracondegui & Co., who declare "that they have no knowledge whatever of the deposit referred to in Mr. Aliaga's letter."

The Earl Russell,
&c. &c. &c.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 23.

British Legation, Lima,
27 January 1862.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to enclose copies of certified copies of original documents presented before you at this Legation.

When, on the 13th March, of last year, Judge Gamboa issued his decrees against me, in the same document was one ordering the property of the late Michael Winder to be deposited in the commercial house of Zaracondegui & Co., deducting therefrom the sum of (200 dollars) two hundred dollars per month, as maintenance for Mrs. Winder (monthly).

I was informed by the highest legal authorities in Peru (in consultation assembled) that the proceedings and decrees of the judge were unjust, and not only a violation of international law, but also a flagrant violation of the laws of Peru.

It has long since become apparent that those decrees were issued in "bad faith," and that they were only intended to be carried out in so far as they might be prejudicial to me.

When, however, the authorities, both executive and judicial, had shown so much zeal in hurrying me to prison for non-compliance with their orders, I naturally supposed that their decree touching the deposit above alluded to, had in all other respects been strictly carried out.

The accompanying documents show that not one farthing has been deposited, and that the house of Zaracondegui & Co. know absolutely nothing about such deposit, or the order for such deposit.

Mrs. Winder, since the month of April last, inclusive, has been collecting the rents on the several houses belonging to the estate, also interests on documents, such as notes of hand, &c., even collecting the interest on documents left as legacies to some of the late Mr. Winder's employées.

She has no legal nor other right to thus set law and justice at defiance; but she is aided and abetted in these proceedings by Judge Gamboa, who has, by the connivance of the Peruvian Government, been permitted to set at nought all principles of law and justice, since the commencement of this business. The hostility of the Peruvian Government towards me is notorious. How many things may be notorious and true, yet difficult to prove to those six thousand miles distant! Much has been written on former occasions, occasions, to show the injustice and bad treatment I have met with in this country. Much more—very much more might be adduced, but I decline entering upon a recital of fresh injuries and wrongs heaped upon me, day by day and week by week, by the basest and most corrupt authorities that ever degraded and disgraced any country pretending to be civilized.

If what has been previously stated in this case has failed to create in Her Majesty's Government a sense of injury and wrong perpetrated upon a British subject, I feel that nothing which I can urge or adduce will do so.

Enclosure 2, in No. 23.

(Translation.)

Gentlemen,

Lima, 18 January 1862.

As solicitor to Henry de Wolfe Carvell, Esq., I have the honour to address myself to you, to ascertain if, in compliance with the judicial order of the 13th March of the past year, 1861, issued by the Judge of First Instance, Dr. M. G. Gamboa, there have been deposited in your house any amounts belonging to the estate of the late Michael Winder, Esq.; and also if the rents of house property and interest due the said estate have been regularly deposited and accumulated in your house, deducting from them the sole amount of two hundred dollars, monthly to be given to Mrs. Carmen Lorea for her maintenance.

I await your reply to the foregoing points, for which I shall feel obliged, and remain

Yours, &c.

Dear Sir,

Lima, 18 January 1862.

In reply to your esteemed favour, annexed hereto, we have to inform you that we have no knowledge whatever of the deposit to which you refer, nor of the property belonging to the estate of the late Michael Winder, Esq.

Having thus answered your questions,

James L. Aliaga, Esq.

We remain, &c.

(No. 27.)

Mr. Barton to the Right Honourable Earl Russell.

British Legation, Lima,
12 March 1862.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's Despatch, No. 4, of the 16th January last, requesting me to furnish your Lordship with a complete statement of the whole case of Captain H. de Wolfe Carvell, in such a way as to clearly and concisely place it before Her Majesty's Government, which I will endeavour to do in as short a manner as possible.

Captain Carvell arrived in Lima on the 18th of February 1861, having in his possession a legalized copy of the last will and testament of the late Michael Winder, a British subject; who died in England, leaving a large amount of property, in houses, bonds, money, &c. In this will the following parties are named executors:—Michael Winder, son of the deceased (when he became of age), Henry de Wolfe Carvell, George Harlewood, José Manuel Urmeneta, Manuel Winder, and Juan Miguel Winder—the two last natural sons of the deceased.

Captain H. de Wolfe Carvell was the only one to whom probate was granted by the Court at Westminster.

On the day of his arrival here, Captain Carvell waited on the widow of the testator, and the will was read over to the family, when no objection was made to it.

On the 19th Captain Carvell, accompanied by Michael Winder, Manuel Winder, Juan Miguel Winder, and Mr. Holguin, examined the books kept by Manuel Winder, and found them to agree with a ledger which Captain Carvell had brought with him from England. Captain Carvell showed to Manuel Winder a receipt, which he had also brought from England, for Peruvian Bonds, amounting to 218,000 dollars, which were deposited in the house of Messrs. Graham, Rowe, & Co., British merchants in this city, which receipt Manuel Winder placed in his pocket.

At the request of Manuel Winder further proceedings were stopped for three or four days, on the plea that he was very much affected at the death of his father.

On the 20th Captain Carvell was informed that Manuel Winder, on the previous evening, had presented to Messrs. Graham, Rowe, & Co. the receipt for the 218,000 dollars, demanding that the bonds and cash in hand should be given up to him, which Mr. Pike, the managing partner of that house, declined to do, being in doubt if Manuel Winder was the party legally authorised to demand them.

Mr. Pike, that same evening, deposited the bonds above mentioned at the British Legation.

Captain Carvell requested, from Manuel Winder, the receipt above referred to, and also desired to see the contents of the iron chest in which, according to the books, should exist Peruvian Bonds of the value of three hundred and ninety-five thousand five hundred (395,500) dollars. Manuel Winder delivered up the receipt for the Peruvian Bonds in the house of Messrs. Graham, Rowe, & Co., but declined to open the iron chest, stating that the bonds for 395,500 dollars were not in it, he having deposited them for better security in the hands of a person who was daily expected from Chili. This conduct convinced Captain Carvell that Manuel Winder was not acting honestly; he proceeded to the house of the widow, Mrs. Winder, and was informed by her that she intended to dispute the will, as by Peruvian law she was entitled to one-half of the whole of the property of her deceased husband; that the legitimate children, Michael Winder and Captain Carvell's child, Blanche Carmen Carvell, were entitled to four-fifths of the other half of the whole of the property of the deceased; and the two illegitimate sons, Manuel Winder and Juan Miguel Winder, were entitled to the remaining one-fifth of the half. The Widow Winder also stated that her son Michael and her granddaughter Blanche Carmen Carvell would be her heirs at her death, and that it was her intention to leave her property equally between them.

On the 21st Captain Carvell laid the case before the Honourable William Stafford Jerningham, and requested his interference to save the property in the hands of Manuel Winder.

On the 22d, Mr. Jerningham and Captain Carvell proceeded together to the Peruvian Foreign Office. The Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs was not there, being sick; and they were received by Señor Don Juan Ezeta, chief clerk, who, after hearing the circumstances of the case explained to him, said that he would take the necessary steps to secure the person of Manuel Winder and the property in his possession, requesting, at the same time, that Mr. Jerningham should pass an official note on the subject, which was done.

On the 23d Captain Carvell waited upon Don Juan Ezeta, who acquainted Captain Carvell that nothing could be done before the 25th of February, as the judges were visiting the prisons.

On the 25th Captain Carvell again visited the Foreign Office (having been informed that Manuel Winder had absconded), and was informed by Señor Carrasco; neither the Minister nor the Chief Clerk being at the office, that they had received information of the escape of Manuel Winder, and had issued orders for his apprehension.

Señor Carrasco then acquainted Captain Carvell that he had received instructions from Señor Melgar to inform Captain Carvell that, in future, Captain Carvell must apply to the judicial authorities, as the Government could not interfere in his case.

Captain Carvell then applied to Judges Olivares and Carrillo, in presence of Mr. Beddy, Mr. Seacome, and Señor Carrasco, who both declined giving any assistance: Captain Carvell then applied to the Intendent of Police for assistance, which was refused by Colonel Baquero in a very uncourteous manner.

On

On the 26th the foregoing information was communicated to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, the Honourable William Stafford Jerningham.

On the 27th the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs informed Mr. Jerningham that Captain Carvell's case must be brought before the Peruvian Courts; that, officially, he could not interfere further, but that every assistance that could be given should be so; and that he had issued an order to stop the payment of the interest on the Peruvian Bonds belonging to the estate of Michael Winder, as also to detain them, should they be presented for amortization.

On the 27th Judge Carrillo issued an order of "arraigo" or detention against Manuel Winder, who named Don Juan Vicente Camacho to be his attorney, and he was admitted as such by Judge Carrillo.

On the 28th Captain Carvell, fearing that Manuel Winder might get away from Peru, procured an order from Señor Melgar to the Peruvian Consul at Panama, to detain the said Manuel Winder, which order was sent to Panama by a special messenger, at an expense to Captain Carvell of 700 dollars.

On the 13th of March Judge Gamboa ordered the "arraigo" (detention) of Captain Carvell, at the request of the Widow Winder, who also demanded that the will should not be recognised as valid, and that her son (Michael Winder) should be taken out of the charge of Captain Carvell, against which Captain Carvell appealed to the Superior and Supreme Courts, both of which confirmed the sentence of Judge Gamboa.

On the 25th April orders were issued by Judge Carrillo for the apprehension of Manuel Winder, and that the bonds amortized by Miguel Pardo, Lorenzo Patroni, Pablo Perez, and José Herze, amounting to 39,000 dollars, should be replaced in the Treasury of the Public Credit.

In the month of May Captain Carvell procured from Judge Carrillo a warrant to apprehend Manuel Winder, as described in the Honourable Mr. Jerningham's Despatch, No. 22, dated the 28th of May 1861, which order was resisted by Judge Ponce.

On the 29th of July, the day after Mr. Jerningham left Peru, a sentry was placed at the door of the rooms which Captain Carvell occupied in the "Hotel Morin," for six days; when, receiving information that he would be taken and sent to the public prison ("carceletas") he sought asylum in the French Legation, where he remained until he was received at Her Majesty's Legation on the 31st August 1861.

On the 14th of September 1861, Captain Carvell applied to Judge Gamboa to have the "arraigo" raised, on account of ill-health, naming, at the same time, an attorney.

Mr. Henry, the attorney, was admitted, notification of which was ordered to be given to Mrs. Winder, who objected to him. When the "arraigo" was issued against Captain Carvell, Judge Gamboa stated in the order that Captain Carvell was to be detained until an attorney was named.

Inventory of the property has not been taken up to the present date.

The foregoing are the principal facts of the case, and I will now beg to call the attention of your Lordship to the opinion of three highly respectable Peruvian lawyers—Señor Arenas, considered as the head of the Peruvian Bar; Señor Cisneros, Professor of International Law at the College of San Carlos, and Señor Loayza—in which they pronounce that, in conformity with Peruvian law, the will of the late Mr. Winder is considered by them as valid, and that the moveable property belonging to that estate is subject to the will of the testator, as stated by those gentlemen in the enclosure marked, (B.) of Captain Carvell's letter to me dated the 27th November, forwarded in my Despatch, No. 32, of the 29th of November 1861: and, again, the opinion of the lawyers Señor Pacheco and Señor Hurtado, in regard to the validity of the will, is pronounced in the enclosure, as before mentioned, marked (C).

I have the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship copy and translation of an exposition made by two other lawyers, Señor Ramon Gutierrez Paredes and Señor Nicholas Gomez, showing the irregularities committed by the judges in this case, by which the principles of Peruvian jurisprudence have been ignored and infringed by them.

From these opinions I deduce, that neither the judges of Peru nor the Peruvian courts of law had any right over either the property or the person of the executor holding a part of that property, without previously declaring the validity or non-validity of the will in question. Besides which, it appears to me that the validity of the will was tacitly acknowledged in two instances: first, when Judge Carrillo issued an order for the apprehension of Manuel Winder; secondly, when Señor Melgar, the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, gave the like order to the Peruvian Consul at Panama to have the said Manuel Winder detained in case he should arrive at that city.

This case is still, after 12 months have elapsed, without any definite decision on the part of Judge Gamboa, to whom Mrs. Winder applied for the nullity of the will to be declared, of the Superior or the Supreme Courts, except so far as regards the criminality of Manuel Winder.

Mrs. Winder and her son, Michael Winder, are enjoying the rents of all the real estate; Manuel Winder has not delivered that part of the property entrusted to his care by the deceased, amounting to upwards of 400,000 dollars; and the Peruvian Bonds deposited in the British Legation, and subsequently delivered to Captain Carvell, are embargoed by Mrs. Winder.

It appears, therefore, clear that the lawsuit will never be concluded until Captain Carvell is released from his illegal "arraigo," as pronounced by the opinion of the lawyers Arenas, Cisneros, and Loayza; there being no person interested in its settlement except Mrs. Winder, who is now taking advantage of the decision given against Manuel Winder in the Superior Court, and there being no person to oppose her as long as Captain Carvell is a prisoner in this Legation.

I will further beg to call the attention of your Lordship to the fact, that after Captain Carvell had sought an asylum in the French Legation, and been transferred to the British Legation, no application has been made to either of those Legations for him to be given up, although I know that an official despatch was passed by the Minister of Justice to the Minister for Foreign Affairs to that effect.

This is the clearest and most concise statement I can furnish to your Lordship regarding Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell's case; but should any further information be needed, I beg to inform your Lordship that Captain Carvell has remitted to London, to his legal advisers, Messieurs Dawes & Sons, solicitors, No. 9, Angel-court, Throgmorton-street, City, certified copies of all the documents appertaining to his case, with instructions to have them translated.

The Earl Russell,
&c. &c. &c.

I have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 24.

(Translation.)

THE subjoined is a brief statement made by the undersigned lawyers, after having examined dispassionately the different suits instituted against Henry de Wolfe Carvell, Esq., since he made application to the judicial authorities to have the provisions of the will carried out that was executed by Michael Winder, Esq., in order that the property existing in the Republic of Peru might be distributed according to the tenor of said will.

We find that the steps taken by Mr. Carvell have been in accordance with the legal forms established by the judicial authorities of this Republic, but the latter have ignored the principles of our jurisprudence; which, notwithstanding their being so clear and obvious, have been infringed, to the prejudice of the manifest rights conferred upon Mr. Carvell. Since—although he is the only executor duly sworn that has accepted the office—commencing the performance of his duties in England, under the double title of guardian to the minor Michael Winder, one of the heirs, here he has been stripped of his functions, without the slightest motive or form of trial; moreover, capriciously and in an indirect manner, that is to say, without penetrating to the bottom of the question, as ought to have been done when treating of the validity or invalidity of the will, respecting which they have remained silent until now, and have only busied themselves giving judgment on incidental questions upon points of the greatest transcendancy, as will appear evident from the laws hereafter noted, with the object of showing that they have been transgressed to the prejudice of the interests of the said Carvell.

It would be a long and useless task to take upon ourselves to analyse each one of the eight suits that have been capiously instituted, in order to distract the attention of Mr. Carvell from his principal object, and confuse him; suffice it that we point out the articles or laws some of which have been transgressed in their literal tenor, and others have been interpreted violently, without the slightest analogy of application. When the natural son, Manuel Winder, absconded, embezzling from the estate more than 500,000 dollars in bonds, which caused the institution of a criminal suit against him, the most scandalous thing is, that in those judicial proceedings there is proof that the embezzler was secreted in the house of the Judge of First Instance, called Luis Ponce; and the gravest matter of all is, that the said judge should have made resistance in person to the police, when they went there to seize the absconded embezzler, and should have denied the authority of the judge who had cognisance of the criminal suit, and who had justly given an order for the forcible entrance of the said house of the judge who had secreted him.

There is also proof in these judicial proceedings that this criminal judge has not been suspended from his functions so far, notwithstanding that one of the gravest and best-substantiated accusations has been made against him before the tribunals.

Secreted as the embezzler of the 500,000 dollars in bonds still is, it is scandalous to observe that he is allowed to defend himself by proxy, when in accusations of this nature no proxy is admitted, as it is prohibited by the Law 12, Clause 5, Part 3.

In the judicial proceedings touching the invalidity of the will, Clause 810 of the Code of Judgment has been violated, which says—"Public documents executed in foreign countries must be proved in the Peruvian Legation or Consulate existing there, or in the Office of the Minister for Foreign Affairs in Peru."

Clause 811 has also been violated, which says:—"Entire faith and credit shall be given to the public documents proved according to the foregoing clause; those that are without this qualification shall be considered as private documents."

Clause 814 has also been violated, which points out the mode of procedure regarding documents executed in foreign countries, which has not been adopted by the judges of Peru with the will of Michael Winder, Esq., presented by Mr. Carvell as authentic and duly accompanied with every requisite. In the judicial proceedings touching the interdiction placed upon the executor, Mr. Carvell, Clause 826 of the Civil Code has been violated, which says:—"The executors shall give to the parties interested a true and faithful account of his executorship, immediately after having exercised it;" and Carvell has not been allowed to do this.

In the same manner, Clauses 827 and 816 have been violated, even supposing that he had been charged with malversation.

Clause 832 has likewise been violated, which authorises one of the executors, when there are several, to exercise the office by himself, by depriving him of his functions in a very gross manner, without having proved any malversation, or even having decided upon the validity or invalidity of the will, in a direct mode, and only incidentally.

Clause 837 has also been violated, which points out the method to be pursued in removing the executors for just causes.

Clause 552 of the Code of Judgment has also been violated, which lays down the conditions and requisites to be observed in ordering interdiction, which have not been complied with in the very hurried Judicial Order of the 1st May 1861.

Clauses 553 and 551 have been violated.

The gravest point in the interdiction arises from the fact that the judge who ordered it was not qualified to do so, as his jurisdiction had been denied, a plea of opposition having been put in directly against him, from whence results the violation of Clause 389, which says:—"If, pending the decision on the competency of two judges, it becomes urgent to take some measures, such shall be done by the order of two judges, if they can meet; and, if not, then by the one who has been petitioned in the matter, making note in the proceedings of the urgency of the steps taken;" which has not been done in the interdiction decreed against Carvell, in direct violation of Clause 1624, which prohibits the judge from altering any of the proceedings before agreed to and confirmed.

Clause 18 of the Regulations of the Tribunals has also been violated, because there it is laid down that it only appertains to the Supreme Court to hear the doubts of the other tribunals regarding the meaning of any law; whilst in the interdiction against Mr. Carvell, the Judge of First Instance has taken upon himself to interdict the meaning of the law.

Clause 1733 of the Code of Judgment has been violated, which admits of the interposition of a plea of nullity against the sentences which have been decreed during the time the jurisdiction has been contested; and the Supreme Court, by its sentence of the 19th July 1861, in which it declares the plea of nullity to be unfounded, transgresses the law, ignoring that which the Clause 1733 referred to, orders it to resolve as an especial part of its jurisdiction.

Clause 534 of the Code of Judgment has been violated, which orders that interdiction cannot be demanded, without accompanying the documents that substantiate or justify such demand, the judge being obliged in such case to ask for and hear the opinion of the family council (the party asking for the interdiction not being present at said council); whilst the interdiction launched against Carvell is completely isolated and wanting foundation, because neither documents have been presented, nor has a family council been held.

Therefore, taking into consideration the numerous infractions of the laws specified, there cannot be a doubt that the proceedings taken by those in opposition to Mr. Carvell are thus far illegal, and cannot be sustained in the opinion of anyone that examines them with an impartial eye, and who may be conversant with the Peruvian codes; because it is sufficient to read the law laid down in the clauses cited in the foregoing, and study the course of the proceedings, in order to convince oneself that not only have they been misapplied, but, what is worse, they are directly at variance with, and in contradiction to, what has been done to the prejudice of the manifest and unquestionable rights appertaining to Henry de Wolfe Carvell, Esq., as would be easy of demonstration on judicial ground,* where the undersigned lawyers might be heard.

Finally, it is the greatest judicial anomaly that, whilst the different proceedings before mentioned were being carried on, no inventory of any kind has been taken, notwithstanding the demand of Carvell to that effect; every obstacle being thrown in the way of its information, under the most frivolous pretexts, until at last the estate of Winder has been left without representation, or, which is the same thing, without a representative; since the will has been neither refused nor accepted, up to the present time, by the judicial authorities; the case being that Mr. Carvell, invested with the double title of executor and guardian, never for a moment should have expected that the judicial authorities, far from recognizing him as holding the office bestowed upon him by a will executed with every formality, would have so crushed him, stripping him of his functions by means of pleas captiously got up, without having penetrated to the bottom of the question, up to the present time, as to the validity or invalidity of the will.

The Right Honourable Earl Russell to Mr. Barton.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 30 May 1862.

BEFORE I can be in a position to judge how far Her Majesty's Government would be justified in interfering in Captain Carvell's behalf, I should wish to have from you information on the following points:

1. Whether by the intimidation, or undue influence of the Peruvian Government, or of the judges of its courts, Captain Carvell has been really disabled from having the assistance of counsel to argue his case, bearing in mind that three advocates have recently given a strong written opinion in his favour, and against the proceedings and acts of the courts, in decided terms.

2. Whether the irregular or illegal acts of the courts, adverted to in the opinion of the three advocates, have been done in his absence from the courts, by reason of his refusal or omission to "appear therein," or, notwithstanding his having "appeared," and contested the validity of such acts.

3. Whether the acts of the courts are not hitherto "interlocutory," as opposed to "final," and whether they are open to further question, as by appeal, rehearing, application to set them aside, and so forth, on the part of Captain Carvell. And whether it is, or is not, still open to Captain Carvell to be heard before the courts upon the real substance and merits of the case, before any final decree is made as to the validity or operation of the will, or as to the title to the property of the deceased Mr. Winder.

4. Whether Captain Carvell has, in effect, admitted the Peruvian courts to have jurisdiction in several other suits or proceedings arising out of the same matter, whilst he continues to deny it in the particular suit in which the "arraigo" has issued against him, which led to his taking refuge in your Legation.

You will report to me fully on these points.

I have, &c.

(No. 54.)

Mr. Barton to the Right Honourable Earl Russell.

My Lord,

British Legation, Lima, 10 July 1862.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's Despatch, No. 20, of the 30th of May last, and to reply to the four questions therein submitted to me, on which I am instructed fully to report.

Law Officer,
24 May 1862.

1. It

1. It is impossible to prove that Captain Carvell has been really disabled from having the assistance of counsel to argue his case, either by intimidation or undue influence of the Peruvian Government, or of the judges of its courts, but occurrences have taken place which tend to raise strong suspicions that such has, indirectly, been the case; for instance, Dr. Tejeda declined rendering open legal assistance to Captain Carvell, as explained in his letter to Captain Carvell, dated the 14th of June 1861. In Monsieur Henry's letter to Captain Carvell, dated the 22d of October of the same year, in which it is clearly stated that none of the counsel would undertake the case openly in court; nevertheless, some of these same counsel have not objected to give their opinion, as expressed in the report of the advocates, which opinion, strongly written, is in decided terms in favour of Captain Carvell, and against the proceedings and acts of the courts; and, in Captain Carvell's letter to Mr. Jerningham, dated the 20th of April 1861, in which he states that Dr. Tejeda said, in presence of a third person, that he should be ruined if he undertook Captain Carvell's case.

2. The irregular or illegal acts of the courts, adverted to in the opinion of the three advocates, have been done notwithstanding the appearance of Captain Carvell in court, who contested the validity of such acts.

3. The acts of the courts are, "interlocutory," as far as regards the validity or operation of the will, or as to the title to the property of the deceased Mr. Winder; but, it is necessary to observe that Judge Olivares was named by the "Superior Court," what is termed, "Juez Testamentaria;" and on the 25th of February 1861, Captain Carvell presented, in conformity with the order of that judge, a legalised copy of the will of the deceased Mr. Winder to "Judge Olivares." The widow of the deceased, in the following month of March, put in a petition to the "Superior Court," praying that Judge Gamboa should be appointed in the place of Judge Olivares, which was acceded to by the "Superior Court," and, up to the present date, no judgment has been given as to the validity or non-validity of the will of the deceased; consequently, no appeal can be made to the courts, Judge Gamboa not having pronounced sentence on the question in dispute, although the case has been before him since March 1861.

The act of the "Supreme Court" has been "final" in the criminal case against Manuel Winder, by the sentence of that court, dated November 1861; the Judge of First Instance (Carrillo), was ordered to apprehend Manuel Winder, and to stop the bonds which he had in his possession; and, in the civil case against Captain Carvell, in which he was ordered to deposit the property in his possession, in the hands of Messrs. Zaracondegui & Co., or to be sent to prison.

The first sentence of the court in regard to Manuel Winder has never been carried into execution, nor has the second, which was avoided by Captain Carvell taking refuge in the French Legation. The act has also been "final" in regard to the demands of the Widow Winder, presented to Judge Gamboa, requiring that her son, Michael Winder, should be taken from the guardianship of Captain Carvell; that she should have the administration of the property of the deceased, and that the nullity of the will should be declared.

The two first demands were allowed by Judge Gamboa, but no notice was taken of the third.

Captain Carvell appealed against the decision of the Judge of First Instance (Gamboa) both in the "Superior" and "Supreme Courts;" the sentence of Judge Gamboa was confirmed.

4. Captain Carvell has admitted the jurisdiction of the Peruvian courts in the proceedings relative to the will of the late Mr. Winder, but his three reasons for resisting the orders of Judge Gamboa to place him under arrest were,—

First. That the order of arrest was considered illegal by the opinions of the counsel, Messrs. Pacheco and Hurtado, and also by Messrs. Arenas, Loayza, and Cisneros, which opinions were afterwards procured in writing, and copies of which were transmitted to your Lordship, Enclosures marked (B.) and (C.), in my Despatch No. 27, of the 12th of March last.

Second. That it was unjust that Captain Carvell should be ordered to deposit that part of the property belonging to the estate of the deceased, received by him from the British Legation, as the acknowledged executor of the deceased, whilst the Widow Winder was in the full possession of the remainder of the property, which property had been handed over to her by Judge Gamboa himself, instead of being deposited, as it should have been, until the validity or non-validity of the will was declared.

Third. That Judge Olivares was the "Juez Testamentaria" appointed by the order of the Superior Court, and, consequently, no other judge had any right to interfere in this case until the validity or non-validity of the will was determined.

(Translation.)

Dear Sir and Friend,

Lima, 14 June 1861.

LAST night's "Comercio," No. 6,493, publishes an article copied from the "Star and Herald," of Panama of the 24th May ultimo, which article gives to the judicial questions I at present defend for you a national character; likewise, speaking in it in rather an unfavourable manner against Peru, and its authorities.

I have decided, on account of this circumstance, to resign my intervention as your lawyer in this affair, and pray you to relieve me of it.

In that publication they say, of your having been imprisoned, it being so, that the "arraigo" to which they probably allude, is in nowise imprisonment—a conception I have always endeavoured to rectify in you, as such measure, which is taken in all countries, is never considered an imprisonment.

It likewise speaks of some fault of the government in the accomplishment of the measures it had offered to take; and notwithstanding this is not a judicial point, nor have I interfered with it, I cannot continue a defence which might later come in contact with an unfavourable assertion of a government, which, at all events, is that of my country.

Before now, you will recollect my insinuation, that if the judicial questions should become complicated to the extreme of assuming a diplomatic character, I would not continue, nor do anything which might favour this course.

Yourself, with the amiability which characterizes you, assented to it, and I even recollect, applauded my delicacy. The time is then arrived when I must proceed according to the case I had foreseen.

I am persuaded that in such publication you had no part at all; but, if so, I respect your convictions and the manner of viewing the question; but, as a Peruvian, I have greatly felt its contents.

You will please to accept that part of the labour I have taken in your defence, as a proof of the sincere affection produced in me by the sympathies of your fine and amiable treatment. As to the rest, I am sure I shall be relieved by yourself with advantage, as regards my abilities; but not so as regards my goodwill and affection, which are always at your disposal, as your friend and obedient servant.

Enclosure 2, in No. 26.

Cher Monsieur,

Lima, le 22 Octobre 1861.

J'AI le regret de vous annoncer que, malgré toutes les démarches que j'ai faites, et tous les efforts que j'ai tentés, il m'a été absolument impossible jusqu'à présent de trouver parmi les membres distingués du barreau de Lima un avocat qui veuille bien se charger de présenter la défense verbale de votre affaire devant la Cour Suprême.

Ceux mêmes, sur qui nous comptions le plus, nous ont lâchement abandonné au moment de l'action.

* Vous savez combien nous avons crû de bonne foi en la promesse de Monsieur Cisneros; il a refusé; Monsieur Loayza en a fait de même; Tejada, Albertini et consorts en ont fait de même; d'autres m'ont témoigné des dispositions presque hostiles; Monsieur Arenas, comme associé de Monsieur Loayza, n'a pu que faire comme lui; du reste, malgré son incontestable talent, il n'était pas propre à développer cet exposé verbal; tout le reste m'a paru très froid, et j'en conclus que ces gens-là ont peur de se compromettre en s'occupant de votre affaire.

J'opine qu'il sera plus sûr et plus prudent de faire vous-même un informe écrit, auquel nous pourrions ajouter toutes les preuves qui tout récemment encore sont venues à l'appui de de votre droit, et présenter à tout hazard cet informe écrit à la Cour Suprême; si la cour a encore un certain fonds de pudeur, et veut bien vous faire justice, votre relation écrite aura tout le succès qu'aurait un exposé verbal; le principal en tout ceci, c'est qu'on veuille bien oublier un peu que vous êtes Anglais, et vous faire justice absolument comme si vous étiez un sang pur descendant du feu Manco-Capac.

Réfléchissez d'ici demain; car il faut vous réveiller le matin avec une bonne et décisive détermination.

A vous de cœur,
(signé) Charles Henry.

Sir,

Lima, 20 April 1861.

I HAVE the honour to state for your information, that this day, at two o'clock P.M., Señor Teheda called on me at my hôtel, and, after talking over my affairs, said that it was with pain and regret, and he must add shame, as a Peruvian, that he had come to tell me, that he dared not do his duty, nor take the necessary steps to support me as his client, for fear of the vengeance of the Peruvian Government.

He said he was in a position to show up the whole fraud, and the complicity and connivance of the executive and judicial authorities; but, that he dared not do so, as he would be absolutely ruined; that the government was vindictive in the extreme, and corrupt from the highest to the lowest official, and that all hope of advancement in his profession (for which he had laboured long and arduously, and hoped soon to obtain) would be completely cut off, and at an end, if he did his duty as he knew it ought to be done in this case.

Señor Teheda evinced much emotion, and expressed his disgust and abhorrence at a state of things which prevented him doing his duty, without involving a sacrifice which would amount to his utter ruin; but expressed his willingness to assist me in any way that might not offend the Peruvian authorities.

I must do Señor Teheda the justice to say, that I think him above corruption; but not above nor free from intimidation emanating from the executive authorities, of which, in common with all who hold any official position here, he seems much in dread.

I have, &c.

(No. 60.)

Mr. Barton to the Right Honourable Earl Russell.

My Lord,

British Legation, Lima, 11 August 1862.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith copy of a letter addressed to me by Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell, under date of the 9th instant, enclosing a medical certificate, copy of which I have also the honour to transmit to your Lordship, showing the deplorable condition to which he is reduced in health by the long and continued state of excitement under which he has laboured, from not having been able to bring his lawsuit to a close, and the absolute necessity of his taking some decided step to obtain that quiet upon which his present existence materially depends.

Captain Carvell requests me in that letter to afford him every aid and assistance to enable him to proceed on board Her Majesty's ship "Topaze."

I did not consider it necessary to return a written answer to Captain Carvell's letter but I informed him personally, that I could in no way assist him officially, Her Majesty's Government only having authorised me to give him an asylum.

I at the same time informed him, that as I did not consider him as a prisoner (as stated in the Despatch which I had the honour to address to your Lordship, under date of the 29th of November 1861, numbered 32), he was perfectly at liberty to act as he thought proper.

On the 10th instant, he left this Legation at a little before 6 P.M., and proceeded by the train to Callao, and embarked without meeting with any interruption; I have since learnt that he is on board of Her Majesty's ship "Topaze."

This morning I waited on his Excellency, the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, and advised his Excellency that Captain Carvell had left the Legation yesterday afternoon; his reasons for taking this step would be explained by the duplicate certificate of the Medical Board, which I had the honour to leave in the hands of his Excellency.

I considered it necessary to give this information to his Excellency, as the French Chargé d'Affaires had done so when Captain Carvell first was received at the French Legation, and Monsieur de Lesseps and myself jointly followed the same course when he was transferred from the French to the British Legation, on the 31st of August of last year.

No. 3.

I have likewise the honour to transmit to your Lordship copy of a second letter from Captain de Wolfe Carvell, dated the 10th instant, in which he expresses his grateful thanks to Her Majesty's Government for the protection vouchsafed to him by his country's flag.

Trusting that my conduct on this occasion will meet with your Lordship's approbation,

The Earl Russell,
&c. &c.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 27.

Sir,

British Legation, Lima, 9 August 1862.

I HAVE the honour to enclose proceedings of a Medical Board held yesterday on my state of health, showing the deplorable condition to which I am now reduced.

I have long waited in hopes that the authorities of this country might at length be animated by a sense of something like justice. I have waited in vain, and my hopes have not been realised.

There seems to exist the same determination to carry out the systematic injustice and delay which commenced more than 18 months ago.

I can no longer continue this unequal struggle, but wish to quit this country, placing on record my solemn protest against the ill-treatment, injustice, and grievous wrong, of which I have been the sufferer since the 14th March 1861.

As Her Majesty's Agent in Lima, I venture to hope you will afford me any aid and assistance that may be necessary to enable me to go on board Her Majesty's ship "Topaze."

Were it not that I am a suffering, perhaps a dying man, I would still hold out longer, and protest, by my presence, against what I conceive to be one of the most flagrant cases of injustice ever perpetrated by a civilised Government on a British subject.

COPY OF MEDICAL CERTIFICATE.

THIS is to certify those whom it may concern, that we, the undersigned, have this day carefully examined into the state of health of Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell, at present residing at the British Legation, Lima, and find that the said Captain Carvell is labouring under hypertrophy of the heart, with aneurismal dilatation of the aorta; which disease, according to his own statement, has existed for several years, and has now attained an advanced stage.

This disease, from its nature, little amenable to treatment, and necessarily ultimately fatal, is one requiring the utmost repose, both of body and of mind.

All emotional exciting causes tend to hasten a fatal termination, and it becomes our duty to urge the great necessity of Captain Carvell's immediate removal from the pressure of the peculiar exciting, and disturbing causes which are now in operation—causes which can have but one effect, namely, to shorten such period of life as may yet remain to him.

Understanding that these exciting causes are connected with certain legal proceedings now in action in the Courts of Law, we earnestly recommend that Captain Carvell be at once once removed from Peru, and permitted to rejoin his family, where he may meet with and have the benefit of those soothing attentions of affection which his case so much requires.

Given under our hands at the British Legation, Lima, this eighth day of August, One thousand eight hundred and sixty-two.

Enclosure 3, in No. 27.

Sir,

British Legation, Lima, 10 o'clock, A.M., 10 August 1862.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that, in consequence of our conversation this morning, I intend to leave the Legation to-day, and to proceed by rail-train to Callao, with a view of going on board Her Majesty's ship "Topaze," under the influence of circumstances explained in my letter of yesterday's date, and its enclosures.

On leaving, I beg to offer my grateful thanks, through you, to Her Majesty's Government, for the protection vouchsafed to me by my country's flag, which has prevented the execution of the unjust and oppressive measures instituted against me by the Peruvian Authorities.

I beg further to express my high appreciation of, and my gratitude and thanks for, the noble and generous hospitality accorded me during a period of nearly 12 months' residence as your guest, a residence that has become endeared to me from the great kindness and attention bestowed upon me personally by the members of your family, which have so much tended to mitigate the anxiety and distress consequent on a long (and otherwise painful) confinement to the house, under circumstances the most trying and, I may with safety add, the most unjust.

Mr. Barton to the Right Honourable Earl Russell.

My Lord,

British Legation, Lima, 29 August 1862.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship copy and translation of a Note received from the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, dated the 20th instant; as also copy and translation of a Despatch from Dr. Don Manuel G. Gamboa, Judge of the First Instance, to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, relative to the case of Captain Henry de Wolfe Carvell, together with a copy of my reply to the note of his Excellency.

By the former of these documents your Lordship will perceive that his Excellency Señor Ribeyro requests that I will inform him if this Legation affords protection to and if Captain Carvell is actually under the British flag.

To the first of these questions, I have informed his Excellency how Captain Carvell was first brought to this Legation in the month of August of last year, which act had been approved of by Her Majesty's Government, and how the Peruvian Government had then been informed of his removal from the French to the British Legation; and that on Captain Carvell's leaving this Legation on the 10th instant, I had taken the earliest opportunity of informing his Excellency of that fact, and of Captain Carvell's reasons for so doing, which were reported to your Lordship in my Despatch, No. 60, dated the 11th instant.

To the second question I did not conceive that any reply was necessary, as from the moment Captain Carvell left this Legation I considered my responsibility

(Translation.)

Lima, 20 August 1862.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, Sir, an authentic copy of the despatch which the Judge of First Instance of this capital, Don Manuel J. Gamboa, has addressed to me, containing a resolution, confirmed by the Superior Court of Lima, to place Mr. Henry de Wolfe Carvell in prison. With the object that this may take place, the Court solicits that inquiry be made of you if it is true that Her Britannic Majesty's Legation affords protection to the said Carvell; and that, in case of a negative, the proceeding indicated by the fiscal, registered in the enclosed copy, may be taken.

You, Sir, delivered to me, confidentially, a certificate of several physicians and surgeons, which shows that the said Carvell is in a bad state of health.

It appears to me that this cannot alter the state of the question; because the matter of Mr. Carvell being purely private, it is for the judge of the cause to examine the certificate, and to declare whether he can modify the situation of Carvell, or what may be most in conformity with the laws. Mr. Carvell himself should present his certificate to the judge; I could not do so without assuming the character of his attorney, a function which it certainly does not belong to me to exercise.

You, Sir, are too well acquainted of the laws and international practices to require me to prove that Carvell has no right to the asylum which it appears is afforded to him. The Peruvian Government has tolerated the asylum for political causes, although it has not conceded it; but for common causes, and much less for causes between private individuals, it has not tolerated it, nor has anyone pretended to sustain it.

As the resolutions of the tribunals in the case of Carvell should be duly carried out, and as this gentleman has been, as is notorious, in the house of the British Legation, I have the honour to address myself to Mr. Barton, to the effect that he have the goodness to tell me whether Mr. Carvell is still under the flag of Her Britannic Majesty, and if that Legation is disposed, which I do not expect, to give to him asylum.

I take this opportunity to renew to Mr. Barton the assurances, &c.

Legation of Her Britannic Majesty.

Enclosure 2, in No. 28.

(Translation.)

To the Minister of State in the Department of Foreign Affairs.

Señor Minister,

Lima, 13 August 1862.

IN the cause carried on by Mrs. Carmen Lorrea, widow of Mr. Michael Winder, with Mr. Henry de Wolfe Carvell, regarding the delivery of certain property belonging to the estate of the said Michael Winder, an executive sentence has been pronounced by which the placing in the public prison of the said Mr. Henry de Wolfe Carvell is ordered, as a pressure prescribed by the Article 477 of the Judicial Code, until he returns the bonds which he arbitrarily retains in his possession. As the said executive sentence has not been carried out, on account of the said Carvell being living in the house of the Chargé d'Affaires of Her Britannic Majesty, a decree has been issued by this Court, dated 28th of May last, which has also been declared executive by the Superior Court, by which is ordered that a note be passed to you, Sir, with a transcription of the opinion of the fiscal of the superior tribunal, to the effect that you be so good and inquire of the Chargé d'Affaires of Her Britannic Majesty if it is true that the said gentleman affords protection in the present case to the said Mr. Henry de Wolfe Carvell, so that in case of a negative proceedings, in the manner and form indicated by the fiscal, may be taken.

Lima, 8 August 1862.

IN fulfilment of the executive decree, pass the note indicated with a transcription of the opinion of the fiscal of the Superior Court, as is solicited.

Gamboa. Before me, Antonio Aragon.

"Illustrious Sir,

"The fiscal says that, the order contained in the decree at f. 18 bis. having been fulfilled without having obtained the end with which the fresh note was reissued to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, by the appeal of f. 49, it should have for its object the soliciting of the said gentleman to be so good and pass the corresponding note to the British Consul, so that if he still affords asylum in his house to Mr. Henry de Wolfe Carvell, he may not prevent the removal (extradicion), and that the executive sentence pronounced in the cause may have exact observance, and to advise the court of having passed the said note for its ulterior dispositions. In virtue of the above, the fiscal is of opinion the said appeal should be confirmed, and that the note referred to should be in the terms indicated. Saving the better judgment of your Honor. Lima, 15 July 1862. "Valle."

Which I have the honour to acquaint you, Sir, of, for the ends to which I refer.

May God guard you, Sir!

Enclosure 3, in No. 28.

British Legation, Lima, 23 August 1862.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's note of the 20th instant, transmitting me an attested copy of the Despatch addressed to your Excellency by the Judge of First Instance, Don Manuel J. Gamboa, accompanied by a resolution, confirmed by the Superior Court of Lima, to place in prison the person of Henry de Wolfe Carvell, and inquiring of me if it is true that Her Britannic Majesty's Legation affords protection to the said Henry de Wolfe Carvell.

Your Excellency then further states, that I confidentially placed in your hands a certificate signed by several physicians and surgeons, showing the bad state of Mr. Carvell's health, which circumstance your Excellency affirms does not at all alter the state of the question, and which certificate, according to Peruvian law, should be presented to the judge by Mr. Carvell himself, and that your Excellency cannot present the said certificate without assuming the character of his attorney.

Your Excellency, after stating that the resolution of the tribunals in this affair must be carried out, and that it is notorious Mr. Carvell has been for some time in the British Legation, your Excellency requests to know if Mr. Carvell is actually under the British flag, and if this Legation is disposed (which your Excellency does not expect it is) to give to Mr. Carvell its protection.

In reply to these questions, I beg to inform your Excellency that when Henry de Wolfe Carvell was removed from the French Legation, in the month of August of last year, to this Legation, which act has been approved of by Her Majesty's Government, notice was given, both by the French Chargé d'Affaires and myself, to the then Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, Señor Don José Fabio Melgar, of his having been so removed; and when Mr. Carvell quitted this Legation on the 10th instant, I, on the morning of the 11th instant, did myself the honour of waiting on your Excellency personally, and on handing to your Excellency the certificate of the alarming state of Mr. Henry de Wolfe Carvell's health, I distinctly stated to your Excellency that the object of my visit was to announce to your Excellency that Henry de Wolfe Carvell had left Her Majesty's Legation on the previous day (Sunday), and that his reasons for so doing would be explained by the contents of the certificate which I had the honour to leave with your Excellency, and that Mr. Carvell was at present on board of Her Majesty's ship "Topaze," in the Bay of Callao.

Your Excellency will, I feel persuaded, acquit me of any intention of presenting the medical certificate with the object of your Excellency's assuming the character of the attorney of Mr. Carvell, as at the time I had that honour, on the 11th instant, I had not received the note which your Excellency was pleased to address to me, under date of the 20th instant, nine days afterwards.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your Excellency, &c.

The Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs,

Mr. Barton to the Right Honourable Earl Russell.

My Lord,

British Legation, Lima, 24 September 1862.

No. 1.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship copy and translation of a Note received from the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, dated the 16th instant, in which his Excellency demands, at the petition of Judge Gamboa, confirmed by the "Superior Court," the person of Henry de Wolfe Carvell.

This demand appears the more extraordinary, from the circumstance of my having verbally acquainted his Excellency that Mr. Carvell had left this Legation on the 10th ultimo, as reported in the Despatch which I had the honour to address to your Lordship, No. 60, of the 11th of August last.

No. 2.

In my reply, copy of which I likewise enclose herewith, I have avoided taking any notice of the remarks of his Excellency relative to the right of asylum, and have limited myself merely to a repetition of the manner in which Mr. Carvell came to this Legation, acquainting his Excellency that Her Majesty's Government having authorised me to afford him protection, I could not act in any way without previously receiving your Lordship's instructions.

I have, &c.

The Earl Russell,

Enclosure 1, in No. 29.

(Translation.)

Lima, 16 September 1862.

On the 20th ultimo I had the honour to transmit to you copy of a Resolution of the Judge of First Instance, Dr. Manuel G. Gamboa, confirmed by the Superior Court of Lima, to place in prison, as a measure of compulsion, the British subject Henry de Wolfe Carvell. In order that the resolution of the tribunals might have due fulfilment, I requested that you would be so good and inform me whether the said Carvell was under the British flag, and whether you, Sir, afforded him protection. On this occasion I stated that if in some cases the Government of Peru had tolerated, although not conceded, asylum for political causes, the asylum for common causes had not been tolerated, nor even had it been pretended to be sustained by any Legation. You, Sir, had the goodness to reply that Mr. Henry Carvell had been in the Legation, and that he had removed to Her Majesty's ship "Topaze," in the Bay of Callao. I cannot do less than congratulate myself that you, Sir, have not denied the unquestionable principles of international law which, on the subject of asylum, I referred to, and I do not doubt that you will accept them, and act in conformity to them. And it cannot be otherwise: because if a Legation should consider itself to have the right to give asylum to a private individual, taking him out of the jurisdiction of the tribunals and the power of the laws, the independence and the sovereignty of the country would be attacked, the very rights of private parties would fail to have the support of the authorities, and, international principles and the internal laws being once violated, there would be no other law nor principle than that of force. But if the resolutions of the tribunals and the laws are to be fulfilled, it is necessary, at the same time, to consider the respect due to the British flag; and therefore demanding, as I formally demand from that Legation, the person of Mr. Henry de Wolfe Carvell, I leave to your election the manner of effecting his delivery.

I take this opportunity to renew to the Honourable Mr. Barton the assurances,
&c.

The Honourable John Barton,
&c. &c. &c.

Enclosure 2, in No. 29.

British Legation, Lima, 19 September 1862.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the esteemed note which your Excellency addressed to me under date of the 16th instant, demanding the person of a British subject named Henry de Wolfe Carvell, leaving to my election the manner of his being delivered up.

In a note which I had the honour to address to your Excellency, dated the 23d of August last, I gave a full explanation to your Excellency of how Henry de Wolfe Carvell vell came under the protection of this Legation, and, at the same time, I informed your Excellency that the Government of Her Majesty had approved of my having afforded that protection to Mr. Carvell; and I also stated that the said Carvell had left this Legation on the 10th of August last, and was at present on board of Her Majesty's ship "Topaze," in the Bay of Callao.

The protection given to Mr. Carvell having been approved of by Her Majesty's Government, it becomes my imperative duty to consult Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs on this subject, to which effect I shall transmit, by the mail to leave Callao on the 29th instant, copy of your Excellency's note previously referred to, and await the instructions of my Government, the purport of which I shall communicate to your Excellency as early as possible.

With the highest sentiments of respect, I have the honour to be, &c.

Mr. Barton to the Right Honourable Earl Russell.

My Lord, British Legation, Lima, 29 September 1862.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship that Captain Carvell is still on board Her Majesty's ship "Topaze." He has given an ample power of attorney to Señor Don E. Perer de Velarco, an eminent lawyer of Caraccas, who was formerly Resident Minister from Venezuela to Peru, and who is at present residing in Lima, to act for him in everything relating to the will of the late Mr. Winder.

Mr. Velarco informs me that there is nothing at present to report to your Lordship on this case.

I believe it to be the intention of Captain Carvell to proceed to Panama in the "Topaze," which vessel sails to-morrow, on his way to England.

(No. 34.)

The Right Honourable Earl Russell to Mr. Barton.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 29 September 1862.

I HAVE consulted the law officers of the Crown upon your Despatch, No. 54, of the 10th July, containing information on certain points in connection with the proceedings in Peru against Captain Carvell, and I am advised that a case is not made out for the direct interference of Her Majesty's Government on Captain Carvell's behalf.

It is impossible to demand redress for an unjust decision on the ground that certain advocates, too timid to appear openly in court, express on paper a different opinion upon the law of the country from that which has been judicially delivered by a judge. Moreover, it does not appear that a final judgment has yet been pronounced on the most important question of the validity or invalidity of the will of which Captain Carvell has obtained an English probate.

That gentleman has now admitted the jurisdiction of the Peruvian tribunals, which he never ought to have contested, but he cannot only agree to admit that jurisdiction if it decides in his favour, and protest against it if it decides in favour of his adversary. With regard to the question as to the proper "juez testamentaria," I can express no opinion as to the person who ought to have been appointed; but if the order of the superior court has not been obeyed, that court must be appealed to to enforce its orders.

If, however, it is a fact that Captain Carvell was ordered to produce the property of the late Mr. Winder, which he received from Her Majesty's Legation, while

† (Forum competentens.)

Mrs. Winder was allowed to retain the remainder of the property, you will remonstrate with the Peruvian Government against this injustice; and you will, at all events, complain of the want of comity shown by their legal authorities in not recognising the law courts of the place of domicile*, admitted to be in England as the competent† court to try the question of the validity of the will, at least so far as the personal property is concerned; and you will press for a decision on this point from the Peruvian Government, which, contrary to general usage, they have thought proper to try themselves.

My Lord, British Legation, Lima, 12 November 1862.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's Despatch No. 34, dated the 29th September last, and, in conformity with the instructions therein contained, on the 8th instant I addressed a note to the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, copy of which I have the honour to transmit herewith, remonstrating with the Peruvian Government against the continued delay on the part of the judge of wills in not pronouncing as to the validity or invalidity of that of the late Mr. Michael Winder, complaining of the want of courtesy shown by the Peruvian legal authorities in not recognising the law courts of England, and pressing for a decision on the point of the validity or invalidity of the will in question.

I did not mention the injustice attempted against Captain Carvell for not producing the part of the property in his possession, as I am audibly informed that great part of the property now in possession of the widow Winder is hers, from the fact of its having been purchased in her name at a time when British subjects were not allowed to hold landed or household property in Peru, besides which, according to Peruvian law, all real property (bienes muebles), whoever be its owner, is subject to Peruvian law.

Lima, 29 November 1862.

My Lord,

IN continuation of the subject of the despatch which I had the honour to address to your Lordship on the 12th instant, numbered 90, I beg to acquaint your Lordship that no further answer has been received from the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs to my note to his Excellency, of the 8th instant, than that already reported.

I regret not being able to carry out the instructions contained in your Lordship's despatch, No. 6, dated the 16th of October 1861, "to continue carefully to watch the proceedings in the case of Captain Carvell, and to report thereupon to your Lordship from time to time," it being impossible to learn the proceedings of the judges; this evil will, however, now be remedied, as Señor Velasco, who holds Captain Carvell's power of attorney, will inform Captain Carvell of everything that takes place; which information will of course be communicated to your Lordship if necessary.

I have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 35.

Lima, 24 de Enero, 1863.

EL infrascrito Ministro de Relaciones Exteriores del Perú, tiene el honor de dirigirse al H. Señor Encargado de Negocios y Consul General de S. M. B., con el objeto de contestar la nota que con fecha 8 de Noviembre ultimo dirigió á este despacho el H. Señor Barton representando contra la retardacion en los procedimientos de los jueces relativamente á la cuestion de validez ó nulidad del testamento del fuado D. Miguel Winder, contra la falta de Cortesia que le supone en los tribunales del Perú por no reconocer en el caso actual competencia en los de Inglaterra, ni aun en lo que se refiere á la fortuna personal del fuado, é instando con eficacia por una decision sobre este punto que las autoridades Peruanas han creído de su competencia.

De los respectivos informes que han evacuado los jueces de 1ª Instancia que conocen de la cuestion principal sobre nulidad del mencionado testamento y de las incidentales que los diversos interesados en la testamentaria han promovido en guarda de sus derechos, aparece con una exactitud matematica que, apesar de haberse sometido al conocimiento del juez la referida cuestion principal sobre nulidad del testamento desde mediados del año de 1861, y de haber por consiguiente trascurrido tiempo mas que suficiente para pronunciar sobre este particular resolucion definitiva, carece en lo absoluto de justicia el cargo formulado á este respecto como se convencerá el H. Señor Jerningham, por las razones que brevemente expondra el infrascrito en apoyo de su aserto. Si la referida cuestion sobre nulidad ó validez del testamento del finado Winder se hubiese interpuesto como se interpuso y hubiese recibido del juez la tramitacion que á su naturaleza corresponde, sin haber encontrado obstaculos de ningun género, de seguro que el H. Señor Barton no habria encontrado viso alguno de retardacion porque la causa hubiera ya recibido desde hace mucho tiempo, la sancion legal que corresponde. Pero desgraciadamente ha habido muchos interesados, interesados, y cada uno de ellos con pretenciones opuestas; se han cruzado oposiciones en todo sentido que no han hecho mas que entorpecer la libre marcha de los procedimientos; han surgido artículos incidentales que han traído en pos de sí el mismo resultado, se han multiplicado las apelaciones y los demás recursos que las leyes franquiean en beneficio los litigantes principalmente los de recusación, declinatoria y otros y en medio de todo esto los jueces han tenido que dar cumplimiento á una disposición terminante de nuestro Código procedimientos en materia civil que les prohíbe promover de oficio los pleitos sobre intereses privados ó estimular á las partes á que los sigan. Esta ligera pero verídica narración de lo ocurrido en la causa á que el infrascrito se refiere convencerá al H. Señor Encargado de Negocios de S. M. B. de que la retardación á que alude el H. Señor Barton en su mencionada nota, no es imputable en manera alguna á los Tribunales de Justicia del Perú, sino á los mismos interesados, y particularmente á D. Enrique de Wolfe Carvell quien segun la exposición de los jueces, ha eludido, primero con repetidos artículos, después con subterfugios, y ultimamente con su evasión, las providencias coactivas que contra él há librado el poder judicial para hacer efectiva sus resoluciones.

Pasando ahora el infrascrito á ocuparse del segundo cargo contenido en la nota citada, hará notar á S. S. H. que ni se há suscitado hasta hoy cuestión alguna acerca de la autenticidad del testamento otorgado en Londres por D. Miguel Winder, ni en la que há surgido sobre su nulidad se há pronunciado aun, por los motivos expuestos, resolución alguna de carácter definitivo, ni finalmente se há entablado por ningun juzgado ni tribunal Ingles competencia alguna en el sentido genuino de esta palabra. Estas razones justifican suficientemente la reserva del infrascrito de no entrar en el fondo del argumento á que contesta, porque además de ser infundado, como lo manifestará en caso necesario, es prematuro y por consiguiente aventurado.

Con respecto á la pronta decisión del asunto por la que insta con eficacia el H. Señor Barton, el infrascrito tiene el honor de poner en conocimiento del H. Señor Jerningham, que con esta fecha se dirige á la Ilustrísima Corte Superior del departamento, á fin de que este tribunal re-encargue á los jueces que conocen de la causa, su pronto despacho, el que á pesar de los mayores esfuerzos será tardío, si subsisten las causas de que se há hecho mención en la primera parte de esta nota.

El infrascrito deja así contestada la ya citada nota de 8 de Noviembre último, que muy á su pesar ha retardado hoy por la necesidad que há tenido de pedir informes detallados en la materia; y aprovecha esta ocasión para reiterar al H. Señor Encargado de Negocios, &c.

Enclosure in No. 36.

(Translation.)

Lima, 24 January 1863.

The undersigned, Minister for Foreign Affairs of Peru, has the honour to address the Chargé d'Affaires and Consul General of Her Britannic Majesty, with the object of replying to the note which, under date of the 8th of November last, the Honourable Mr. Barton addressed to this office, remonstrating against the delay in the proceedings of the judges relative to the question of the validity or nullity of the will of the deceased Mr. Michael Winder; against the want of courtesy supposed on the part of the tribunals of Peru, in not recognising in the present case the competency of those of England, nor even in that which refers to the personal property of the deceased, and urgently claiming for a decision upon this point, which the Peruvian authorities have believed to belong to their jurisdiction.

From the respective reports which the judges of the First Instance, who have cognisance of the principal question regarding the nullity of the said will, and of the incidental questions which the several interested parties in the estate have moved in defence of their rights, have made, it appears, with mathematical exactness, that, notwithstanding the having submitted to the knowledge of the judge the said principal question as to the nullity of the will since the middle of the year 1861, and, consequently, more than sufficient time having passed to enable him to pronounce a definitive resolution upon the subject, the charge made is absolutely wanting of justice, as the Honourable Mr. Jerningham will be convinced by the reasons which the undersigned will briefly lay before him in support of his assertion. If the question referred to as to the nullity or validity of the will of the deceased Winder had been brought forward as it was and had been received from the judge the Despatch which its nature required without any obstacles having been put in the way, Mr. Barton certainly would not have found any sign of delay, because the case would have received, a long time since, the corresponding legal sanction. But, unfortunately, there have been many interested parties, and each one of them with opposite pretensions; oppositions of all kinds have crossed each other, which have done nothing more than paralyze the free march of the proceedings; incidental articles have been brought forward, which have only caused the same result; the appeals have been multiplied, and also the other recourses which the laws allow for the benefit of litigants, principally those of recusation pleas against the competency of judges, &c.; and in the midst of all this the judges have had to give fulfilment to a definite disposition of our code of procedure in civil matters, which prohibits them from promoting officially the lawsuits upon private affairs, or stimulating the parties, to carry them on. This brief but truthful narration of what has occurred in the cause to which the undersigned refers, will convince the Honourable Chargé d'Affaires of Her Britannic Majesty that the delay to which the Honourable Mr. Barton alludes in his said note, is not in any manner chargeable to the tribunals of justice of Peru, but to the interested parties themselves, and particularly to M. Henry de Wolfe Carvell, who, according to the exposition of the judges, has eluded, first with repeated articles, afterwards with subterfuges, and lastly with his evasion, the coercive measures which the judicial power has issued against him, in order to cause its resolutions to be made effective.

The undersigned in now proceeding to occupy himself with the second charge contained in said note, will call to the notice of the Honourable M. Jerningham that up to the present day no question has been made as to the authenticity of the will made in London by Mr. Michael Winder, nor, for the reasons stated, has any resolution of a definitive character been yet pronounced in the question raised as to its nullity, nor, finally, has any English court or tribunal instituted in the genuine sense of the word, any competition whatever. These reasons sufficiently justify the reserve of the undersigned from entering into the depths of the argument to which he replies, because, besides its being unfounded, as he will make manifest if necessary, it is premature, and consequently hazardous.

As regards the prompt decision of the matter, for which the Honourable Mr. Barton urges, the undersigned has the honour to acquaint the Honourable Mr. Jerningham that, under this date, he addresses the Illustrious Superior Court of the department, to the end that this tribunal may again recommend to the judges who have cognizance of the cause its prompt despatch, which, notwithstanding the greatest endeavours, will be tardy should the causes which have been mentioned in the first part of this note still subsist.

The undersigned thus replies to the above-cited note of the 8th of November last, which, very much to his regret, has been delayed until to-day, from the necessity he has had of asking for detailed reports upon the subject, and avails himself of this occasion to renew to the Honourable Chargé d'Affaires and Consul General of Her Britannic Majesty the assurances of his distinguished consideration.

The Right Hon. Earl Russell to Mr. Jerningham.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 8 September 1863.

I ENCLOSE for your information and guidance a copy of my letter to Messrs. Dawes, communicating to them the only steps which Her Majesty's Government can authorise you to take on behalf of Captain Carvell, and stating the reasons which prevent them from interfering further in his favour.

I am, &c.

7 September.

— No. 38 —

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, 7 September 1863.

LORD RUSSELL has carefully considered and has consulted the law officers of the Crown upon your letter of the 24th of July, enclosing a copy of an opinion on Captain Carvell's case, as submitted by you to Counsel, and he now desires me to write to you as follows :

It is indispensable, as a general rule, before any question of civil right with respect to property, not arising out of any public engagements, can be withdrawn from the cognizance of the ordinary civil tribunals of a foreign country, in order to be made the subject of a demand for redress from the Government of that country, that sufficient proof should be given, either that the Foreign Government itself has by its own direct action interfered with the ordinary course of justice in the case, or that the party aggrieved has used the proper means of establishing or defending his rights in the ordinary course of law as administered in that country, and has failed not in consequence of any error or default of his own, but through some gross defect or miscarriage of justice on the part of the foreign tribunals.

In the present case the claims of Captain Carvell wholly depend upon his title to be constituted or recognised in Peru, as regards moveable property situate in that country, as the legal personal representative of the late Mr. Michael Winder, under the testamentary instruments executed in this country by that gentleman.

But Captain Carvell has not shown to the satisfaction of Her Majesty's Government, either that he has failed to obtain possession of the property of the testator in Peru, in consequence of any interference of the Peruvian Government with the due administration of justice in the case, or that he has himself taken, or even has been willing to take, all proper and necessary steps for establishing and defending his title thereto in the Peruvian courts, the jurisdiction of which over the subject-matter in dispute he has always erroneously refused to recognise.

In fact the whole case appears to Her Majesty's Government to turn upon the fourth question submitted by you to counsel, but upon which they have abstained from giving any satisfactory opinion, namely, whether Captain Carvell was justified in "objecting to the jurisdiction of the Peruvian law courts so far as related to the determination of the validity of the will, and to the administration of the personal estate of the deceased."

Those counsel do indeed express an opinion that, under the circumstances, as represented to them, Captain Carvell was justified in treating the Peruvian court (not as one which had no jurisdiction in the case, but) as one by which "justice could not be expected to be administered," and that he is now entitled to call upon Her Majesty's Government to interfere diplomatically in his favour. But it cannot be supposed that all British subjects may generally decline the jurisdiction of the Peruvian courts, and demand the interposition of their Government in all questions of personal property in Peru, on the ground that those courts "cannot be expected to administer justice;" and, although there are undoubtedly circumstances in the history of this case, which are far from creditable to the administration of justice in Peru, those circumstances are not, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, of such a nature or so directly connected with the proceedings raising the question of the validity of the will, or the title to the testator's Peruvian property, as to furnish any justification for the erroneous course which Captain Carvell has throughout taken in consequence of his unfortunate misconception of the effect of an English probate in a foreign country.

Under these circumstances, I am to inform you, that the interference of Her Majesty's Government in this case must continue to be limited to instructing Her Majesty's representative at Lima, to use his good offices, on behalf of Captain Carvell or his agent, in such a manner as he may consider prudent and discreet with the view of hastening the proceedings of the tribunal and procuring justice to be done in the suit now pending before them.

To Messrs. Dawes.

ILL-TREATMENT OF CAPTAIN WHITE BY THE PERUVIAN AUTHORITIES.

CASE on behalf of HER MAJESTY'S GOVERNMENT.

It having been agreed between the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and the Government of the Republic of Peru, that certain claims of Her Britannic Majesty against the Government of Peru, for compensation to Captain Thomas Melville White, a British subject, for injuries suffered by him, should be referred to the arbitration of the Senate of Hamburgh; and the Senate of Hamburgh having deigned to accept the task of arbitrating on these claims, the following statement of the case is submitted, on behalf of Her Britannic Majesty, for the consideration of the Senate:—

On the 23d March 1861, Captain Thomas Melville White, a British subject of intelligence, education, and fair position in society, and (in the belief of Her Britannic Majesty's Government) a gentleman of probity and good conduct, while proceeding as a passenger from Valparaiso to Guayaquil, in the north of Peru, on board the steamer "Bolivia," was arrested by the Peruvian authorities at Callao, immediately upon the steamer touching at that port. Without receiving notice of any complaint, charge, or accusation against him, he was at once conveyed to the prison of the Inquisition at Lima, in which he was detained until the 27th of August following.

This arrest appears, by certain official reports dated the 1st and 8th of May 1861 (which were communicated on the 16th of May 1861, by the Peruvian Government to the Chargé d'Affaires of Her Britannic Majesty at Lima, and which are printed in the Appendix), to have taken place under the direct orders of the Supreme Government of Peru. The "Bolivia" had touched at the port of Arica on her way from Valparaiso to Callao, and, according to the reports of the Constitutional Prefect of the province of Callao (Don Nicolas Freyre), "a supreme order for Captain White's arrest was communicated by the Ministry of Government to that Prefecture," on the day (23d March) on which it took place, "in virtue of a note addressed by the captain of the port of Arica to the Commandantcy General of Marine." Further particulars are stated in the report of the Captain of the port of Callao, dated the 8th of May 1861, in the following terms:—"By the steamer 'Bolivia,' which anchored in this port on the 23d of March last, came as passenger Ensign Don Antonio Valdivieso, from the port of Arica, who communicated to the first lieutenant of the navy, first adjutant of this office, and who received the said steamer, that he came commissioned by the captain of the port of Arica, Don Pedro Carrero, to advise that the English subject (Mr. Melville White), whom he pointed out, had come on board, a suspicious person for the Supreme Government; in consequence of which Lieutenant Iladoy, with a knowledge of the advice and of the special instructions regarding certain passengers communicated to the Prefecture, came immediately on shore, and as soon as Mr. White arrived at the Mole, he intimated to him the order of arrest, which he obeyed without resistance."

By the treaty of the 10th April 1850, between Great Britain and the Republic of Peru, it is provided (Article VII.), that "the subjects and citizens of either of the contracting parties in the territories of the other shall enjoy full and perfect protection for their persons and property, and shall have free and open access to the courts of justice for the prosecution and defence of their just rights, and they shall be at liberty to employ, in all causes, the advocates, attorneys, or agents of whatever description, whom they may think proper, and they shall enjoy in this respect the same rights and privileges therein as native subjects or citizens." The same treaty contains other and further stipulations to the like effect.

Appendix, Nos. 10,
11, 12, 13, pages

By the fundamental law of Peru, contained in the constitution of the year 1856 (Title IV. Article 18), it is provided that "no one can be arrested without a written order from a competent judge, or from the authorities charged with the prosecution of public order, unless taken in flagrante delicto; and in every case the person arrested should be brought within 24 hours and placed at the disposition of the proper court. The executors of the said order are bound to give a copy of it whenever it is asked for."

By the 19th Article of the same title of the constitution, it is declared, that "prisons are places of security and not of punishment;" and "all severity that may not be necessary for the custody of prisoners is prohibited."

If the arrest of Captain Melville White did, in fact, take place under any "written order from a competent judge, or from the authorities charged with the prosecution of public order," such written order was never produced or exhibited to Captain White; and although he repeatedly (as will be seen in the sequel) demanded from the persons, professing to act in execution thereof, a copy of such order, in virtue of the right given to him by the 18th Article of the Constitution, such demand was never complied with; nor has any such order or any copy thereof been communicated to the Government or to the diplomatic agents in Peru of Her Britannic Majesty, down to the present time.

Captain White was also (notwithstanding repeated demands for such information, both from himself and from Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lima) left without any formal intimation of the charge upon which he was detained by the Peruvian authorities. It was not, indeed, until after he had been for some time in prison, and had been at least once privately interrogated by the Judge of Crime, Don Luis Ponce, that he discovered (which he did accidentally from the perusal of an article in a public newspaper lent to him by one of his fellow prisoners) the nature of that charge.

Don Ramon Castilla, the President of the Peruvian Republic, had been fired at and wounded at Lima, in the previous year, 1860, on the evening of the 25th July, by an unknown hand. The accusation against Captain White, as it appears on the face of the sentence of the Court of First Instance (hereafter stated), was that he was "the author of this crime of assassination." No other charge whatever was made against him.

Not only was this most serious imputation proved in the sequel of the process to be wholly groundless, but no evidence or information whatever of any matter of fact, real or alleged, tending to show that there was the slightest apparent ground for it, or any probable foundation for suspicion or inquiry upon the subject, has ever been brought forward by the Peruvian Government. In order that this may be clearly understood, it will be convenient to postpone all particular reference to the treatment of Captain White while in prison, and to the manner in which the process against him was conducted, until the circumstances bearing upon the history and merits of the accusation itself have been stated.

On the day of the arrest, Señor Don Miguel Baquero, the Sub-prefect and Intendant of Police of the province, received through the Prefecture a "supreme order to transfer Captain White to the prison," placing him at the disposal of the Judge of Crime, Don Luis Ponce. On the 25th of March that judge (according to his own report, dated the 29th April, to the Peruvian Minister of Foreign Affairs), received through the Intendant of Police a note, by which he was charged with the trial of Captain White, "he being accused by the authorities of the port of Arica, in a formal manner, as the individual who fired a ball at his Excellency the President of the Republic, Grand Marshal Don Ramon Castilla, on the evening of the 25th of July 1860. In fulfilment of my duty" (the judge continues), "I proceeded to the prison to commence the 'summary' against the accused. The interrogatory did not pass the limit contained in the said note, nor of the merits shown in the process carried on to discover the author of such a horrible and scandalous crime." At the conclusion of this judicial visit, an order was made by the same judge (or by the court of which he was a member) for the solitary confinement of Captain White, "without communication," during a period, as to the duration of which the statements of Captain

Captain White and of the judge are much at variance. But before this order could be put in force, Captain White (who had drawn up in Spanish, with the assistance of a fellow prisoner who understood the language better than himself, a protest against his imprisonment, which he delivered to Judge Ponce, on the occasion of his visit), found the means of sending for publication to a Lima newspaper called "El Comercio" (which published it on the next day), either a copy of that protest, or the substance of it, in the shape of a letter addressed to Mr. Jerningham, the British Chargé d'Affaires in Peru. In this manner the fact of his arrest was first brought to Mr. Jerningham's knowledge. On the following day (the 27th March) Mr. Jerningham wrote to Don José Fabio Melgar, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, inquiring both into the fact and into the cause of Captain White's arrest and imprisonment, and remonstrating against the omission to send official information of it to Her Britannic Majesty's Legation, according to a regulation made by one of Señor Melgar's predecessors. No. 1, page 18.

In his reply to this communication Señor Melgar, on the 28th of March, professed ignorance of the fact of Captain White's imprisonment, excepting by private information; and added that, "in order to reply to Mr. Jerningham with official data," he had that day called for reports, and would give the information desired upon receiving them. On the 29th of March, having received a short report from Judge Ponce, he communicated it to Mr. Jerningham. The ground of arrest alleged in that document (as reported by Mr. Jerningham to Her Majesty's Government) was, "that news had been received from the Captain of the port of Arica, that from information received from the Commander of the Excise, the former knew, 'de un modo formal,' that Mr. White was the person who attempted to assassinate General Castilla." No. 2, page 18. No. 4, page 19.

Notwithstanding this mention of a "formal" accusation in Judge Ponce's report, no document bearing that character, or which can be supposed to be referred to under that description, was ever brought forward in the process consequent upon the arrest, or communicated to Captain White, except a paper bearing the signature of Don Manuel Romero, the person called "Commander of the Excise" by Mr. Jerningham, but whose more correct description appears to be "Commandant of the Customs Guard House of Arica." As the captain of the port acted upon the information which he received from this person (who was described by name as the accuser in a later report, made by Judge Ponce on the 7th September 1861), that paper acquires an importance, which might not otherwise belong to it. It forms part of the documents constituting the record of the proceedings in the case; and, if any exception should be taken to the representation of its contents made by Captain White (to whom it was read over by Judge Ponce on the 19th, and again on the 22d of August 1861, and who immediately afterwards addressed to Mr. Barton, then acting as Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lima, the letters from which the following passages are extracted), it will be easy for the Peruvian Government to bring forward the true text of the document itself. "I protested" (says Captain White, giving an account to Mr. Barton, on the 20th of August, of what had happened on the 19th), "I protested against being compelled to answer questions, or hear any documents read, until I had been informed of the pretext on which I had been so long severely tortured, and until provided with the documents demanded in my escrito of July 20th. Finding me unshaken in the assertion of this undoubted right, Judge Ponce at length ordered the interpreter to read to me the writing signed 'David Douglas,' in which he says 'he thought me unfavourable to the existing Government of Peru, as he had heard me disapprove of its conduct, and speak feelingly of General Echenique at some house in Bolivia, where he happened to be when I visited it during my late travels in that country;' and another writing, signed by the Government agent, Romero, in which that individual, founding his charge on the statement of Douglas, proclaims me the assassin of General Castilla." No. 19, page 29. No. 16, page 27.

Writing again on the 23d of August 1861, and speaking of what had passed on the 22d, he says: "On the declaration of the person Romero being again read to me, I find that man to state, that he had no knowledge of me up to the 19th of March last (the day on which the steamer 'Bolivia,' on board of which I was at the time a passenger, en route from Valparaiso to Guayaquil, touched at Arica, where he is in constant receipt of moneys from the Peruvian Government and their agents); that, on that date, he was shown a private letter of General Castilla's, addressed to (I think he says) the Scotchman, Douglas; and that the strong desire expressed by General Castilla, in that letter, to get possession of my person, was the principal motive (if not the only one) for denouncing me as the would-be assassin of Grand Marshal Don Ramon Castilla, President of Peru."

If this statement is accurate (and Her Majesty's Government think themselves warranted in believing it, unless it should appear on production of complete and authentic copies of the papers in process that no such matter was contained in any such paper signed by Romero), the conclusion seems unavoidable, that the original responsibility of the accusation itself, as well as that of adopting and acting upon it without any particle of evidence in its support, rests directly with the supreme Government of Peru.

Be this as it may, when Captain White's case was at last brought to trial after an imprisonment of eight months, on the 30th of November 1861, no evidence whatever was offered which had the remotest tendency to support the charge; that of Douglas, on which Judge Ponce had professed to rely, being merely, that, on the witness meeting Captain White in April or May of the preceding year, in the house of one Don Pedro Caso at Corocoro, in Bolivia, Captain White "manifested to him his desire that his Excellency General Castilla should fall from command, and that the Ex-General Echenique should rise to it," and further, that Caso (whom he described "as a great friend of his") communicated to him, at a date not specified, "that a meeting had taken place in his house, sustained with spirits, in which had been toasted the fall from the presidential chair of his Excellency General Castilla, and the elevation to the command of Echenique; indicating at the same time that White was about to do an astonishing thing in Peru; which Caso added, in consequence of Douglas having said that White appeared to be a bad man." The rest of the evidence (the whole consisting of written depositions) produced by the Peruvian Government, appears (by the recital of its purport in the sentence of the Court of First Instance) to have been directed solely to the proof of such facts as the following:—(1). That Captain White was "a man of no known occupation," and "very poor." (2). "That he made frequent voyages between Lima and Bolivia." And (3). That he "was in contact with Echenique and Linares, of whom Douglas saw bills in his favour;" the result of all which was, in the judgment of the Court, to "make it necessary to suppose, as very probable," that Captain White "was an agent" of these two political leaders "in their pretensions to displace from command his Excellency General Castilla; such being the conception formed of him by his countrymen; this opinion being fortified by the circumstance of White having shown himself very pensive when Linares issued the decree of interdiction, it being then that he extended his voyages to the Republic of Chili, where Echenique had transferred himself, they having come to Callao in the same steamer in March last."

On the other hand, (although, in the entire absence of all criminatory evidence, it was unnecessary for the person accused to produce any witnesses), Captain White proved by unexceptionable testimony that he was in the City of Tacua, many hundred miles from Lima, from the 21st to the 28th of July 1860; the crime of which he was accused having been perpetrated at Lima upon the 25th of that month.

In this state of evidence the sentence of the Court necessarily "absolved" Captain White "from the cause, as regards complicity in the crime imputed to him, and in general of co-operating to upset public order." Such, however, is the mode in which justice is administered in Peru, when the Government is the prosecutor, that this Tribunal of First Instance, while acquitting the accused of the only offence laid to his charge, (and also of another offence with which he had not been charged), nevertheless proceeded to adjudge, (on the ground that "every State has the right to expel from its territory vagrant foreigners, and much more so when they are suspected of being implicated in grave crimes,") that Captain White "should be expelled the territory of the Republic, never to return to it."

Upon an appeal to the Superior Court this sentence was revoked by a majority of three out of five judges; and the Superior Court "absolved" Captain White "definitely," and "blamed the judge for not having pronounced sentence within the time provided by the law."

It now becomes necessary to give a detailed account of the treatment of Captain White during his imprisonment, of the manner in which the process was conducted, and of the representations and remonstrances made from time to time on his behalf by Her Majesty's Government and by the diplomatic agents in Peru, of Great Britain.

It has already been stated, that Captain White, after being interrogated in prison by Judge Ponce on the second day after his arrest, (the 25th of March), was separately confined, or placed "incommunicado" by the order of the judge. Mr. Jerningham, having ascertained this by means of a messenger whom he had sent to the prison, addressed a note to the Minister Melgar on the 28th of March, remonstrating in strong terms against this proceeding, the effect of which was, that, while no information of the cause of the arrest had yet been given to Mr. Jerningham himself, (who was the only person capable of protecting the prisoner), he was "placed in a cell, not allowed communication with any one, not even that of a counsel or any friend;" and concluding thus:—

"The undersigned, in all due respect to the Peruvian Government, begs to inform them, that as long as he is Her Majesty's representative in Peru, such acts as the foregoing, without satisfactory reasons being adduced, he cannot and will not allow to take place without entering a most solemn protest against them; and he begs and requests, for the information of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, and for the satisfaction of British residents in Peru and his own, the most complete and entire details respecting the imprisonment of Captain Melville White, as well as an immediate access to him for his legal advisers, and those friends to communicate with him, whom he may wish to see. In a letter published 27th of March, in the "Comercio" newspaper by Captain White, he appeals to the undersigned to obtain for him an immediate trial, which request the undersigned trusts will be forthwith granted."

With respect to the demand of an immediate or very early trial thus made, and frequently afterwards repeated, it will have been seen, that the delay which actually took place was expressly censured, as a violation of Peruvian law, by the sentence of the Superior Court on the final decision of the cause.

Señor Melgar, on the 29th of March 1861, replied to Mr. Jerningham, by stating (in effect) that the proceedings taken were in accordance with the laws of Peru, and that Mr. Jerningham, as the British Chargé d'Affaires, was not officially entitled to receive any information of them. At the same time he communicated to Mr. Jerningham a report, (alleging the cause of the arrest in terms which have been already noticed), which he had then received from Judge Ponce.

On the 13th of April, Captain White addressed a letter to Mr. Jerningham, containing the following statement, which on the following 17th of April was communicated by Mr. Jerningham to Señor Melgar.

"I have the honour to call your attention to the under-mentioned facts, and to solicit most respectfully your prompt interference on my behalf. I was arrested on the 23d ultimo at Callao, when en route from Valparaíso to the north; as my foot touched the quay I was forcibly seized and roughly used, and threatened at the bayonet's point, and publicly hurried to the black hole. In the evening I was brought to Lima and thrown into the prison of the Inquisition, and placed in a foul and loathsome dungeon among condemned and manacled felons. Subsequently, I was kept for several days in complete solitary confinement, and could neither send for nor receive any intelligence nor communicate to you as my Minister, nor with any human being within or without the walls of my prison. I was not permitted to purchase the most ordinary articles of wholesome nutrition, but was compelled to subsist on boiled rice. When requiring to attend to the more urgent calls of nature I have been marshalled to and from the place set apart for that purpose, and shamefully treated whilst there, by a guard of five or six soldiers who seemed to delight in my tortures. I was subjected to a secret and most inquisitorial interrogation, during which intimidation was much and unscrupulously used, while I was energetically protesting against being thus kidnapped and treated by Peruvian officials."

"I, a subject of Her most gracious Britannic Majesty, have been subjected to other gross indignities and cruelties, too numerous to mention here, but which are shown in my prison diary in detail. Twenty-one days have now elapsed since I was ruthlessly torn from civilised society, and without any document having been given or shown to me, or charge made against me, or information why I was thus treated, any remonstrance on my part being only met by threats; and such was the savage conduct of the soldiers, who seemed only to await the slightest order to despatch me, that at length (although I hope not deficient in courage) I was really alarmed for my life, which I was made to feel was in imminent danger; nor have I, up to the present time, been informed by any official on what charge or why I am thus a prisoner and treated in so cruel a manner. I have been interrogated and questioned several times by Government officials, among them by one, who, in a moment of angry excitement, informed me he was the arbiter of my future fate, and that he was a judge named Ponce. When I complained to my interrogators of the strange and unheard of treatment I was undergoing, one of those who composed this secret conclave replied, that the Government would keep me prisoner as long as it suited their purpose, and that I was not entitled to any explanation until the Government had succeeded or failed in making out a case against me. At length, through the compassion of a fellow prisoner, I got a glance at a newspaper, and there found an article wherein it was stated that an Englishman's footstep had been dogged from Arica to Callao, and that he it was who had some months ago attempted to assassinate by shooting General Castilla, and that I am the person; this being the mode in which I for the first time got a glimpse of the nature of the charge likely to be brought against me."

No. 5, page 20.

With the extract from Captain White's letter containing these statements, Mr. Jerningham, on the 17th April 1861, sent a note to Señor Melgar, requesting that they might receive the serious consideration of the Peruvian Government; remonstrating against the treatment to which Captain White had been exposed; and asking for information (among other points) on the two following, viz., whether any written order was issued and exhibited to Mr. White at the time when he was arrested; and "whether the accusation against Mr. White was made by the accusers upon their oath, or adduced as mere hearsay or report?"

Mr. Jerningham added, —

"Captain White has now formally appealed to the undersigned for that protection to which, as a British subject, he is entitled, and he has asked the undersigned to furnish him with positive information as to the crime of which he is accused, which the undersigned must now request of the Peruvian Government to produce; for the meagre and short account forwarded to the undersigned from Judge Ponce by His Excellency in his estimable note of 29th March, cannot be regarded as such. Mr. White also challenges immediate trial, in conformity with equity and justice, and an opportunity fully and openly to refute the criminal imputations which the public journals inform him are laid to his charge. He asks to meet face to face those who endeavour to make his reputation and life answer the purpose of some unholy service. He likewise asks for a complete public prosecution, and loudly protests and claims protection against the inquisitorial system to which he is subjected. He also claims the indemnity and damages from the Peruvian Government, which latter he may consider to be commensurate and just for the violation of his personal liberty and rights as a British subject, for the defamation of his character and reputation as a gentleman, for the charge which has been brought against him, and for the indignities and cruelties which he has suffered. These are Mr. White's requests, which the undersigned now has honour to submit to the Peruvian Government. Without wishing to prejudge the question, or to interfere unduly in the administration of justice in Peru, the undersigned here claims, as he undoubtedly has a right to do, an immediate and prompt and fair trial for Mr. White, in conformity with equity and justice, and that also a full opportunity be given him publicly to refute the charges brought against him, and all that he demands which is founded upon the general laws of reason and justice."

The Peruvian Government had thus very early notice that a demand for indemnity and damages would result from the wrong done by them to Captain White; and that the British Government would expect a strict compliance with their own laws as to promptitude of trial, as to the production of the written authority for the arrest, and as to the treatment of accused persons before trial, and also with the universal rules and principles of justice as to the mode of conducting the proceedings.

No. 6, page 22.

On the 13th of May 1861, Mr. Jerningham again wrote to Señor Melgar, requesting to be informed "whether the trial of Mr. Melville White, British subject, subject, who has now been in prison for more than six weeks under the accusation of having attempted to assassinate Grand Marshal Castilla, is being conducted with that promptitude and expedition which the laws of civilised countries require and expect"? and adding, "much more than ample time has already expired for proving Mr. Melville White guilty or not of the crime of which he is accused; and the undersigned, who reserves to himself the right hereafter of discussing the circumstances respecting the arrest and treatment of Mr. Melville White in prison, must urge the Peruvian Government to stimulate the judicial authorities to conclude, as soon as possible, the case of the above-mentioned British subject."

On the 16th of May 1861, Señor Melgar replied to Mr. Jerningham's letters of the 17th April and the 13th May, by transmitting the official reports of Judge Ponce (dated the 29th April), and of the Prefect, Intendant of Police, and Captain of the port of Callao (dated respectively the 1st and 8th of May), which are printed in the Appendix; together with a note, in which he professed to regard the statements and explanations contained in those reports as sufficient answers to the allegations of Captain White as to his treatment in prison, and to the complaint that the trial was improperly delayed. Don Melgar concluded by saying, that Mr. Jerningham's note of the 17th April had been transmitted to the respective tribunals, "so that his desires may be satisfied, in so far as the laws of the country permit."

With respect to the treatment of Captain White in prison, none of these documents purport to state any facts, except the report of Judge Ponce; who made no attempt to meet the detailed and circumstantial narrative of Captain White, otherwise than by the following argumentative and evasive reply:—

"It is surprising," he said, "the assurance of the accused Melville White, when he supposes that during the interrogatories he was treated with a menacing tone and asperity. You, sir, know well that the mission of the judge is to investigate the crime in a decorous and circumspect manner, which his mission imposes upon him; that it is prohibited to use terror, to infuse fear in the accused, that he should only spontaneously reply to the questions put to him.

"The first interrogatory being concluded, the Court required, and according to the law ordered, whilst some other proceedings were taken, that the accused White should be without communication. That incommunication lasted two days; and for that object was selected a locality which is in the yard of the prison, near to the iron gate which communicates with the door to the street, very ventilated, and which formerly served as the habitation of the governor of the prison; and I will say, that it is infinitely better than that allotted to the political prisoners existing in the prison.

It is necessary, sir, that Melville White must, in an excess of passion on account of his detention, have stated the acts which are read in his complaint to the Chargé d'Affaires and Consul General of Her Britannic Majesty; for it is highly unverisimil, that he should be tormented and menaced in the prison, much more that the undersigned had said to him, that he was the arbiter of his future fate. He says he has complained to the Court of the bad treatment which he supposes conferred upon him, and that he is told that the Government will keep him in prison as long as they choose, and even that his rights are denied, when demanded. A statement of this nature is astonishing. White's representations are admitted; they are substantiated in the regular way, and the decisions upon them are made known to him. If he complains of incommunication, this appears to be refuted by himself; for White, during the two days that he was incommunicated, made publications in the official newspaper, and because he was provided with a newspaper by a prisoner, which revealed the cause of his imprisonment; so that you, sir, will see that he disobeyed the measures ordered by the Court, and caused the intercommunication to be illusory during those two days. These assertions prove, in an undoubtful manner, the predisposition of White to make inadequate and supposed imputations against the proceedings observed towards him.

"As regards the aliment provided to Melville White in the prison, it is an observed precept of the alcalde to administer it to the prisoners at the proper hours. The quality is examined by the visitant judge weekly on Saturdays, by the judges in turn daily, and by other employés of the judicial power. Care is scrupulously taken that they are healthy, nutritious, and of good quality. Moreover, the undersigned, always disposed to distinguish the accused White, spoke with the intendant of police to allow him the pecuniary quota, which the political prisoners received daily; and a subaltern having taken to him the amount for a day's aliment, he declined to receive it, saying to the officer that 'the time would come to receive it all at once.'"

This statement of the judge that Captain White was offered and declined to accept a pecuniary allowance (of a dollar per diem), made by the Peruvian Government to the political prisoners confined in the prison, in order to enable them to provide themselves with some additions to the common gaol diet, is undoubtedly correct. But this is perfectly consistent with his having suffered all the indignities of which he complained. And the judge, in this report, offered no answer whatever to the statements of Captain White as to the manner in which he had been interrogated, without receiving any notice or information of the crime of which he was accused; nor did the judge or Señor Melgar ever reply to Mr. Jerningham's inquiries, whether the order for the arrest had been ever produced to the prisoner, and whether the accusation was made on oath, or on mere hearsay and report. When speaking of the "Court," Judge Ponce means himself and those of his colleagues, who, on several occasions attended ex officio at the prison, and there, without the presence of counsel, attorney, witness, interpreter, or friend on the part of Captain White, put questions to him, and took down what they treated as being his answers, in a manner much better suited to the practice of that "Inquisition" to which the prison had formerly belonged, than to the administration of justice in any civilised country.

With respect to the delay of trial, this report of Judge Ponce (made, it will be remembered, exactly seven months before the actual trial took place), offered the following explanation:

"If, in the cause carried on against Thomas Melville White, any delay is noted, the motive is, because the data proceeded from the Port of Arica to this capital. It has been necessary to send a despatch to the judges of the department of Tacua, which circumstances cause delay in executing the resulting proceeding, notwithstanding the respective notes are renewed by the various steamers; and under date of 25th instant, I received a note from the Judge of First Instance of Arica, advising that, having concluded his proceedings, he had remitted the despatch to the city of Tacua, in order to absolve various declarations conducive to the trial. Finally, there is pending in this court the absolving of the important citation which White makes of the Chargé d'Affaires and Consul General of Her Britannic Majesty, to which end I passed the respective note to you on the 31st of March last, which was replied to by you, sir, on the 3d instant."

It appears from hence, that while Captain White was in prison without personal communication with any professional or other adviser, the Peruvian Government, or their judges, were endeavouring to procure evidence against him from witnesses, with whom he was never confronted, in various parts of the country; and that the judges, when they ascertained, from his answers to their own interrogatories, that he desired any particular witnesses to be examined on his own behalf, took similar means for procuring the testimony of these witnesses. The "citation" of Mr. Jerningham himself, which is represented as "pending," and made an excuse for delay, had been in this manner issued by Judge Ponce, through Señor Melgar, on the 3d of April; and Mr. Jerningham (as he reminded Señor Melgar in a subsequent note of the 18th April), had, on the same day, stated, in a personal interview with that minister, that, although it would be inconsistent with his diplomatic character to recognise or to obey any judicial citation, he would be willing to answer any inquiries bearing upon the matters at issue in Captain White's case, which might at any time be addressed to him in writing through the office of the Peruvian Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Before these explanations were given to Mr. Jerningham at Lima, the Peruvian Government had instructed their minister in London to make a complaint to Her Britannic Majesty's Government of the tone adopted by Mr. Jerningham in his letters of the 27th and 28th March 1861; and, at the same time, to justify, by anticipation, the proceedings taken against Captain White. Accordingly, Don P. Y. de Osma, the Peruvian Minister in London, addressed to Earl Russell, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, on the 13th of May 1861, a Note, which will be found in the Appendix, in which he represented the intervention of Mr. Jerningham as the assumption of "an authority incompatible with with the rights of Peru as an independent and sovereign state," adding (though the statement was at variance with the tenor of Mr. Jerningham's letters, to which it referred, and though it was also apparent that, at the date of those letters, Mr. Jerningham could not know to what extent the laws of Peru might have been violated in the case), that "Mr. Jerningham did not say, nor can he say, that White was proceeded against in an illegal manner, that is to say, contrary to the laws and practices of the republic, or to the treaties which it has with the British empire, which naturally are in perfect agreement with these laws"; and alleging, that "White was not in an incommodious prison, suffering penalties to cause horror in his country or elsewhere, but in a spacious dwelling, with all the conveniences possible and compatible with his condition, as accused of a great crime."

This note was replied to by Earl Russell on the 31st of July 1861, in the following terms:—

Earl Russell to the Peruvian Minister.

"M. le Ministre,

"I HAVE had the honour of receiving your note of the 13th of May last, communicating the statement of your Government respecting the arrest and imprisonment of Captain Melville White, a British subject, on a charge of being concerned in an attempt on the life of General Castilla, the President of Peru.

"Her Majesty's Government have also received despatches on this subject from Mr. Jerningham, and they have given their serious consideration to the case.

"Her Majesty's Government have learnt, with pain and surprise, that Captain White had been arrested and placed in severe solitary confinement on the 23d of March, and had apparently been so detained up to the 28th of April.

"That he was treated with great personal indignity and severity.

"That he received no written notice of the charge on which he was imprisoned.

"That he had not been confronted with any witness, nor subjected to any preliminary hearing or proceeding, nor allowed to see any legal adviser.

"And that all substantial information, as to the motives for this extraordinary severity, had been withheld from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires.

"Her Majesty's Government are at a loss to comprehend how such treatment of a British subject, even if technically justified by Peruvian law, can be seriously adopted and defended by your Government, as if it were in accordance with the ordinary usages and comity of civilised nations. The Government of Peru must be aware that no Peruvian could possibly be thus treated in England.

"Far from disapproving Mr. Jerningham's conduct, Her Majesty's Government have instructed him to demand a prompt and satisfactory explanation of these unjustifiable proceedings, and to require,—

"1st. That Captain White may receive distinct legal notice of the charge against him.

"2d. That his detention, while awaiting his trial, be accompanied by no aggravating severity of treatment.

"3d. That he have access to legal advice, and that his public and legal trial be expeditiously and duly proceeded with.

"I have thought it right, in reply to your note, to place you thus in possession of the views of Her Majesty's Government respecting this very serious case; but I beg leave to add, that Her Majesty's Government consider that the further discussion of this case should be conducted at Lima.

"I have, &c.

(signed) "Russell."

The receipt of the above note was acknowledged by the Peruvian Minister on the 20th of August, expressing at the same time his regret that Her Majesty's Government entertained an opinion that Captain White had been treated with such harshness; and adding, that his Government would, without doubt, feel itself bound to satisfy Her Majesty's Government, that there had been no illegality in the proceedings towards Captain White, nor any harshness nor indignities which would not at once be supported by the laws of the country.

No. 15, page 27.

While this correspondence was proceeding in England, the imprisonment of Captain White continued, without any material change in its circumstances or character, and the process preparatory to the trial was still conducted in the same manner as before, at Lima. From time to time Judge Ponce, accompanied by other judges of his court, attended in the chapel of the prison to continue the series of interrogatories addressed to Captain White; and until the 19th of August 1861 this was done without the presence of an interpreter. By the judicial code of Peru (3d section, 7th title, Articles 271 and 272), provision is made for the appointment of interpreters by the courts, "if it be necessary to examine any of the litigants or witnesses who may be ignorant of the Spanish language"; and it is further provided, that "the omission," in such cases, "to appoint interpreters quashes the prosecution." Captain White was not wholly ignorant of the Spanish language; but he was far from being sufficiently master of it to make it safe for him to rely on his own unassisted knowledge of the meaning, either of legal and technical terms, employed in the questions put, or documents read to him, or of those used by the interrogators, when translating into Spanish, and reducing into the form of written statements to be signed by himself, the sense of the answers which he gave in English. He therefore required that an interpreter should be provided by the court; and he stated that he had made this demand from the very earliest period at which he became subject to this system of judicial interrogation. That statement appears to have been disputed by Judge Ponce; it is certain, however, that on several days, in August 1861, attempts were made to read over to Captain White the documents in process, and to continue his examination thereon, without an interpreter, which he (for that reason) resisted; and that, at last, on the 19th and 22d August the interrogators came to the prison to complete their task, accompanied by an English interpreter named Conroy. It appears, also, that Captain White having presented to Judge Ponce, personally, in the chapel of the prison, on the 20th July 1861, an "escrito," or petition, in the English language, containing certain demands (a copy of which he sent on the same day to Mr. Jerningham), this was rejected by the court, and returned to him, by three judges who came to the prison on the 8th of August, on the ground (apparently) that it ought to have been in Spanish. In this "escrito" Captain White thus expressed himself:—

"Having made repeated applications for a copy of the charge on which I have been arrested and subjected to unheard of brutality by the officials of the Peruvian Government, and also for a copy of the written authority on which such arrest was made, and not having been furnished with either up to this date, although arrested on the 23d of last March, I hereby again formally demand true copies of the above-named documents; and also hereby reiterate my oft-repeated protests against the illegality of the course pursued towards me, against the vile inquisitorial secret ordeal to which I have been subjected, as well as against the continued barbarous oppression, tyranny, and wrong, to which I, a faithful subject of Her Britannic Majesty, am still being subjected by the Peruvian Government."

It may be admitted, that the tone of this "escrito," and generally of Captain White's complaints on the subject of the treatment which he received, is the reverse of calm and dispassionate. But want of calmness and moderation in the tone of his protests and remonstrances can scarcely be held inexcusable in a gentleman accused of an infamous crime without the smallest foundation, and causelessly imprisoned and subjected to gross indignities, for a great length of time, and with an entire neglect both of the rules of the local law, and of the general principles of justice.

The examinations in the prison appear to have been brought to a conclusion on the 19th and 22d August; on which days, in the presence of Mr. Conroy, the interpreter, the whole documents in the "sumario," or process, including the depositions taken, were finally read over by the judge to Captain White; this being the only mode in which he received notice of the evidence which it was proposed to use against him. The information possessed by Her Majesty's Government, as to what passed on these occasions, is necessarily derived from Captain White's own letters to Mr. Barton; some extracts from which have been already given.

At the proceeding of the 22d August, Captain White tendered to the judges, and desired to leave with them, three documents, two of which were replies to the declarations of the witnesses named Romero and Douglas, while the third was a written protest against the conduct of Judge Ponce from the commencement of the process down to that time. The language of this protest was excited and violent, and it might perhaps justly be considered too disrespectful towards the Peruvian Government to be placed on the files of one of their courts. It brought, however, distinctly to the judges' attention the several allegations of Captain White as to matters of fact in which Judge Ponce was himself concerned; among other things, it contained direct statements that, up to that date, no lawyer or other person whatever had been presented by the judges to Captain White to attend to his defence; that copies of the written order for his arrest and indictment, although constantly demanded in writing and verbally, had been up to that date withheld; and that, on the 19th of August, in the chapel of the Inquisition, Judge Ponce, in order to prevent any protest being put in, violently declared that Captain White, if he protested against him, "must protest against every judge in Peru"; adding (in Captain White's words), "that, although I was constantly protesting my innocence, I would find some difficulty in establishing it, and that he would treat me as guilty till I had done so."

The judge did not content himself, on this occasion, with refusing to receive the objectionable documents. He caused Captain White to be put in irons, an event which fortunately had the effect of mitigating, through Mr. Barton's interposition, the remainder of his imprisonment.

On the morning of the next day (the 23d of August), Captain White wrote to Mr. Barton, stating that, after the close of the interview in the chapel on the 22d, Judge Ponce, after having threatened him in the most violent manner, ordered him to be heavily ironed, and secured to the "Barra"; "in which state" (says Captain White) "I remained till after sunset. I was secured to the 'Barra' by means of immense iron shackles (grillos) passed over my ankles, and afterwards rove on the 'Barra.'" He then declared himself to be in alarm for his life, and demanded some guarantee for his safety.

Immediately on receiving this appeal, Mr. Barton, in company with the French Minister, M. de Lesseps, visited the prison; and those gentlemen were personally witnesses of some of the privations and indignities to which Captain White had been subject; while the emotion which he manifested (shedding tears in their presence) afforded the strongest confirmation of the sincerity of his statements, notwithstanding the tone of excitement in which they were made. On the following day, Mr. Barton addressed a note to the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, stating that he had "yesterday visited a British subject in the prison of the Inquisition, named Thomas Melville White, on account of having been informed that the said Thomas Melville White had been put in irons by the judge Señor Ponce on the previous day; and adding, "His Excellency Señor Melgar is aware that Thomas Melville White has now been in prison for the long term of upwards of four months, and although various applications have been made by her Majesty's late Chargé de Affaires requesting that his trial should be brought to as speedy a conclusion as convenient, Mr. White informs the undersigned that up to yesterday no notice had been given to him as to what he was accused of. The undersigned, therefore, respectfully requests of his Excellency Señor Melgar, that he may be informed of the present state of this trial, and if there is a probability of its being shortly concluded, as Mr. Melville White, from his lengthened imprisonment, complains of his liver being affected."

No. 17, page 28.

The immediate effect of this letter of Mr. Barton was that, on the 27th of August 1861, Captain White was removed from the prison of the Inquisition to another place of confinement (the barracks of San Francisco de Paula), much more suitable for an uncondemned person, where he was detained till the 9th of January 1862.

On the 3d of September 1861, Mr. Barton, as Her Majesty's Consul in charge of the Legation at Lima, addressed a note to the Peruvian Government, identical in its terms with that addressed by Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to the Peruvian Minister in London on the 31st July 1861, and which has already been given in extenso in this case.

No reply from the Peruvian Government was received to this communication; but on the 23d of October 1861, his Excellency Señor Melgar forwarded to Her Majesty's Consul authentic copies of a letter of instructions which he had addressed on the 4th of September to Judge Ponce, and of a further report made to him by that judge on the 7th of September, pursuant thereto; both which documents will be found in the Appendix.

Nos. 18, 19, pages

The letter of instructions of the 4th September was as follows:—

“To the Judge of First Instance,

“Dr. Don Luis Ponce.

“From reports of British functionaries resident in this capital to their Government, in consequence of the arrest and imprisonment of Captain Melville White, the said Government has conceived the idea that White was arrested and placed in severe and solitary confinement on the 2d of March last, and continued so until the 28th of April; that he was personally treated with indignity and severity; that he had not received any written notice of the charge for which he was arrested; that he has not been confronted with any of the witnesses, nor subjected to audience nor preliminary proceedings, nor has he been permitted to see any legal adviser. And, as it is necessary to clear up the truths of these assertions, I hope that you will proceed carefully and minutely to report to the Ministry upon this matter as soon as possible.”

No. 19, page 29.

In that part of his report of the 7th September 1861 which related to the subject of the treatment of Captain White in prison, Judge Ponce contented himself with repeating some of the statements made in his former report of the 29th April, and adding, “He has been treated in the prison with the indulgence and equity that should be used towards any person, although he may be accused of the greatest crime. In the prison was assigned to him the habitation that would render him better accommodation, separating him from the contact and union with the other prisoners, without this circumstance depriving him of communication with his friends and the persons who desired to visit him, as has occurred, for he received various visitors, amongst others Colonel O’Gorman”; and then (after referring to the offered pecuniary allowance of one dollar per diem, which, as already stated, Captain White had refused to accept) he proceeded, “These facts, sir, will set aside the idea of the assertions made by White regarding the severe and solitary confinement which he, with temerity, declared he has suffered; for the treatment he has received has been attentive, decent, and with all the accommodation that a prison can give.”

No. 9, page 24.

With respect to the other points noticed in Señor Melgar’s letter, and also with respect to the use of irons on the 22d of August, the judge offered this explanation:—

“As regards the complaint that White had not received a written notice of the charge for which he was arrested, it appears, in the process, to be entirely unfounded; for, in the summary, it has been cited at different times, and which with his own hand and writing he has signed; and when the documents were in a state for him to give his confession, after reading to him his instructive declaration and all the process, on observing that the most serious charges emanated from the declarations made by many of his countrymen, he exclaimed against the Court and other Peruvian authorities, in insult and sarcasm, such as have never been heard nor used in the presence of a judge by any accused person, whatever his class or condition may be. This occurrence made it the duty of the undersigned to order the accused White to be arrested in the stocks for a short time, and which did not last ten minutes; considering that, if it had been overlooked, the bad example would spread among other prisoners, and the judges would find themselves insulted and contemned in their dignity as such.

“As regards the appointment of a legal adviser, what the law directs has been done in this cause; that is to say, that a defender be named after the prisoner has given his confession.

“The judges conclude with the above statement the points referred to in your esteemed note of the 4th instant are answered.”

Three points in this reply demand particular attention.

1st. Judge Ponce does not pretend to show that any written notice of the charge was ever given to the accused, except by way of inference from the references to that charge in the “summary” of the proceedings, to which he obtained Captain White’s signatures on the several occasions when he was interrogated without the presence of an interpreter. But one of the complaints of Captain White has always been, that he was required to sign these proceedings in the Spanish language, without perfectly understanding them, and that it was sought thereby to commit him to various matters, contrary to his intention and meaning.

in

2d. Judge Ponce does not allege that Captain White was ever "confronted with any of the witnesses"; and he must therefore be taken to admit that this never was done.

3d. Judge Ponce not only does not deny the statement that Captain White had not been "permitted to see any legal adviser" (and it is to be recollected that a statement to the same effect was made in Captain White's own rejected protest of the 22d August), but he virtually avows it, stating that, by the law, "a defender" is only to be named after the prisoner has given (what the judge calls) "his confession," the time for which, he had just before said, did not arrive until the 22d of August, the day on which the protest was tendered.

With reference to this last point, it must be added, that, in a document under the seal of the Superior Court, dated the 24th July 1861, signed by Señor Ponce and two other judges, which was delivered by these judges personally to Captain White on the 29th of the same month (being the order for rejection of the "escrito" in the English language already mentioned), one, Manuel Munar, was mentioned as Captain White's "advocate of defence." Upon this subject Captain White wrote thus in a letter to Mr. Barton, dated the 17th September 1861: "None of the Peruvian Government officials had given me any previous information whatever respecting the appointment which they thus professed to have had previously made; and since that time, none of said officials have afforded me the slightest information as to whether any lawyer had been appointed to attend to the defence of my case, although I have repeatedly demanded information on the subject from Judge Ponce, and other Peruvian Government agents," adding that he had "never heard from nor seen" (to his knowledge) this Señor Munar, so represented to be his advocate.

In the same letter, Captain White informed Mr. Barton that on the day on which he then wrote (the 17th September), a person, whom he had never seen before, entered his place of confinement for the purpose of obtaining his signature to "a roll of writings," telling him, at the same time, that "a lawyer was now about to be appointed to attend to the defence" of his case; and he not unreasonably remarks, "It is somewhat unintelligible to me, that if the Peruvian Government and their agents constituted Mr. Manuel Munar my advocate of defence, wholly without my knowledge, in the month of July, they should now, in the latter part of September (nearly six months from the date of the open commencement of their tortures of me), profess to consider my signature on an almost blank folio (as the unknown individual told me to-day they did) as an indispensable preliminary to the realization of a measure which, in their writings of nearly two months back, they proclaimed as having been already accomplished."

The narrative, which has been thought necessary, of the occurrences prior to the adjudication and sentence of the 30th November 1861 is now concluded; and the tenor and effect of that sentence itself, and of the subsequent decree on appeal of the Superior Court, has been already stated. Captain White was not released from his imprisonment until after the decree of the Superior Court had been pronounced. Then, on the 9th of January 1862, he was directed to leave his prison, and to present himself to the Prefect of the city of Lima, in order to be informed of the result of the proceedings. The Superior Court had reversed that part of the sentence of the Tribunal of First Instance which adjudged that, although acquitted of the crime imputed to him, he should be expelled from the territory of Peru; but, notwithstanding that reversal, the Peruvian Government peremptorily ordered him to quit their territory, which he did in consequence of that order, on the 24th of February 1862.

It remains only to give some account of the substance of the communications which afterwards passed between the British Chargé d'Affaires at Lima, acting under the instructions of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, and the Government of Peru.

On the 16th of May 1862, Mr. Barton, Her Majesty's acting Chargé d'Affaires at Lima, addressed to Señor Ribeyro, then the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, the following note:—

"British Legation, Lima, 16 May 1862.

"The undersigned, &c., has the honour to acquaint his Excellency the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs that he has received instructions from Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to notify, in the most formal manner, to the Peruvian Government, that it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to demand from the Government of Peru an adequate compensation for Mr. Thomas Melville White, a British subject, who has been detained for a length of time in prison, without due process, under circumstances at variance with the usages in force among civilized nations. Whilst thus imprisoned, he has been exposed to every kind of indignity and much cruelty; he has been for a long time refused all adequate means of defence, and has, after having suffered upwards of 10 months' imprisonment, been acquitted of the charge preferred against him.

"The undersigned has, &c.

No. 23, page 31.

To this note a long and very argumentative reply (which will be found in the Appendix), refusing compliance with the demand of Her Majesty's Government, was returned on the 15th September 1862 by the Peruvian Minister. In substance he contended that there was sufficient foundation, "data not of a light nature," for the belief that Captain White was guilty of the crime of which he had been acquitted; and represented (notwithstanding the plain terms of the judgment of the Superior Court), that he "was declared not inculpable and totally exempt from punishment, but absolved for the present, because, although there are suspicions against him, and not small ones, proofs which we call complete have been wanting to punish him." "White," he said, "has not been one of those pacific and inoffensive foreigners whom an open and legal proceeding makes worthy of the protection of the laws; he has not been one of those visitors of known industry and moral habits, to whom ample and generous hospitality is dispensed."

"Only," he added, "in case of notorious injustice palpably demonstrated, can diplomatic question be allowed; and in the present question, so far from there being anything to complain of, our judges display that tolerance and clemency that, without being in contradiction with the perfect rights emanating from the law, serve to diminish the evils which the temporary loss of liberty brings with it. White, apart from the motives against him regarding the homicide referred to, was a secret agent to prepare in the territory of the Republic political agitations, contrary to the system established by the Ministry of the Constitution, and by the national will. These charges have not been, as they ought to have been, completely and satisfactorily cleared away by him for the safety of his reputation. Let it not be said, that the means of vindicating himself have been denied; he has had them in abundance, and functionaries officially named, who, with careful solicitude, have defended and worked with diligence to save him. In our republics many foreigners mix themselves in the internal affairs, which certainly do not interest them, and when they are discovered in criminal acts to assist a party to invert the existing order of things, they appeal to their particular condition; they invoke the protection of their ministers, and do not accept the consequences of their faults, of their intervention, and of their vituperable partiality. This is the case with White."

Her Majesty's Government, considering the case to be one (in Señor Ribeyro's own words) "of notorious injustice palpably demonstrated," and considering that injustice to be rather aggravated than extenuated by Señor Ribeyro's arguments, soon afterwards instructed Mr. Jerningham to make a peremptory demand, without further discussion, of the sum of 4,500*l.* as compensation to Captain White for the ill-treatment which he had experienced in Peru. Mr. Jerningham accordingly demanded that sum, by a note dated the 8th of January 1863, and addressed to Don Jose Gregorio Paz Soldan, then the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs; and further intimated, that interest would be claimed from the date of the notification of the demand, in case of delay of payment; and that he was instructed not to conceal from the Peruvian Government that the matter was viewed in a very serious light by Her Majesty's Government, who would not suffer the demand which they had thus put forward to rest unsatisfied.

No. 24, page 32.

To this note the Peruvian Minister returned, on the 17th January 1863, another long and argumentative reply, inviting further discussion of the subject, but declining to admit the principle that any compensation was due. Mr. Jerningham rejoined, that his instructions did not permit him to enter into or continue any such discussion. The Peruvian Minister then stated, in a further note, dated the 27th of January 1863, that Mr. Jerningham's communication had been submitted to the President of the Republic; and, after meditating on its contents, the President was of opinion, that if the orders of Her Majesty's Government precluded discussion, yet there was still a resource left for attaining an honourable result, in conformity with the principles of international right, by submitting the final decision of the question to the arbitration of a friendly power.

No. 25, page 33.

No. 27, page 34.

In conformity with this suggestion, it was agreed between the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and the Government of the Republic of Peru, that the question as to the right of Mr. Melville White to compensation from the Peruvian Government, as well as the question as to the amount of that compensation, if any should be proved due to him, should be referred to the arbitration of a friendly power; and by a note verbale signed at London in July 1863 by the representatives of the two Governments, it was agreed that they would address a joint invitation to the Government of the Free Hanseatic city of Hamburg, requesting the Senate to pronounce a decision on those points. The Senate of Hamburg has since been pleased to accede to this request.

No. 28, page 35.

Upon the grounds appearing in the foregoing case, it is submitted that Captain Thomas Melville White is entitled to substantial pecuniary compensation from the Peruvian Government:

1. For his arrest and long and unjust imprisonment upon a most serious, but wholly groundless and unsupported accusation.

2. For the sufferings and indignities to which he was subjected during his confinement in prison.

3. For the neglect of the rules and principles, both of Peruvian law and of universal justice, manifested in the delay of his trial, and in the course and method of the procedure, prior thereto.

And, lastly, for his expulsion from Peruvian territory as the result and sequel of these unjust proceedings,

No. 1.

Mr. Jerningham to Señor Melgar.

Lima, 27th March 1861.

The undersigned, &c., has the honour to address himself to his Excellency Don José Fabio Melgar, Minister for Foreign Affairs of Peru, to inquire if it is true that a British subject, named Mr. White, has been arrested and put in prison by order of Peruvian authorities; and he demands to know why and wherefore this has been done, and that Her Britannic Majesty's Legation has not been immediately informed of it, since it was expressly ordained to the Peruvian police authorities, when his Excellency Don Miguel Carpio was Minister for Foreign Affairs, to acquaint the undersigned, directly, of such arrests.

The undersigned trusts, however, that his Excellency will, upon the receipt of this note, immediately satisfy him upon this point, as the liberty and rights of one of Her Majesty's subjects are involved by this proceeding, for which, as yet, no information, except through the newspapers, has been afforded to the undersigned.

The undersigned, &c.

No. 2.

Señor Melgar to Mr. Jerningham.

Lima, 28th March 1861.

The undersigned, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Peru, had the honour, last night, to receive the Note of the Honourable Charge d'Affaires and Consul General of Her Britannic Majesty, dated yesterday, in which he requests some information regarding the imprisonment of the British subject, Mr. White. The undersigned, until now, was not aware of this fact, excepting by private information; and in order to reply to Mr. Jerningham with official data, he this day requests the corresponding reports.

As soon as they are obtained, he will have the honour to satisfy the desires which Mr. Jerningham has signified to him.

With this motive the undersigned has the honour to renew, &c.

No. 3.

Mr. Jerningham to Señor Melgar.

Lima, 28th March 1861.

The undersigned has just received the estimable Note, dated to-day, which his Excellency Señor Melgar has done him the honour to write, in answer to his of yesterday's date, respecting the demand which the undersigned made for information concerning the arrest of Captain Melville White, a British subject.

His Excellency in his communication says that he only knew of this arrest by private notices, and that he must request official information respecting it, which he will forward when received.

On account of the secret and inquisitorial way in which Captain White has been arrested and placed "incomunicado," a mode which the free-born English nation look upon with abhorrence, and will not stand from any one; and no information having been given directly about it to the undersigned, and no reason adduced and sent to Her Majesty's Legation why this British subject had been incarcerated, the undersigned begs, in a most respectful manner, to inform his Excellency, is a most unjustifiable act, which he is sure Her Majesty's Government will never countenance or permit, and against which the undersigned, for not having been informed of such an act officially, and not having received proper or any reasons for its accomplishment, begs now firmly and loudly to protest.

If Captain White is accused of illegal acts, it is certainly the duty of the Peruvian Government to have informed the undersigned immediately of the nature of those accusations; but there he is, Captain White, placed in a cell, not allowed communication with any one, not even that of a counsel or any friend, and this upon grounds which nothing, it appears, can justify in the eyes of the undersigned, as he has not been made cognizant of the cause of his arrest.

The undersigned, in all due respect to the Peruvian Government, begs to inform them that, as long as he is Her Majesty's representative in Peru, such acts as the foregoing, without satisfactory reasons being adduced, he cannot and will not allow to take place without entering a most solemn protest against them; and he begs and requests for the information of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, and for the satisfaction of British residents in Peru and his own, the most complete and entire details respecting the imprisonment of Captain Melville White, as well as an immediate access to him for his legal advisers, and those friends to communicate with him whom he may wish to see.

In a letter published 27th of March, in the "Comercio" newspaper, by Captain White, he appeals to the undersigned to obtain for him an immediate trial, which request the undersigned trusts will be forthwith granted.

The undersigned, &c.

No. 4.

Señor Melgar to Mr. Jerningham.

Lima, 29th March 1861.

The undersigned, Minister for Foreign Affairs, had the honour to receive yesterday evening the note of that date, in which the Honourable Chargé d'Affaires and Consul of Her Majesty is pleased to insist on having a detailed communication of the reasons why Mr. Thomas Melville White, a British subject, has been arrested and is kept in custody au secret.

In the evening of the 27th, the undersigned received the first note from the Honourable Mr. Jerningham, of similar tenor from that which he is now answering. He acknowledged the receipt of the same yesterday morning, telling Mr. Jerningham that he was about to make inquiries upon the fact in question, in order to reply as requested; and before the information asked for could be obtained, the Chargé d'Affaires has sent to him the Note of yesterday's date.

While replying to that Note, the undersigned has received the report of the magistrate in whose jurisdiction the British subject, Mr. White, is placed, copy of which he has the honour to forward Mr. Jerningham.

But there are in the Note to which the undersigned is replying, claims and protests which it is the duty of the undersigned not to pass without notice.

Mr. Jerningham complains that no detailed account has been given to him of the reasons for the imprisonment of Mr. White and for his being kept au secret; he says that the manner in which Mr. White was arrested, and his being detained au secret, would produce horror in England; he protests against both acts, and asks to be allowed himself to communicate with the prisoner, and that his friends who wish to visit him may also be allowed to do so.

The undersigned, proceeding on the principle that the foreigner should be subject to the laws of the country which he visits, that the judicial power is independent, and that the laws of one country are not applicable to those of another, is ready to believe that the Honourable Mr. Jerningham will admit that a British subject accused of a crime in Peru might be arrested in accordance with the laws of Peru, be put in prison and kept "au secret" as long as the law allows the magistrate to retain him in this state, without its being necessary, for all this, to give him (Mr. Jerningham) a previous communication of the accusation, and without the Peruvian Government being able to interfere with the acts of the courts. This is precisely what has taken place in the case of the British subject, Mr. White, as Mr. Jerningham will see by the copy of the report above mentioned.

It is not at all to be inferred from this that Mr. Jerningham may not, as he may think proper, put forward such claims as may be in his competence.

Mr. Jerningham, in his note of the 27th, appeals to an order which he says has been given, to the effect that, in case of the imprisonment of foreign subjects, this should be made known to the public agents of their respective nations; but it is easily understood that a measure of extreme courtesy could not be a ground for the strange obligation which Mr. Jerningham would make binding on the Government of Peru. Mr. Jerningham will see, moreover, that the execution of such a measure is surrounded with difficulties, if it be understood that it should be carried out in the case of arrests of foreigners taking place in the whole extent of the territory. Above all, the undersigned cannot look upon that provision otherwise than as without force [en desuso], since arrests of foreigners of all nations have for some time past [de tiempo atra] taken place without notice having been given to the agents of their respective Governments.

Finally, after declining to accede to the protests of Mr. Jerningham, the undersigned protests, in his turn, against the pretension which he has put forward that the custody of Mr. White, "au secret," decreed by a competent magistrate in conformity with the laws, be terminated, because this would imply a pretension to interfere with the administration of justice in an independent nation. Upon this particular the Government of the undersigned will refer to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty by the proper channel.

The undersigned has, &c.

No. 5.

Mr. Jerningham to Señor Melgar.

Lima, 17 April 1861.

THE undersigned, &c., begs to have the honour to forward to his Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Peru, for the information of his Government, an extract of a letter which has been addressed to the undersigned by Captain Melville White, a British subject, concerning whose arrest and imprisonment previous correspondence has passed between the undersigned and his Excellency.

The undersigned solicits his Excellency most particularly to submit this extract to the serious consideration of the Peruvian Government, and invite them to weigh, most seriously, the complaints and allegations which it contains.

According to Mr. White's account, he appears to have been forcibly seized, roughly used, and threatened with the bayonet's point, and publicly hurried to the Black Hole in prison immediately when he put his foot upon the quay at Callao, on the 23d of March last.

The undersigned wishes to ask his Excellency, whether any written order was issued and exhibited to Mr. White at the time when he was arrested, for his Excellency knows very well that it is against the laws of this country to arrest a person without exhibiting a written order issued by a competent authority, except in cases of "infragante."

Mr. White, "in the evening of that day (23d March), was brought to Lima, and then thrown into the prison of the Inquisition, and was placed in a foul and loathsome dungeon amongst condemned and manacled felons." Subsequently he was put in solitary confinement, and kept so for several days, and could neither send for nor receive any intelligence nor communicate with the undersigned, nor with any human being within or without the walls of the prison. He was not even permitted to purchase the ordinary articles of nutrition, but compelled to subsist on boiled rice. Other indignities, to be found in his letter, he says he was subjected to by his guard of soldiers, who, he says, appeared to delight in his tortures.

With respect to this treatment, which the undersigned here brings to the notice of the Peruvian Government, if true and correct (and from what the undersigned has heard of the proceedings of subordinate authorities, and Peruvian prison practices on previous occasions, he fears it is undoubtedly so), he begs most respectfully to remind his Excellency that according to the constitutional law of Peru, "prisons are places of detention and not of punishment."

An individual accused of a crime, however bad, cannot by the laws, then, of this country, be punished until his guilt is proved and brought home to him, or before he receives his sentence of condemnation.

Why, then, has Mr. White been so severely dealt with, placed with felons, and subsequently shut up in solitary confinement for several days, not allowed to communicate with the undersigned, or any one, and denied the permission to purchase the most ordinary articles of nutrition? What is this but punishment, and severe punishment? The

Peruvian

Peruvian authorities have no right, by the laws of their own country, to treat any accused person in such a way, however great the crime he might be accused of; detention is only allowed to prevent evasion, not punishment, as if the accused already were condemned.

These are two circumstances to which the undersigned feels it his duty to draw his Excellency's attention, and he must beg to request answers, to which he is undoubtedly entitled, as the protector of all British subjects who may visit or reside in this country. These are: Whether the Peruvian law has been strictly complied with in Mr. White's case, viz., whether Mr. White was examined by the right and competent authority designed in the laws, within 24 hours after his arrest? and, Whether the accusation against Mr. White was made by the accusers upon their oath, or adduced as mere hearsay or report?

Mr. White says, he was subjected to a secret and most inquisitorial questioning, during which intimidation was much and unscrupulously used. Can this really have been the questioning or examination prescribed by the laws above alluded to, and within the prescribed time, or was this afterwards? As for the intimidation which Mr. White declares was had recourse to, if such was really the case, such a mode of proceeding cannot be too highly reprobated.

Mr. White now states, that 21 days have elapsed since he was torn from civilised society; that up to that time no document whatever has been given him or shown to him, or charge made against him, or information why he has been thus cruelly treated; any remonstrance on his part only met with threats; and that such was the savage conduct of the soldiers, who seemed only to await the slightest order to despatch him (kill him); that at length, though not deficient in courage, he really felt alarmed for his life, which he was made to feel was in imminent danger; and he adds, that up to the present time he has not been informed by any official on what charge, or why, he is thus a prisoner, and is treated in so cruel a manner.

Several times, he says, in his letter, that he has undergone interrogatories by Government officials, amongst whom, by one, who, in a moment of excitement, informed him that he was the "arbiter" of his future fate, and that he was a judge named Poncê. When complaining to the interrogators of the strange treatment he was undergoing, one of the three interrogators replied to Mr. White, that the Peruvian Government would keep him in prison as long as it suited their purpose, and that he was not entitled to any explanations until the Government had succeeded or failed in making out a case against him.

At length, through the medium of a fellow prisoner, Mr. White, obtaining a glance at a newspaper, found in an article that he was charged with the horrible crime of attempting to assassinate by shooting at the President of the Republic.

This was the first time, he adds, that he caught a glimpse of the nature of the charge likely to be brought against him.

Such is the succinct account given by Mr. White to the undersigned of what has befallen him since his arrest and imprisonment, many of the statements of which must cause in the mind of the undersigned the greatest surprise, for he is at a loss to conceive how, in these days of enlightenment, progress, and liberty, an unfortunate person can be denounced, imprisoned, and treated with such extreme severity, before trial, and even kept in ignorance of the very crime of which he is accused.

Captain White has now formally appealed to the undersigned for that protection to which, as a British subject, he is entitled, and he has asked the undersigned to furnish him with positive information as to the crime of which he is accused, which the undersigned must now request of the Peruvian Government to produce; for the meagre and short account forwarded to the undersigned, from Judge Ponce, by his Excellency, in his estimable note of 29th March, cannot be regarded as such.

Mr. White also challenges immediate trial, in conformity with equity and justice, and for an opportunity fully and openly to refute the criminal imputations, which, he says, the public journals inform him are laid to his charge. He asks to meet, face to face, those who endeavour to make his reputation and life answer the purpose of some unholy service.

He likewise asks for a complete public prosecution and trial, and loudly protests and claims protection against the inquisitorial system to which he is subjected. He also claims the indemnity and damages from the Peruvian Government which later he may consider to be commensurate and just, for the violation of his personal liberty and rights as a British subject, for the defamation of his character and reputation as a gentleman, for the charge which has been brought against him, and for the indignities and cruelties which he has suffered.

These are Mr. White's requests, which the undersigned now has the honour to submit to the Peruvian Government.

Without wishing to prejudge the question, or to interfere unduly in the administration of justice in Peru, the undersigned here claims, as he undoubtedly has a right to do, an immediate and prompt and fair trial for Mr. White, in conformity with equity and justice, and that also a full opportunity be given him publicly to refute the charges brought against him, and all that he demands which is founded upon the general laws of reason and justice.

In such a grave and serious charge as that of seeking to assassinate the chief of the state, any levity or illegality on the part of the legal authorities may give rise to the most serious consequences. England, who can challenge the world as the spot where justice is most impartially administered, and which is often mentioned as the classic land of liberty, will expect and require from Peru, who also aspires to be classed with free and generous nations, that, in this case of Thomas Melville White, as in all others where British subjects are concerned, a most impartial trial be given in conformity with the laws of sovereign justice and equity, and that this should be granted and take place as promptly and conclusively as possible.

The note of his Excellency, of 29th of March, in answer to that of the undersigned of the 27th ultimo, with the tenor of which the undersigned cannot possibly agree, the undersigned will have the honour of replying to later on.

Mr. Jerningham to Señor Melgar.

Lima, 13 May 1861.

THE undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul General, has the honour to request his Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Peru, to inform him whether the trial of Mr. Melville White, British subject, who has now been in prison for more than six weeks, under the accusation of having attempted to assassinate Grand Marshal Castilla, is being conducted with that promptitude and expedition which the laws of civilized countries require and expect.

Much more than ample time has already expired for proving Mr. Melville White guilty or not of the crime of which he is accused, and the undersigned, who reserves to himself the right hereafter of discussing the circumstances respecting the arrest and treatment of Mr. Melville White in prison, must urge the Peruvian Government to stimulate the judicial authorities to conclude, as soon as possible, the case of the above-mentioned British subject.

The undersigned has, &c.

Peruvian Minister in London to Earl Russell.

My Lord,

Peruvian Legation, London, 13 May 1861.

IN compliance with the commands of my Government, I have the honour to lay before your Excellency the facts which constitute the following communication:—

At the end of the month of March last, Thomas Melville White, a subject of Her Britannic Majesty, was arrested in Lima, and brought for trial by the proper court of justice, as accused of complicity in an attempted murder on the person of his Excellency the President of Peru.

On the 27th, one or two days after this arrest, the Honourable Chargé d'Affaires of Her Majesty addressed to the Minister of Foreign Affairs a communication, asking him "if it was true that a British subject, named White, had been arrested and imprisoned by order of the Peruvian authorities, that he desired to know the cause of his arrest, and why a knowledge of the fact had not been communicated to him," adding, that "the liberty and rights of a British subject being involved in this proceeding, he hoped that the Minister would reply to his demand without delay."

The following day, in acknowledging the receipt of Mr. Jerningham's Note, the Minister of Foreign Affairs said, that he had asked for official informations for the purpose of answering him, and that as soon as he received them, he would have the honour to satisfy the wishes of his Excellency. Notwithstanding this explicit declaration, Mr. Jerningham thought proper not to wait for the fulfilment of the promise of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, but addressed to him on that day, the 28th, a note, of which, for its matter and form, it is to be desired that a complete copy has been already sent to your Excellency. In it Her Majesty's Honourable Chargé d'Affaires protests against the arrest of White as an unjustifiable act, on the ground that it had taken place "in a secret and inquisitorial manner, and without the Government of Peru, as was its duty (such was his Excellency's expression), having informed him of the arrest, and of the nature of the charges which had given rise to it," and concludes by asking, "that White should be put in communication with his friends and counsellors, because the keeping him 'au secret' was a mode of proceeding which caused horror, and which the free-born English nation could not tolerate of any"; also, that he should be furnished, for the knowledge of Her Majesty's Government, and the satisfaction of the English residents in Peru, with the fullest and most complete details respecting the case.

I request your Excellency to be pleased to notice the reply which the Minister of Foreign Affairs gave to this protest, and which I have now the honour to enclose.

Mr.

Mr. Jerningham, as your Excellency will have observed, did not say, nor can he say, that White was proceeded against in an illegal manner, that is to say, contrary to the laws and practices of the Republic, or to the treaties which it has with the British empire, which naturally are in perfect agreement with the laws. He simply assumes, with his intervention in this case, an authority incompatible with the rights of Peru as an independent and sovereign state, forgetting, perhaps, that if there be one Government and nation which more scrupulously respects those rights than others do, that Government and that nation is the British.

If every foreigner who treads the soil of Peru is immediately, and as long as he remains there, subject to the laws of the country, if the intervention of diplomatic agents in favour of the subjects and citizens of the nations respectively represented by them is inadmissible except in cases of refusal or manifest delay of justice, if by the laws of Peru every person brought to justice must remain "au secret" as long as the authority concerned thinks it necessary for the best ends of justice, it seems to me that your Excellency will have no difficulty in believing the surprise of the Peruvian Government at the conduct of the Honourable Mr. Jerningham to be well founded; and, moreover, White has not been treated in the manner which Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires appears to intimate, which is foreign to the national character, as his Excellency may have observed by the experience gained during his residence in Peru. White was not in an incommodious prison, suffering penalties to cause horror in his country or elsewhere, but in a spacious dwelling, with all the conveniences possible and compatible with his condition, as accused of a great crime.

The object of the Government of Peru in giving me instructions upon this matter has been to inform Her Majesty's Government of the same directly, in order thus to obviate any impression, however remote it might be, discordant with the good relations which unite the two, or incompatible with the respect due by the Government and people of Peru to the rights of the Queen's subjects.

Señor Melgar to Mr. Jerningham.

Lima, 16 May 1861.

THE reports, an authentic copy of which I have the honour to enclose to you, made by the Judge Don Luis Ponce, carrying on the criminal cause against Mr. Thomas Melville White, by the Captain of the port of Callao, by the prefect of that constitutional province, by the intendant of police of Lima, and by the prefect of the same department, will persuade you, sir, how unfounded are the complaints of the said White, since it is not true, as he asserts, that he has remained in a foul dungeon, suffering all kinds of punishment, mal-treatment, and even want of food.

I have especially to call your attention to the following facts referred to in these reports: White, being arrested in the port of Callao, on the 23d of March last, was brought to this capital, and gave his instructive declaration on the 25th of the same month; that is to say, attending to the distance and the precautions that have to be adopted with accused persons, the preliminaries exacted by the laws were fulfilled within the time fixed by them for the commencement of the trial. It is, moreover, proved that the habitation in which he was placed has commodities, which certainly other detained persons do not enjoy; that White refused to receive the daily allowance of money offered to him; that the delay in the judicial proceedings, which is the aspect under which I took this matter into consideration, arises from the nature of the accusation, and from your Honour not having replied to the note in which I stated that you should absolve an important citation which results from the summary; and finally, that if there was an order for incommunication, this was not fulfilled by White, when he confesses that he read newspapers, wrote letters, and even published an article in the "Commercio."

If, from consideration for the appreciable recommendations of your Honour regarding the exact administration of justice, I have looked for these elucidations, and if, from the same consideration for your Honour personally, I have believed that I might inform you of the details referred to, I do not doubt that, participating in equal sentiments, your Honour will cause the accused to comprehend the falseness of the facts which he referred to.

Admitting, as a recommendation, the worthy note of your Honour of 17th April last, I have transcribed it to the respective tribunal, so that the desires of your Honour may be satisfied in so far as the laws of the country permit.

REPORT OF JUDGE PONCE.

(Enclosure 1, in No. 8.)

(Translation.)

M. Minister,

IN making the report which you, sir, have been pleased to request of the undersigned relative to the complaint made by Thomas Melville White to the Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General of Her Britannic Majesty, I have to state that on the 25th of March last I received through the Intendant of Police a note by which the trial of the said White was charged to me, he being accused by the authorities of the port of Arica in a formal manner, as the individual who fired a ball at his Excellency the President of the Republic, Grand Marshal D. Ramon Castilla, on the evening of the 25th of July 1860.

In fulfilment of my duty, I proceeded to the prison to commence the summary against the accused; the interrogatory did not pass the limit contained in the said note, nor of the merits shown in the process carried on to discover the author of such a horrible and scandalous crime. It is surprising, sir, the assurance of the accused Melville White, when he supposes that during the interrogatories he was treated with a menacing tone and asperity. You, sir, know well that the mission of the judge is to investigate the crime in a decorous and circumspect manner, which his mission imposes upon him; that it is prohibited to use terror, to infuse fear in the accused, that he should only spontaneously reply to the questions put to him. The first interrogatory being concluded, the court required, and according to the law ordered, whilst some other proceedings were taken, that the accused White should be without communication. That incommunication lasted two days, and for that object was selected a locality which is in the yard of the prison, near to the iron gate which communicates with the door to the street, very ventilated, and which formerly served as the habitation of the governor of the prison; and I will say that it is infinitely better than that allotted to the political prisoners existing in the prison. It is necessary, sir, that Melville White must, in an excess of passion on account of his detention, have stated the acts which are read in his complaint to the Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General of Her Britannic Majesty, for it is highly unversimil that he should be tormented and menaced in the prison, much more that the undersigned had said to him that he was the arbiter of his future fate. He says he has complained to the court of the bad treatment which he supposes conferred upon him, and that he is told that the Government will keep him in prison as long as they choose, and even that his rights are denied, when demanded.

A statement of this nature is astonishing. White's representations are admitted; they are substantiated in the regular way; and the decisions upon them are made known to him. If he complains of incommunication, this appears to be refuted by himself, for White during the two days that he was incommunicated (he) made publications in the official newspaper, and because he was provided with a newspaper by a prisoner, which revealed the cause of his imprisonment, so that you, sir, will see that he disobeyed the measures ordered by the Court, and caused the incommunication to be illusory during those two days. Those assertions prove in an undoubted manner the predisposition of White to make inadequate and supposed imputations against the proceedings observed towards him.

As regards the aliment provided to Melville White in the prison, it is an observed precept of the alcalde to administer it to the prisoners at the proper hours. The quality is examined by the visiting judge weekly on Saturdays, by the judges in turn daily, and by their employes of the judicial power. Care is scrupulously taken that they are healthy, nutritious and of good quality. Moreover, the undersigned, always disposed to distinguish the accused White, spoke with the Intendant of Police to allow him the pecuniary quota which the political prisoners receive daily; and a subaltern having taken to him the amount for a day's aliment, he declined to receive it, saying to the officers that "the time would come to receive it all at once."

I will conclude the present, stating, that if in the cause carried on against Thomas Melville White any delay is noted, the motive is, because as the data proceeded from the port of Arica to this capital, it has been necessary to send a despatch to the judges of the department of Tacua, which circumstances cause delay in executing the resulting proceedings, notwithstanding the respective notes are renewed by the various steamers; and, under date of 25th instant, I received a note from the Judge of First Instance of Arica advising, having concluded his proceedings, he had remitted the despatch to the city of Tacua, in order to absolve various declarations conclusive to the trial. Finally, there is pending in this Court the absolving of the important citation which White makes of the Charge d'Affaires and Consul-General of Her Britannic Majesty, to which end I passed the respective note to you on the 31st of March last, which I was replied to by you, sir, on the 3d instant.

I await, sir, the remission by the Judge of First Instance of Tacua of the despatch in order to conclude this summary.

M. Colonel Prefect,

ON the 23d of March was communicated to me, through the Prefecture, the supreme order to transfer to the prison Mr. Thomas Melville White, placing him at the disposal of the Judge of Crime, Dr. D. Luis Ponce, which was done. On the following day the Adjutant of this Intendancy, D. Juan Portalatino Garcia, having taken to him (White) the daily succour which is given to political prisoners, corresponding to four days, he would not receive it, indicating that he still had money, and that later it should be taken to him altogether. In effect, several days having passed, the same adjutant carried the succour of fifteen days, and then the said White refused to receive it at all, stating that an English colonel who was with him, had told him not to receive anything, and that he had sufficient from his friends, and therefore he offered his thanks; which took place in the presence of several political prisoners there, according to the report of the same adjutant in this office, of which the judge of the cause was informed the same day; the daily succour having been returned to the treasury, which the said White refused to receive.

This is all I can say in compliance with the preceding supreme decree.

Sir,

THE arrest and trial of Thomas Melville White proceeds from a supreme order communicated by the Ministry of Government to this Prefecture on the 23d of the past month (March), and transmitted on the same date to the Intendant of Police. The report of him and that of the Judge of Crime give sufficient light for your Excellency to know the facts that have followed that act, and how unfounded is the complaint of the said White. As regards the treatment which he receives in the prison the Prefecture can say nothing, because the deposit for prisoners depends upon the President of the Superior Court of Justice.

Meritorious General Prefect,

COMPLYING with the preceding superior decree, I have to state that by the steamer "Bolivia," which anchored in this port on the 23d of March last, came as passenger Ensign Don Antonio Valdivieso from the port of Arica, who communicated to the

First Lieutenant of the Navy, First Adjutant of this office, and who received the said steamer, that he came commissioned by the captain of the port of Arica, D. Pedro Carrerio, to advise that the English subject, Mr. Melville White (who he pointed out), had come on board, a suspicious person for the Supreme Government; in consequence of which Lieutenant Iladoy, with a knowledge of the advice and of the special instructions regarding certain passengers communicated to the Prefecture, came immediately on shore; and, as soon as Mr. White arrived at the Mole, he intimated to him the order of arrest, which he obeyed without resistance, and he was placed at your disposal; and, if after the said White was delivered over to you, any occurrence has taken place, I am ignorant of it; but his apprehension on the Mole was effected without any extortion or violence. Sir,

THE report issued by the captaincy of this port shows, that Mr. Melville White was arrested without any act of violence being committed, for the moment the said order was intimated to him he obeyed it without resistance. The detention was ordered in virtue of a note addressed by the captain of the port of Arica to the Commandantcy-General of Marine, copy of which I enclose, assuring, that Mr. White is the assassin of his Excellency the President. Immediately on his being arrested, I informed the Supreme Government, who ordered that White should be sent to the capital, which order was fulfilled with the greatest exactitude. Mr. Jerningham to Señor Melgar.

Lima, 18 May 1861.

THE undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General, had the honour to receive from his Excellency Don José Fabio Melgar, Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Peru, a note dated 16th May, in which is enclosed a copy of a note from Judge Ponce respecting the judicial proceedings and other information concerning the accused Mr. Melville White.

The undersigned will only at present refer to that part of Judge Ponce's note in which he states, that a most important allusion to the undersigned by Mr. White in his declaration must be cleared up by his court, respecting which the judge wrote to his Excellency on the 30th of March last.

His Excellency communicated to the undersigned this information in his note of 3d April, and in it was requested of the undersigned, that he should make a declaration before Judge Ponce where he choose; in fact, that the judge would come and take his declaration in the place that he should select.

Upon receiving this note from his Excellency, although greatly surprised at such an unusual communication, the undersigned proceeded immediately to his Excellency's office, and told him that the diplomatic character of the undersigned prevented him from appearing before a judge, as such an authority had no jurisdiction over him whatever, in the capacity the undersigned held in this Republic; but that as Mr. White had mentioned the undersigned in his declaration, and that which the undersigned might have to say with respect to Mr. White might be of utility (meaning as regarded Mr. White), that the undersigned had no objection to answer, or not, any questions which the Peruvian Government forwarded to the undersigned in their name and as coming from them, of course these questions being addressed by Judge Ponce to his Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Peru.

This is what the undersigned told his Excellency in two conversations, and he has now the honour to give him the same in writing. What took place between Mr. White and the undersigned, his Excellency must be informed, occurred at Her Britannic Majesty's Legation, which is England, where no judges, save British authorities, have any jurisdiction whatever.

Surely Judge Ponce must have imbibed very erroneous notions of international law, if he imagines that because an accused may have mentioned the name of the undersigned in a judicial process, the undersigned is obliged to come and make a declaration before him of anything that may have been said by the undersigned and Her Britannic Majesty's subjects, whose duty it is the undersigned's to protect, in that place which is guarded by

by its acknowledged privileges, just in the same manner as is the Peruvian Legation in London.

The pretension to make the undersigned amenable for any intercourse he may have with his fellow countrymen at the British Legation, or anywhere in Peru where the undersigned may be, is a pretension so preposterous and new, in these days of the nineteenth century, that during the whole course of the diplomatic life of the undersigned, 27 years, he has never once seen such a pretension put forward.

Being accredited to the Peruvian Government by that of Her Britannic Majesty, the undersigned has no other official intercourse with any other power or authorities in Peru. Besides, what would be the use of Judge Ponce's coming to take the declaration of the undersigned at the British Legation? Why, the judge's jurisdiction would end at the entrance of that dwelling, and how could Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires accredited to the Peruvian Government make a declaration before a Peruvian judge, when his official diplomatic capacity forbids him to acknowledge his authority or jurisdiction in matters public or private concerning himself, or himself with others, as he is only responsible for his acts to the authorities of Great Britain?

The undersigned is sorry to say, with all the gravity with which such a subject ought to be treated, that he recognises in the attempt, patronised by the Peruvian Government, a blow aimed at the time-honoured and universally acknowledged privileges of diplomatic servants, which, however, will never be allowed to take effect as long as the undersigned has the charge of Her Majesty's Legation in Peru, as far as his privileges are concerned; for rather than submit to any such degrading innovation he would not hesitate to resign his post at once.

The undersigned has, &c.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour of receiving your Lordship's note of the 31st ultimo, in reply to mine of the 13th May, relative to the arrest and judgment of Captain Melville White, in which you are pleased to communicate to me the instructions which Her Majesty's Government has addressed to its honourable representative with the Peruvian Government with respect to that case.

It is a matter of great regret to me to perceive that Her Majesty's Government is of opinion that Captain White has been treated by the Peruvian authorities with such harshness and personal indignities, that, even if they could be justified by the laws of the Republic, they would be indefensible, as opposed to the usages and relations between civilized nations.

My Government will, without doubt, feel itself bound to satisfy the Government of Her Majesty, by manifesting that there has been no illegality in the proceedings taken against Captain White, nor any harshness or indignities which would not at once be supported by the laws of the country. If it were otherwise, it would not hesitate a moment in employing all the power which the constitution has placed in its hands to give effect to the responsibility of the courts and magistrates who may have failed in their duties, or who have ill-treated, without necessity, a subject of Her Majesty the Queen.

HAVING made repeated applications for a copy of the charge on which I have been arrested and subjected to unheard of brutality by the officials of the Peruvian Government, and also for a copy of the written authority on which such arrest was made, and not having been furnished with either up to this date, although arrested on the 23d of last March, I hereby again formally demand true copies of the above-named documents, and also thereby reiterate my oft-repeated protests against the illegality of the course pursued towards me, against the vile inquisitorial secret ordeal to which I have been subjected, as well as against the continued barbarous oppression, tyranny, and wrong to which I, a faithful subject of Her Britannic Majesty, am still being subjected by the Peruvian Government.

Stigmatised by the agents of that Government in the public journals as an assassin, I have in vain heretofore demanded an open and impartial trial; yet, repelling as I do with scorn and indignation the foul charge with which it is sought to ruin my prospects and blast my character and honour, dearer to me than life, I am still left languishing in a filthy dungeon, conscious of innocence, and daring my oppressors to the ordeal of a public trial.

Sir, you told me you were the arbiter of my fate, and that it was idle to speak before you of British law, British justice, or British opinion, and that being in Peru you would treat me according to your own will and fancy; you have done so hitherto in a manner sufficiently arbitrary to gratify your avowed hatred of the English people, whose opinion, respecting the injustice and cruelty of which I have been so shamelessly made the victim, has yet to be expressed.

THE undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul in charge of Her Majesty's Legation and Consulate General, in Peru, has the honour to acquaint his Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Peru, that he yesterday visited a British subject in the prison of the Inquisition, named Thomas Melville White, on account of having been informed that the said Thomas Melville White had been put in irons by the Judge Señor Ponce on the previous day.

His Excellency Señor Melgar is aware that Thomas Melville White has now been in prison for the long term of upwards of four months, and although various applications have been made by Her Majesty's late Chargé d'Affaires, requesting that this trial should be brought to as speedy a conclusion as convenient, Mr. White informs the undersigned that up to yesterday no notice had been given to him as to what he was accused of.

The undersigned therefore respectfully requests of his Excellency Señor Melgar, that he may be informed of the present state of this trial, and if there is a probability of its being shortly concluded, as Mr. Melville White, from his lengthened imprisonment, complains of his liver being affected.

FROM reports of British functionaries, resident in this capital to their Government, in consequence of the arrest and imprisonment of Captain Melville White, the said Government has conceived the idea that White was arrested and placed in severe and solitary confinement on the 2d of March last, and continued so until the 28th of April; that he was personally treated with indignity and severity; that he has not received any written notice of the charge for which he was arrested; that he has not been confronted with any of the witnesses nor subjected to audience nor preliminary proceeding, nor has he been permitted to see any legal adviser.

And, as it is necessary to clear up the truth of these assertions, I hope that you will proceed carefully and minutely to report to the Ministry upon this matter as soon as possible.

REPORT by Judge Ponce.

To the Minister of State in the Despatch of Government and Foreign Relations.

IN complying with the tenour of the preceding Note, in which you, sir, have been pleased to request that this court should report upon the criminal cause carried on against the British subject, Thomas Melville White, the facts consigned in the process, and those which have occurred during the prosecution of the trial, are those which I proceed to relate.

On the 23d of March of the present year, the Commandant General of Marine informed the Minister of Government, that the said White had arrived at the port of Callao from that of Arica, who was accused by Manuel Romero, Commandant of the Customs guard-house of the said port, of being the individual who fired the ball at His Excellency the President of the Republic, Grand Marshal Ramon Castilla, on the 25th of July, in the evening, of the previous year 1860. Melville White being submitted to the corresponding trial on the 24th of March, of the present year, his respective declaration was taken, and he has been treated in the prison with the indulgence and equity that should be used towards any person, although he may be accused of the greatest crime.

In the prison was assigned to him the habitation that would render him better accommodation, separating him from the contact and union with the other prisoners, without this circumstance depriving him of communication with his friends, and the persons who desired to visit him, as has occurred, for he received various visitors, among others Colonel O'Gorman. Orders were given to supply him with the corresponding pecuniary quota for his maintenance, putting him on an equality with the individuals prosecuted for political crimes, so that he could not at any time complain that the same food as that given to the other prisoners for common causes was allowed to him. It may not be superfluous to state, that Melville White refused to take the sum of one dollar daily that was offered to him for aliment; he said, because his imprisonment would be remunerated with large amounts, which the Peruvian nation would indemnify him in a few days, as soon as his Government was made acquainted of it. These facts, sir, will set aside the idea of the assertions made by White regarding the severe and solitary confinement which he with temerity declared he has suffered; for the treatment he has received has been attentive, decent, and with all the accommodation that a prison can give. As regards the complaint that White had not received a written notice of the charge for which he was arrested, it appears in the process to be entirely unfounded, for in the summary it has been cited at different times, and which with his own hand and writing he has signed; and when the documents were in a state for him to give his confession, after reading to him his instructive declaration, and all the process, on observing that the most serious charges emanated from the declarations made by many of his countrymen, he exclaimed against the court and other Peruvian authorities in insult and sarcasm, such as have never been heard nor used in the presence of a judge by any accused person, whatever his class or condition may be. This occurrence made it the duty of the undersigned to order the accused White to be arrested in the stocks for a short time, and which did not last ten minutes, considering that, if it had been overlooked, the bad example would spread among the other prisoners, and the judges would find themselves insulted and contemned in their dignity as such.

As regards the appointment of a legal adviser, what the law directs has been done in this cause, that is to say, that a defender be named after the prisoner has given his confession.

With the above statement the points referred to in your esteemed note of the 4th instant are answered.

SENTENCE of the Judge of First Instance.

SEEN and considering, 1st, That Thomas Melville White was submitted to trial, imputing to him the being the author of the crime of assassination frustrated, of the person of His Excellency Grand Marshal D. Ramon Castilla, President of the Republic, by firing at him a pistol-shot on the 25th of July, of the year last past, at seven o'clock in the evening, at the corner of the Archbishop-street, on proceeding to the Government House, by which he was wounded in the left arm.

2d. That every step having been taken to clear up this case, it has arrived at the stage of pronouncing sentence.

3d. That at page 40, Mr. David Douglas, native of Scotland, engineer of mines, in answering the citation of the Commandant of the Customs Guard-house of Arica, Don Manuel Romero, states, first, that being in Corocoro, in Bolivia, about the month of April or May of last year, Thomas Melville White manifested to him, in the house of Don Pedro Caso, his desire that his Excellency General Castilla should fall from command, and that the ex-General Echenique should rise to it; second, that the said Caso, who is a great friend of his, communicated to him that a meeting had taken place in his house, sustained with spirits, in which had been toasted the fall from the presidential chair of his Excellency General Castilla, and the elevation to the command of Echenique, indicating at the same time that White was about to do an astonishing thing in Peru, which Caso added, in consequence of Douglas having said that White appeared to him to be a bad man.

4th. That it being clearly shown in the process that White is a man of no known occupation, very poor; that he made frequent voyages between Lima and Bolivia; that he was in contact with Echenique and Linares, of whom Douglas saw bills in his favour, makes it necessary to suppose as very probable that White was an agent of theirs in their pretensions to displace from command his Excellency General Castilla, such being the conception formed of him by his countrymen; this opinion being fortified by the circumstance of White having shown himself very pensive when Linares issued the decree of interdiction, it being then that he extended his voyages to the Republic of Chili, where Echenique had transferred himself, they having come to Callao in the same steamer in March last.

5th. That not having been able to discover, by means of the books of arrival and departure of the passengers of the steamer in the ports of Callao and Arica, the months and days in which White should have been found in Lima, it is necessary that the Court should attend to the merit of the declarations of Dr. Isabel Dorra and Don Luis Blondel, of Tacua, not considering him as the material author of such an atrocious crime.

6th. That the laws exact, to impose punishment, that the delinquency of the prisoner be demonstrated with all clearness.

7th. That every state has the right to expel from its territory vagrant foreigners, and much more so when they are suspected of being implicated in grave crimes. For these and other grounds shown in the process, with the opinion of the Fiscal Agent, I adjudge that I should absolve, and that I absolve from the cause Thomas Melville White, as regards complicity in the crime imputed to him, and in general of co-operating to upset public order, but that he should be expelled the territory of the Republic, never to return to it. And with this my sentence, which shall be submitted to the superior tribunal, if not appealed against within the legal time, definitively judging in the first instance.

I so pronounce, order, and sign it.

SENTENCE OF THE "CORTE SUPERIOR."

These documents having been seen, with the statement of the Fiscal, and considering that from the declarations of Luis Dorra, of Isabel P. de Dorra, and of Luis Blondell, it appears that Thomas Melville White was in the city of Tacua, from the 21st up to the 28th of July 1860, by which he could not be the author of the attack made upon the person of his Excellency the President of the Republic, in this capital, on the 25th of the same month, and that neither has any other charge been proved against the accused: The Court sentences as judgment, by which it revokes that of the Court of First Instance, at page 145, dated 30th November last, absolves definitively Melville White, and blames the Judge for not having pronounced sentence within the time provided by the law, and returns the documents.

(signed) *Davila. Saravia.
Barriga. Rospigliosi.
Chacaltana. Leon.*

The vote of the Judge, Dr. Manuel Saravia, was for revoking the sentence and definitive absolution of White, as regards the crime of which he has been accused, and attending to what has been shown, as it appears that White is a vagrant and of suspicious habits, that the police be warned to watch his conduct.

That of the Judges, Dr. Bernardo Leon and Dr. Thomas Davila, was for the revocation of the sentence, as regards absolving White from the prosecution, but not definitively of the crime of assassination against the President of the Republic, and for his expulsion from the country, and for the confirmation of the part in which it absolves him from the prosecution as regards the other charges which have been matter of inquiry, with blame to the Judge.

British Legation, Lima, 16 May, 1862.

THE undersigned, &c., has the honour to acquaint his Excellency the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, that he has received instructions from Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to notify, in the most formal manner, to the Peruvian Government, that it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to demand from the Government of Peru an adequate compensation for Mr. Thomas Melville White, a British subject, who has been detained for a length of time in prison, without due process, under circumstances at variance with the usages in force amongst civilized nations. Whilst thus imprisoned he has been exposed to every kind of indignity, and to much cruelty; he has been for a long time refused all adequate means of defence; and has, after having suffered upwards of ten months' imprisonment, been acquitted of the charge preferred against him.

The undersigned has the honour to renew to his Excellency the assurances of his high consideration.

No. 23.

Señor Ribeyro to Mr. Barton.

Lima, 15 September 1862.

THE estimable communication of the Honourable Chargé d'Affaires of Her Britannic Majesty addressed to demand a compensation in favour of the British subject Thomas Melville White, tried by the national tribunals, in consequence of accusations which were made against him, has been taken into consideration by the undersigned Minister for Foreign Affairs; and he regrets that he cannot agree to the principles therein laid down, nor accede to a demand which, as he will very briefly show, is not in harmony with the rules of universal justice, nor with the precepts of the national legislation.

The said White is one of those men who, from his mysterious conduct, clandestine voyages, and bad connexions, naturally attracted the attention of the police authorities, and was submitted to trial, it being believed, not without foundation, that he was the author of the frustrated homicide on the person of his Excellency the President of the Republic. White has not been one of those pacific and inoffensive foreigners whom an open and legal proceeding makes worthy of the protection of the laws, he has not been one of those visitors of known industry and moral habits to whom ample and generous hospitality is dispensed.

He was submitted to the action of the tribunals, because data, not of a light nature, presented him as the agent of an atrocious crime, which, with reason, attracted the attention of the country, and was a motive of alarm and scandal here, as well as in the other republics of the continent. A homicide committed on the person of a private citizen is a criminal act, as you, sir, are well aware, punished in all parts with inflexible severity, because to deprive men of life, which is the greatest of treasure on earth, involves an immoral act which seriously compromises the tranquillity of society; but most serious are the consequences which bring about the assassination of the heads of nations, called monarchs, or denominated presidents. For this reason the legislations of all the world fulminate severe punishment against regicides, who destroy in an individual the welfare of the people, their internal peace, and expectations perhaps more flattering for the future. The imprisonment of White, and his consequent prompt delivery to the competent courts, is not, therefore, strange, illegal, nor repugnant to good sense.

The criminal cause was carried on with scrupulous circumspection, which was necessary to find out the truth of the accusation, without abuses of any kind, without unnecessarily maltreating the accused, and without voluntary delays the process came to an end; and during the various judicial grades things were being cleared up to the point in which White was declared not inculpable, and totally exempt from punishment, but absolved for the present, because, although there are suspicions against him, and not small ones, proofs, which we call complete, have been wanting in order to punish him.

This statement, sir, which is the faithful and genuine expression of the facts, shows that there has not been any system of hostility against the British subject for whom you have been pleased to make a demand, that no gratuitous aggression has existed from want of justice or from palpable delay of it. There are very frequent cases in which the very nature of the facts require a careful detention in the summary in order not to be exposed to err, which, once committed, although involuntary, would be of tardy and perhaps difficult reparation. The very accused, at times, for their defence prolong the time, with the object of making those juridical appreciations conducive to accredit their innocence. Only in case of notorious injustice palpably demonstrated can diplomatic question be allowed; and in the present question, far from there being anything to complain of, our judges display that tolerance and clemency that, without being in contradiction with the perfect rights emanating from the law, serve to diminish the evils which the temporal loss of liberty brings with it.

White, apart from the motives against him regarding the homicide referred to, was a secret agent to prepare in the territory of the republic political agitations contrary to the system established by the ministry of the constitution, and by the national will.

These charges have not been, as they ought to have been, completely and satisfactorily cleared away by him for the safety of his reputation. Let it not be said, that the means of vindicating himself have been denied; he has had them in abundance, and functionaries officially named, who with careful solicitude have defended, and worked with diligence to save him. In our republics, many foreigners mix themselves in the internal affairs, which certainly do not interest them, and when they are discovered in criminal acts to assist a party to invert the existing order of things, they appeal to their particular condition, they invoke the protection of their ministers, and do not accept the consequences of their faults, of their intervention, and of their vituperable partiality.

This is the case with White; allow the undersigned to say so frankly to the Honourable Chargé d'Affaires, and allow that his voice may have force in a matter in which he believes is bound up the stability of a principle of strict justice, the credit of his country, and the welfare of all the sections of South America.

The undersigned lays aside many other considerations of an international character to incline the enlightened diplomatic agent, with whom he speaks, to desist from a pretension which is wanting of a real and solid support, because the force of the present reasoning in his opinion will be sufficient to clear away any unfavourable impressions which false statements may have produced in this vexatious matter. He does not consider it superfluous to reassume the previous statement, asseverating to you, sir, that White has been humanely treated, and that, even for the insults heaped upon his judge, he has been looked upon with indulgence; that his inevitable cause, from the very nature of the accusations against him, has been carried on with regularity; and that the means of defence have been had at his disposal, in the same manner as they are allowed to the natives, without any odious exception.

The undersigned repeats that, in this discussion of honour for his country, he omits other reasons which shall, in the unexpected case of those now adduced not being esteemed as sufficient, be opportunely explained, to defend the nation and its Government from a responsibility which, in truth they have not, and to which they can never consent.

With sentiments of the highest consideration, I have the honour to renew to the Honourable Mr. Barton the expressions of the distinguished estimation and appreciation with which I am, &c.

No. 24.

Mr. Jerningham to Señor Paz Soldan.

Lima, January 8, 1863.

THE undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul General to Peru, has the honour, in consequence of instructions which he has received from Earl Russell, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to address a formal Note to the Government of his Excellency Don José Gregorio Paz Soldan, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Peru, conveying the demand of Her Majesty's Government for the compensation of 4,500 l. sterling to Mr. Thomas Melville White, for the ill-treatment which he has experienced in Peru.

The undersigned has been directed to state, that Her Majesty's Government have carefully examined into the circumstances of this case before assessing their demand for compensation at the sum above named; that they are not prepared to enter into any discussion with a view to bring about a reconsideration of their decision in this matter; and he is instructed to request, that the answer of the Peruvian Government may be returned within a reasonable time.

Her Majesty's Government also state that, should the payment be delayed, they will add to the sum demanded interest from the date of the notification of this demand by the undersigned.

In conclusion, the undersigned has been instructed not to conceal from the Peruvian Government that this matter is viewed in a very serious light by Her Majesty's Government, who will not suffer the demand which they have thus put forward to rest unsatisfied.

The undersigned has the honour, &c.

No. 25.

Señor Paz Soldan to Mr. Jerningham.

Lima, 17 January 1863.

IN the note which the Honourable Chargé d'Affaires of Her Britannic Majesty has addressed to the undersigned, dated the 8th instant, he declares that his Government have resolved that that of Peru shall pay four thousand five hundred pounds sterling (4,500 l.) to the British subject, Thomas Melville White, as a compensation for the ill-treatment which he suffered in Peru; that they will not enter into any discussion upon this matter; that that the reply should be given within a reasonable time; that should there be delay, interest will be charged; and, in conclusion, that this is a serious matter, for the Government of Her Majesty will not permit that the demand made shall remain unsatisfied.

The undersigned has acquainted his Excellency the President of the intimation of the Honourable Chargé d'Affaires of Her Britannic Majesty, and he has directed me to reply that the Government of Her Majesty must certainly have been unfavourably informed as to the facts which have occurred with Melville White, or they would not have launched their powerful threat against a Government who has done no injury to Mr. Melville White, nor upon whose person have the maltreatments complained of fallen. The supposed charges which he has made are answered and satisfactorily refuted by irrefragable documents.

The Honourable Chargé d'Affaires does not even indicate what are the fresh documents which Her Majesty's Government has carefully examined, nor the serious circumstances which have induced the present demand in so imperious a manner, that room for discussion is not even allowed. The complaint of an individual, however true it may be supposed, is not a sufficient reason, nor does it give such inevitable support, that itself alone is sufficient for declaring a government culpable and responsible for injuries which it has not committed, and bound to give a reparation, which on no account can be demanded of it with unusual severity.

The exaggerated complaints and the false imputations invented by Melville White against the authorities and Government of Peru, appear studiously calculated to produce a discord with the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, to satisfy his vengeance and to acquire a capital. But all this apparatus of calumnious accusations disappears before the reality of the facts. Whilst he was subject to the action of the tribunals, he was treated with kindness, and provided with all the means of defence; he had an advocate to defend him, and an attorney to act in his favour, without on their part omitting the most simple considerations.

The courts and tribunals, to whom he attributes a persecuting spirit, if they did not declare him innocent, there not being sufficient proofs for doing so, neither did they impose any punishment, for the same reason, acting in everything with impartiality.

If the demand of Her Majesty is, therefore, founded on the fact that White was absolved, the nature of the crime of which he was accused, his suspicious conduct, the facts proved in the process, and the tenor of the sentences which have in their favour the legal presumption of being just and truthful, should also have had weight in Her enlightened judgment. Even should White have been definitively absolved, that absolution does not impose the obligation of indemnifying him with the pecuniary sum demanded, because it would in fact introduce into the Peruvian legislation a privileged innovation in favour of foreigners not conceded to the natives, and the adoption of which, put in practice, would make the prosecution of crimes dangerous, or would leave the authors unpunished, causing the administration of justice to be illusory.

* To refuse all discussion is to acknowledge the justice of the Peruvian Government, and prevent that by its means the facts be exposed and the temerity of White be made transparent. Regarding the intention of not discussing, there is a fact grave and solemn which the undersigned must call to remembrance, which, no doubt, will also have weight in the opinion of the Honourable Chargé d'Affaires, and the due appreciation of which will induce him to change his resolution. This fact perhaps has been forgotten, and it will be necessary to consider it.

In a Despatch of his Excellency Lord Russell, dated in London the 31st of July 1861, addressed to the Legation of Her Britannic Majesty, and communicated by it to this Ministry, his Excellency said, "that the Government of Her Majesty considered that all ulterior discussion upon this matter should take place in Lima." The Government of Peru has and had a perfect right to confide in so solemn a promise, without venturing to apprehend that it would be changed, and all discussion closed. In effect, since that date, there has not nor has any official discussion even been initiated in Lima, as his Excellency Lord Russell considered.

There only appear some notes from the Legation urging for the prompt termination of the cause carried on against White.

The Honourable Mr. Jerningham, in one of them, dated the 13th of May 1861, expressly said, after complaining of the delay in the case against White, that he reserved the right to discuss afterwards the circumstances relative to the arrest and treatment given to him in the jail. On the 16th of May 1862, Mr. Barton addressed a fresh note, which was replied to by Señor Ribeyro on the 15th September of the same year, making known to him that the intention of his Government was to make a demand for indemnity in favour of that subject. This declaration involved, therefore, and ratified the promise of a discussion, because the making a demand produced the reciprocity of replying to and discussing it. The Government of Peru was, therefore, far from presuming even that, instead of adopting the means proposed, and so spontaneously indicated, they should be retracted and substituted by a direct notification to deliver, without discussion, a sum of 4,500*l.*, and to deliver it with interest if there was delay.

Moreover, to recover interest, should there be delay, supposes that the payment may be deferred. To fix a reasonable term for giving a reply, it would appear, annuls the former.

Although the Government of Her Britannic Majesty now refuses all discussion, and does not admit it, it cannot prevent that of Peru from making manifest its rights in defence of the national jurisdiction, charged to the tribunals, and of the honour and interests of the republic which it is charged to represent with loyalty and good faith.

The Government of Peru, not recognizing in any other the right of imposing upon it the obligation to indemnify, nor that of fixing the amount which for such indemnity it may be desired to designate, nor that of augmenting it in case of delay, without for this purpose having consulted its acquiescence, or determined by agreements of mutual understanding or conciliation, or having exhausted without effect the means of discussion, cannot accept as rules of justice or international right those which are contained in the note of the Honourable Mr. Jerningham.

The undersigned avails himself of this opportunity to renew, &c.

Mr. Jerningham to Señor Paz Soldan.

Lima, 26 January 1863.

The undersigned, &c., has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the note, dated the 17th instant, of his Excellency Don Gregorio Paz Soldan, Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Peru, in reply to the formal communication which the undersigned addressed to him by the special order of Her Britannic Majesty's Government on the 8th of the present month, forwarding a demand to the Peruvian Government for the payment of the sum of 4,500 l. sterling, in compensation to Captain Thomas Melville White for the ill treatment which he had suffered in Peru at the hands of the Peruvian authorities.

In the note above mentioned his Excellency, after making such comments and observations as he has deemed expedient on the demand of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, which the undersigned was instructed formally to present, endeavours to show that the question regarding Mr. White's compensation ought to be further discussed and ventilated between his Excellency and the British Legation at Lima.

The undersigned, who has read with careful attention his Excellency's communication, begs to have the honour, in reply, to inform him that the instructions which the undersigned brought from England are of that formal and definite character that they do not permit him to discuss the case of Mr. Thomas Melville White with the Peruvian Government. On the contrary, his orders are to present a demand for compensation of the sum of 4,500 l. sterling, as already notified to his Excellency on the 8th instant, and to intimate at the same time that Her Majesty's Government, who have carefully examined into the circumstances of the case before assessing the demand, were not prepared to enter into any discussions with a view to bring about a reconsideration of their decision in the matter; and, therefore, such being the case, it would be highly improper on the part of the undersigned to enter on his own account into any discussion with the Peruvian Government, upon a question respecting which the Government who he has the honour to serve have already, and after consulting the law officers of the Crown, and given it mature deliberation, arrived at a final decision.

Under these circumstances, his Excellency must perceive that the only course left open to the British Legation is to adhere to the tenor of the note which the undersigned addressed to the Peruvian Government on the 8th instant, in accordance with the instructions of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, and to request their serious attention to the demand contained therein.

The undersigned has the honor, &c.

No. 27.

Señor Paz Soldan to Mr. Jerningham.

Lima, 27 January 1863.

In a note of yesterday the Chargé d'Affaires of Her Britannic Majesty has been pleased to state to the undersigned, that it is not possible for him to discuss upon the demand, which, by order of his Government, he has presented in favour of the British subject, Melville White, and that the only course left to him is to adhere to the tenor of his note of the 8th instant.

The undersigned has acquainted his Excellency the President with the note of the Honourable Mr. Jerningham. and after meditating upon its contents, his Excellency has considered, that if the orders of the Government of Her Britannic Majesty do not permit the Chargé d'Affaires to discuss upon the demand proposed, they have not on that account closed all recourse to an honourable termination, and, in accordance with the principles of international right, submitting the final decision of this question to the arbitration of a friendly Government. By this measure the principles of justice and of reciprocal considerations between friendly Governments will be carried out.

The arbitration which the undersigned proposes does not in the least prejudice the present question, which, if on the part of his Government it is a manifestation of its loyal proceeding and its sincere desire to settle this question, its acceptance on the part of the Government of Her Majesty will be another solemn proof of its high justification.

The

The Government of Peru proposes a rational and just solution, which cannot be overlooked by Mr. Jerningham, whose responsibility will not be compromised by suspending his proceedings until Her Britannic Majesty shall have been acquainted of the proposition to submit the present question to arbitration, and resolved upon it.

The undersigned has the honour to renew, &c.

NOTE VERBALE.

THE Government of Her Britannic Majesty having been engaged in pressing on the Government of Peru the claim of Mr. Melville White, a British subject, for a pecuniary compensation on account of sufferings and losses caused to him by the acts of Peruvian authorities, the two Governments have agreed that the question as to the right of Mr. Melville White to compensation from the Peruvian Government, as well as the question as to the amount of that compensation, if any should be proved to be due to him, should be referred to the arbitration of a friendly power.

Earl Russell, &c., and M. Sang, &c., have accordingly agreed on the following steps, with a view to bring about a settlement of the matters in question :

1. Earl Russell, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, and M. Sang, as representing the Government of Peru, will address an invitation to the Government of the Free Hanseatic City of Hamburgh, requesting the Senate to pronounce a decision on the points above stated.

2. Should the Senate undertake this responsibility, Earl Russell will cause a statement of what has passed between the two Governments in this matter, as well as Mr. M. White's own statement of his case, to be laid before the Senate on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

Copies of these documents will likewise be communicated to M. Sang, to enable him to lay before the Senate such observations thereupon, or rejoinder thereto, as he may think necessary in the interest of his Government.

8. M. Sang will cause to be laid before the Senate a statement of the case on behalf of the Peruvian Government, and he will communicate a copy of this document to Her Majesty's Government.

4. The decision of the Senate of Hamburgh, or of the arbitrator, whoever he may be, who may be accepted by the two Governments in case the Senate of Hamburgh should decline this responsibility, shall be considered by both parties as final, and immediate effect shall be given thereto.

ILL-TREATMENT of CAPTAIN MELVILLE WHITE by the PERUVIAN AUTHORITIES.

CASE submitted by the PERUVIAN GOVERNMENT.

MEMORIAL presented on the part of the Government of Peru to the Senate of the Free Hanseatic City of Hamburgh, in the Dispute with the Government of Her Britannic Majesty respecting a Pecuniary Compensation demanded for the British subject Captain Melville White.

(Translation from the Spanish.)

Sir,

I HAVE the high honour, in fulfilment of the duty imposed on me by Article III. of the Convention made on the 1st ultimo, of explaining the case, and endeavouring to prove the right of the Government of Peru, in the dispute raised by the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, and submitted to your Excellency's arbitration, on the question that a pecuniary compensation be made to Her Majesty's subject, Captain Melville White, on account of a criminal prosecution against him at Lima in 1861, on a charge of attempted homicide on the person of the Most Illustrious the Señor Grand Marshal Liberator Don Ramon Castilla, at that time President of the Republic.

The inflexible necessity of the defence will oblige me to repeat what was brought to light in the proceedings against Captain Melville White. The witnesses shall speak, and they will show its character.

On the 25th of July 1860, at 7 o'clock in the evening, as the President Don Ramon Castilla was going to the palace, when he had reached one of the corners or avenues of the principal square of Lima, he was wounded in the left arm by a pistol-shot fired at him by a man on horseback, whose face was covered with a "bufanda."

The assailant, throwing away the weapon, fled immediately, and could not be apprehended.

Proceedings, in consequence, were begun and continued until March 1861, and numerous inquiries were made during this long space of time, without producing the least information that could lead to the discovery of the delinquent.

It was then that the Commander-in-Chief of the Navy sent to the Minister of Government a despatch, dated the 23d of the said March, apprising him that the captain of the port of Arica had advised him that in consequence of information from Don Manuel Romero, commander of the guard at that port, that in the steamer "Bolivia," which was starting for Callao, there was an individual who, according to a formal imputation, was the assassin of General Castilla, he had sent an officer to take the said individual in charge until his arrival at Callao, where he was to deliver him to the first authority that should come on board. The Commander-in-chief of the Navy concluded his despatch by stating, that the name of the individual alluded to was Thomas Melville White, that he was a native of Ireland, had been arrested on shore, and was confined in the arsenal.

The proceedings which, at the instance of the Attorney General, were about to be closed as fruitless two days before the receipt of this despatch, could not fail to continue their legal course upon the very important revelation which it contained; and thus it is seen that they were opened under a new face with the instructive declaration of White, charged as a conspirator and assassin.

Captain Melville White says, in his declaration, that he is an Englishman, unmarried, a sailor, and 30 years of age; that he had come from Valparaiso, and was going to Callao, on his way to Guayaquil; that he had come to America a year ago, and direct to Peru; that he had been ship's captain in Europe and Asia, had travelled in those parts of the globe, honourably gaining a fortune by his labours, and spending, in travelling for his own pleasure, both that fortune and some money received from his countrymen, especially from the English Minister residing in Peru; that in the year 1860 he had been three or four times in Lima; that his travels in America had been confined to the Republics of Ecuador, Peru, Chili, and Bolivia; that he had a slight acquaintance with General Echenique, and had conversed with him two or three times about his travels; that in the beginning of June 1860 he went to Peru, and afterwards to Ecuador; that on the few occasions that he had spoken of the pistol-shot, now the subject of trial, he had strongly repudiated it as the act of a cowardly hand; that he was not in Lima when this event took place, and the news of it reached him at Tacna; and, finally, that he had been arrested twice, once at Callao, by order of the police, for carnival amusements, and again in Bolivia, for 10 or 12 days, because the President Linares believed him to be a secret agent of General Castilla or of General Belzu.

Thus, before any witness was examined, there escaped from Captain White's own lips an ominous declaration for himself, that he had been looked upon in Bolivia by President Linares as a secret agent of General Castilla or of General Belzu; and this declaration coincided with the denunciation that he was implicated in the attempted assassination of the President.

It is now time to examine the grounds of this denunciation.

The commander of the guard at Arica, Don Manuel Francisco Romero, was present in the December of the previous year at a party at Tacna, given by Donna Mercedes de Dorra, at her hotel in that town. The Doctor Don Manuel Reyes, a Bolivian, there introduced him to a foreigner, from whom he learned that Captain White, in conjunction with General Echenique, was a determined conspirator against the tranquillity of Peru. The facts which the stranger communicated as the grounds of the charge against Captain White were the following:—

In the month of May or June of the same year, 1860, Captain White was lodging at Corocoro, a village of Bolivia, in the house of Don Pedro Caro, an Argentine, and friend of General Echenique; he came there from Peru without any

any means whatever ; he stayed there a few days, and then set out for Caracato, where the said General was, the foreigner in question having furnished him with from 10 to 15 dollars, because no one was willing to give him money for his journey.

From Caracato White returned to Corocoro, about eight days after leaving that place, bringing a note for 60 dollars drawn in his favour by General Echenique upon Caro, if the said foreigner, who saw the note, remembered rightly.

From Corocoro White returned to Caracato, and from thence he went to La Paz, where he had free entry into the palace, and was well thought of by President Linares, who gave him a note for 500 dollars, which the stranger did not see, but Mr. Ferr, an Englishman living at Caracato, gave White 50 dollars on sight of it, at Corocoro (because he was about to return at that point on the road to Peru), and which White paid at Tacna to the agent of Ferr.

The last time that White was at Corocoro, he had at Caro's house a private party at night, which was kept up with liquor till dawn of the next day, and there they drank to the fall of General Castilla, and that General Echenique might immediately govern the Republic without the necessity of a revolution, but by a strange event that would happen in Peru, and such as had never been seen ; for the disappearance of Castilla and the government of Echenique would be all the same thing.

These facts, and especially the last, caused the commander of the guard, Romero, to fix his attention on Captain White, to collect information concerning the points to which he was travelling, and not to lose sight of him on his way, although he did not know him personally ; and those facts being corroborated by the discovery which he made, that the journeys of Captain White were to Bolivia and Chili, republics where General Echenique had been successively received, and by his appearance with the said General in the port of Arica on board the steamer "Bolivia," which was bound for Callao, he was induced to denounce Captain White as a conspirator, and as the presumed actor or accomplice in the crime of July ; whence the proceedings against him, and his consequent apprehension.

The exactitude of what Romero asserts in his declaration is proved by that of the foreigner who has been referred to.

This foreigner is Mr. David Douglas, a native of Scotland, then residing in the province of Arica, and previously in Bolivia, 60 years of age, a widower, and by trade a miner ; and he states on oath that he knows the commander of the guard, Romero, and that the first time he saw him was at the Dorra Hotel at Tacna, at the end of the year 1860 ; that it is true that he had an interview with him at the said hotel ; that it is true that he told him then that he believed White to be a partizan of General Echenique against General Castilla ; that he made acquaintance with Captain White, in the month of April 1860, at the house of Mr. Thomas Pearson, in the neighbourhood of Corocoro, and saw him afterwards several times with Don Pedro Caro of the same neighbourhood ; that in the house of the said Caro he heard Captain White speak evil against General Castilla, desiring his fall from power, as well as the rise of General Echenique, in which desire Caro participated ; that in the house of this man there was, in the year 1860, a meeting, at which they drank to the fall of General Castilla, and that General Echenique might govern the country, upon a strange event happening in Peru, without the necessity of a revolution ; and he added that this deponent said to Caro, "that he did not like the man" (alluding to Captain White), to which Caro replied, "This man is going to make a stroke in Peru" ; that this revelation was made by Caro at his house in the month of May last, at a meeting at which there were some three persons, of whom he only remembers Don Emeterio Maldonado, residing in the Chacarilla of Bolivia ; that when the said meeting took place White was at Corocoro in a poor condition, since none of his countrymen, himself included, thought well of him, because he mixed himself up with revolutions in a foreign country ; that White left Corocoro for Lima with Daniel Roberto as travelling companion, who told him that White had staid in the Portada in Don Luis Blondel's mine, of the Tacna trade, and went from thence to the Cerro de Pasco, three weeks after he came to the Portada ; that when he became acquainted with White at Pearson's house at Corocoro he had just arrived from Lima ; then after four or five days' stay at Corocoro he went to Caracato, where General Echenique was, the deponent giving him 10 dollars for his journey ; he returned from Caracato, bringing a note for 80 dollars drawn by General Echenique, but does not remember upon whom; afterwards he went back to Caracato; from thence he went to La Paz, coming to Corocoro with a note for 500 dollars, and at last he departed for Peru in the month and with the person stated; that, White having shown him the note for 500 dollars, he saw that it was drawn by General Echenique, but does not remember the house that was to give the money at Tacna, but thinks it was Gonzales Velez, because White asked him what kind of a house it was, and the deponent answered a very good one; that he saw the said note by reason of White having shown it when he had taken a horse for his journey on credit from a friend of the deponent, telling him that he would pay for it at Tacna, as well as the value of a band which he bought of Daniel Roberto for 17 dollars; that Don Emeterio Maldonado told him in the Chacarilla that he believed White was the assassin of the President, because after the occurrence he arrived at La Paz, passing by Nasacara, where he met with him; that he does not know of White having any occupation; and that he knew the President, General Castilla, at Cochabamba, afterwards of Yugavi, and lodged him in his house, from which relation he had exchanged many letters; but that he has no acquaintance with General Echenique, and only knows him by sight.

This declaration is important for the revelations it includes; it is most trustworthy, from the person who makes it. Mr. David Douglas is a foreigner, 60 years of age, laborious, thrifty, who does not appear to be a great enemy of the accused, nor has he been called in question on any account. He has resided in Bolivia and Peru. He proves his words, and gives a reason for every one of the facts which he states.

Numerous, most vehement, and independent of each other are, then, the signs which the said declaration urges against Captain White, giving credibility to the machinations of which he is accused.

Your Excellency knows very well that machinations of this kind, clandestine by their nature, are always difficult of complete proof. In the rarest instances can they be brought into a degree of palpable evidence. The nice precaution with which the plans are combined, the secrecy which all concerned in them promise to preserve, to the strict observance of which they are constrained by the love of self-preservation, usually frustrate all the measures provided by the law and all the sagacity employed by the magistrates for their discovery. On account of this extreme difficulty of proof, no less than the immense importance of the crime, "the Statute of Treasons," says the illustrious Judge Foster, cited by one of the annotators of the no-less illustrious Blackstone, "retains, with much propriety, the rule voluntas pro facto, and the law considers the perverse imaginations of the heart in the same degree of criminality as if they had been put into actual execution, from the moment that it appears that means have been taken to make them effective."

Let us continue the examination of the proceedings.

All the references made by Romero and Douglas which could be verified confirm the truth of his assertions. Thus it is seen that Donna Mercedes de Dorra confirms the statement of Romero, referring to the party given by her at her hotel at Tacna, and at which Romero and Douglas met; that Dr. Don Manuel Eusebio Reyes confirms the statement of Romero as to his introduction of the same Romero to Douglas at the said party; and that Don Luis Armando Blondel confirms the statement of Douglas concerning the employment which Captain White had had in his mine of Huailillas.

This evidence is sufficient to demonstrate that the facts set forth with the manifest force of conviction by Romero and Douglas, to whom he refers, could not be the creations of fancy. Moreover, there are many others, which induce a most vehement presumption that there was no want of foundation for the charge against Captain White, that he was engaged in the disgraceful employment of an agent of conspiracies. As such he is characterised by the President of Bolivia, Linares; as such Douglas denounces him; and as such he is designated by Don Calixto Peralta. Such is he testified by his continued and causeless journeys to Bolivia and Chili; such is he shown by his appearance at Callao in the steamer on board of which was General Echenique; and of such he is accused, both by the abstraction which he maintained during his voyages in the steamers, from all conversation or intercourse with the passengers, and by the different garb in which he appeared, with the evident intention, as it seems, of disguising himself, and his not being known of any business or occupation. In one word, that same identical judgment, now involved in reticences and ambiguities, now explicitly expressed, but always giving the idea of the unfortunate man he is considered to be by all.

One of the witnesses says, "that the judgment he has formed of him is that which could be formed of a man who has no known occupation or employment"; another, "that he considered him as suspected and complicated in the politics of Bolivia, since he had observed that he frequently disguised himself, appearing sometimes with a close beard, sometimes with moustaches, and sometimes with only a tuft, and because he made repeated journeys to Peru and Bolivia without having any known occupation; . . . and that he was an agent of General Belzu, who told him so himself the last time he was passing through Tacna"; another, "that he did not like him"; another, "that he is a bad man"; and, in fine, he who judged him most favourably, "seeing him wandering about without any fixed object or apparent occupation, and without the necessary resources for making the frequent journeys which he undertook from Valparaiso to Arica, and from these ports into the interior and to the north," called him, with reason, a "mysterious" man.

Yes, mysterious he must appear, truly, in South America, where an exuberant and unworked soil invites the intelligent activity of the European. A young man of 30 years, in vigorous strength, overflowing with life, belonging to the energetic Anglo-Saxon race, endowed with aptitudes, possessed of knowledge, acquainted with the world and with men, and consequently a just appreciator of the value of time, wasting his own in causeless excursions to Bolivia and to Chili, and without being able to justify the motive of his ceaseless agitation by assigning to it an honest object, when probity does not hide itself and when honourable labour lives and makes parade of its useful manifestations.

Then, the profound mystery which enveloped him at that time became even more dense during his trial. On the one part, the declarations of the said witnesses Caro, Ferr, Pearson, and Maldonado had not been received, because the judicial despatches which were issued in due time had not arrived from Bolivia, and they were waited for a long time in vain, which caused an inevitable delay in concluding the case; on the other, Captain Melville White disrespectfully raised his voice to show a scandalous contempt for the trial which was going on, and to threaten Peru with the heavy indemnification that was going to be demanded in his favour, to insult and defy the judge, and to attribute unworthy proceedings to the Supreme Government. When the summary had been read to him, his statement taken, and the charges made against him, he entrenched himself as in a fortress in the most obstinate silence.

What is the meaning of this silence?

What does it mean, that, having the reputation of a more than common knowledge of the Spanish language, and considering the propriety and precision with which he answered the questions put to him in the preliminary examination, that he should request on the same day that interpreters might be granted to him, alleging ignorance of a language in which he had so readily and unembarrassedly expressed himself?

What does it mean that, when serious accusations were thundered against him, accusations affecting his honour, he was silent, and did not contradict or confound his accusers?

In the conscience of every impartial man who reads the proceedings is written what this means.

It is written also in the judgment pronounced on the ultimate appeal by the Supreme Court.

In that judgment, Captain Melville White is not absolved from the charge which was brought against him of being a conspirator, and which is one of those upon which he was tried; he is not declared innocent of this charge, nor free from fault; the criminal prosecution brought against him is not disapproved, nor is his apprehension blamed; but he is simply freed from the action of the law, and he is subjected to the vigilance of the police; thereby leaving the trial open, so that it may be continued if fresh evidence or proof should occur.

If the result of the proceedings had not been such as to induce, in the minds of the judges, the most strong presumption that Captain White could not but be what the numerous witnesses said he was, granting that he had done nothing to exculpate himself from what was brought against him; if his vagrancy had not been fully proved, the sentence which the first Court of the nation would have pronounced had been different ; a definitive absolution, or, what is the same, the public declaration of the innocence of Captain White would have been the end of the proceedings. When no such declaration has been obtained, the accused, whoever he may be, has no right to say, "I am innocent of the charges brought against me."

The Government of Peru has seen, with deep regret, that, in spite of this, the Government of Her Britannic Majesty has thought fit to interpose a diplomatic demand of 4,500 l. in favour of Captain Melville White; a demand which the Government could not consent to comply with, not on account of the sum of money which it involves, but in the maintenance of its inalienable rights of sovereignty, and in obedience to the dictates of honour which could not be neglected without disgrace.

It was necessary that Captain Melville White, who was denounced as a conspirator, and as the suspected actor or accomplice in the attempted assassination of the President, should be tried according to the laws ; and if the result of the trial has been that he is not acquitted of one of those charges, and that, on the contrary, there are abundant and strong presumptions against him, just and equitable in the extreme is the judgment which, without declaring him innocent, absolves him from the action of the law, subjecting him to the vigilance of the police.

This sentence is perfused with the declaration that there was cause for the trial of Captain White, and that the charge brought against him of being a conspirator has not been annihilated, is not dead ; it exists, and on the day that brings to light new facts or proofs for its complete verification, the Peruvian authorities will have the unquestionable right of ordering that the trial be re-opened.

To deny this right would be to disallow the highest attribute of an independent nation, whose acts of jurisdiction over the foreigners who reside therein, if they be in conformity with its own laws, ought to be respected by other nations.

If, then, in the case under examination, there has not been on the part of the Peruvian authorities the slightest infraction of the laws ; if the trial to which it was necessary that Captain White should be brought has been carried on in the regular course, and has gone from tribunal to tribunal, from the Court of First Action to the Supreme Court of Justice ; if no rigorous measure unnecessary for his safe custody has been employed against the person of the accused ; if the allowance was granted to him which is appointed for political prisoners, and if he refused to receive it ; if he has been treated with extreme indulgence, even when he took upon himself to outrage the authorities, not excepting the chief of them ; if the entire abstraction of this at the trial, in conformity with the principle of the Constitution which consecrates the independence of the three Powers, publishes the same result as the said trial ; if the greater part of the witnesses were foreigners, in whom it ought naturally to be supposed that there would be more sympathy with than animosity against Captain White ; if the Supreme Court, in order to ensure the most scrupulous impartiality in the judge, ordered that the hearing of the case should be transferred to another judge, when Captain White insulted and defied the one who was hearing it ; if all the latitude which the laws allow was given to the defence ; and, finally, if, although there have not been for the condemnation of Captain White to a punishment those proofs which, according to the words of the law, ought to be "as clear as light," no more have there been proofs clear as light for his definitive absolution ; there has not been in the proceedings analysed the least shade of deviation from the precepts of justice, nor the slightest vestige of offence to Captain White. He has been accused and arrested, but it is certainly not to the authorities of Peru that he can reasonably impute his misfortune.

In Peru there is a generally rooted conviction that the restrictions and disadvantages to which foreigners are subjected by the laws of some countries are quite opposed to the increase of the population and the development of industry ; and that the nations which have made most progress in commerce and in the peaceful arts of civilisation, and have elevated themselves most in the scale of riches and power, are just those which have treated foreigners with the most kindness and liberality.

This conviction is found shaped in the political Constitution and in the Commercial Regulations ; it inspires the Treaties which are concluded with other nations, and pervades all the customs and manifestations of civil life. In Peru the exercise of all lawful employment is equally open to the sons of the soil and to foreigners ; landed property is as accessible to one as to the other ; and I dare assert, with just pride, invoking the testimony of the honoured foreigners who visit my country, that it is one of the most hospitable lands on the face of the earth.

But that country, like all new ones, is not yet, unfortunately, quite settled or established. With the weakness of infancy it is passing through the laborious and severe apprenticeship of the life of nations. Thence the most imperious duty of foreigners to observe strictly the principle of neutrality imposed on them by the law of nations ; and thence the grievous necessity for the Government to proceed sometimes against those who infringe it. Or ought it, perchance, to abdicate authority and disarm the law, when a foreigner casts himself into the evil way of the abettors of revolt, and attempts nothing less than to scatter the elements of public peace, to unloose the bonds of society, and to light up a general conflagration ?

The Government of Peru being convinced, then, that the magistrates of the judicial power have not overstepped the bounds of their duties, nor offered any offence to Captain White, has declined to grant the indemnification demanded ; and desiring at the same time to retain intact, in spite of this difference of opinion, the very valuable friendship of the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, has proposed to it to submit to the arbitration of a friendly Government the decision of the point whether it has a right to require any indemnification for the proceedings against Captain Melville White ; and if it has, what should be the amount of the said indemnification ?

The Government of Her Majesty has thought proper to agree to this step. Your Excellency, on account of the deserved confidence which your exalted probity and enlightenment inspire, has been chosen arbitrator, and has been pleased to accept the office ; and I consider myself especially honoured in presenting to your Excellency a complete copy of the proceedings, and another of the Convention with the Government of Her Britannic Majesty. And I conclude this memorial by soliciting the indulgence of your Excellency for the unavoidable length to which this labour has extended, begging that your Excellency will condescend to supply the great deficiency which, in spite of its length, cannot fail to be perceived, and awaiting a decision which will be respected by my Government as an oracle of justice.

HER BRITANNIC MAJESTY'S GOVERNMENT, and the GOVERNMENT OF PERU.

THE CLAIMS OF CAPTAIN MELVILLE WHITE.

STATEMENT on behalf of the CLAIMANT.

As the Peruvian Government have had the temerity to charge claimant with being a "Rogue, vagabond, and assassin, without occupation," and have punished him accordingly by perpetual banishment from Peru, although they admit in their "expediente" (process) that he held the rank of Captain in the Navy, it becomes the duty of claimant, even at the risk of the imputation of egotism, to give a brief outline of his history and early career, in order to enable the arbitrator to duly estimate such assertions of the Peruvian Government.

Claimant was born in the county of Sligo, Ireland, and is the youngest son of John White, of Carlow (Professor of Mathematics), and Elizabeth MacLaughlin of Tyrone, cousin of the Right Reverend Dr. MacLaughlin.

Whilst a child he emigrated with his family to Canada, where he soon became the manager of an extensive marine establishment. He had been educated for either the church or bar. After his father's death, however, he removed to the United States, and entered under the distinguished and powerful patronage of Messrs. J. E. Thayer & Brother, leading bankers at Boston, United States, the counting-house of Messrs. Dana & Co. (opulent merchants, at Boston), for the purpose of completing his mercantile education.

After he had concluded his commercial studies, he made a voyage to Brazil and the countries bordering on the Rio de la Plata, in order more intimately to analyse the important commercial resources of those countries. Having terminated his travels and researches, he embarked at Buenos Ayres, and returned to the United States, with a greater fancy for the sea and the Pampas than commercial pursuits, which was no doubt induced by his previous study of nautical astronomy under his father. He afterwards went to India, and served second in command of the ships "Salamanca," "Shah Allum," "Shaw Allum," "Arratoon Apear," "Ellen," and "Atiet-Rohoman;" but he soon had the honour to be appointed to the command of the ship "Fazel-Currim." He passed all his nautical examinations with success (including one for the Bengal Marine),* in conformity with the laws of the late Honourable East India Company.

While at one time proceeding through Torres Strait from the Westward, via Rains Island, he rescued from watery graves between 40 and 50 shipwrecked sailors belonging to the opium clipper "Island Queen," owned by the wealthy and very influential house of Messrs. Dent & Co., Hong Kong. Half an hour after he had picked them up, the boat in which they had been packed, and which leaked like a basket, foundered alongside.

Having arrived on one occasion with his ship at Aden, he found that it required the incessant and watchful care of the officer commanding the garrison (Brigadier Coghlan) to prevent neighbouring tribes from committing serious depredations against the colonists, and that his exertions to communicate with the late Honourable Company's fleet in the Red Sea had for a considerable time proved unavailing. Under such circumstances, claimant volunteered his services, and the Brigadier confided to him his despatches. He proceeded to Ras-Mejambla, where it was officially reported to him that the senior naval officer, Captain J. J. Frushard (late officiating Commodore of H. M. Indian Navy), was with his ship "Elphinstone" off Hodeidah, protecting that city against a force of several thousand Bedouins, by whom the place was closely beleagured and hourly threatened with storm.

He delivered to Captain Frushard the despatches, and became, whilst there, the guest of that officer. The Pasha furnished claimant with a numerous cavalry escort, who, after they had safely gained the open country, and encountered a numerous foraging party of the enemy, wheeled their horses' heads round to the city, and disappeared as if by magic, leaving claimant to ride for his life through a country but very imperfectly known to him, followed by the enemy; but as he was well mounted, he soon distanced his pursuers. About nine o'clock, p.m., (dark), he arrived at the beach in front of his vessel, and hearing the whooping and hallooing of Arabs all round, he was afraid to "hail," but as a precaution waded up to his saddle-skirts in the sea, and so remained until daylight, when he was taken on board.

During an extensive cruise which claimant made with his ship in the Red Sea, the French and British consuls at Juddah, being claimant's guests on board, proceeded ashore about sunset. On the quay there was a crowd of Arabs collected, who, the moment his party disembarked, closed in around his two companions, and, spitting into their faces, cried out, "Away with the Christian dogs! They want to trample the people of the Prophet under foot!"

The janizaries told claimant they feared a revolution had taken place within the city, and that the consuls would not be able to appease their assailants, or make good their retreat.

Claimant had to proceed to their rescue with two well-manned and well-armed boats, and very soon succeeded in releasing the two justly frightened officials, and conducting them in safety to their consulates.

Warmly

* This included an examination in Hindostanee.

Warmly supported by his friend, the young Scheriette, he succeeded in capturing the ringleaders of these disorders and bringing them to punishment.

He afterwards proceeded to Calcutta, en route to Europe, with a view of making a tour of the Continent, and became second in command of the Indiaman "Octavia," and had the good fortune to be enabled to render assistance to the famishing crew of a Portuguese vessel, when they were about four days' sail to the eastward of Cape Town, in discharging which duty he got sorely wounded. He left his ship in a boisterous sea during a "lull" of a tremendous gale, in a lifeboat manned by volunteers, to assist the unfortunate sufferers. He conveyed provisions, &c., aboard the wreck by means of heaving lines, as he could not approach close to her without exposing his gallant men to certain destruction. He jumped overboard hitched to one of the lines, and was hauled up on to the deck of the luckless ship, in order to give motion and rate to the only chronometer which she carried. He then returned to his own ship.

He reached London in April. After a short stay, he proceeded on a tour through the north of Germany, with the intention of extending it to Russia. During a short halt which he made at Hamburg, he heard, for the first time, of the late mutiny in India, and some of its early heartrending consequences, and immediately resolved upon proceeding thither; and he accordingly started as a volunteer, at his own expense, and, on his arrival in Bengal, was placed in command of the Naval Brigade, and the different services he then rendered it is unnecessary now to refer to.

Previous to the final termination of the mutiny, claimant was attacked with liver-complaint, and being obliged to return to Europe, was ordered to travel, and proceeded to, amongst other places, the West Indies. While there he accepted a lucrative appointment as civil engineer on extensive public works. Before those works were finished, intelligence reached him of the war then being waged on the Rio Grande del Norte, between citizens of Mexico and of the United States. He immediately embarked for New Orleans, thence to Brownsville, to take charge of artillery on the side of the Texans.

Having occupied this post for some time, and seeing no prospect of any further fighting, he returned to New Orleans and announced the cessation of hostilities.

He next visited the South American countries in the Pacific, and travelled extensively in Chili. He then crossed the Cordilleras, and made long journeys in Bolivia. During his travels in Chili, he was informed that the Government of Peru were endeavouring to organise an expedition to explore the River Amazon and the wilds along its banks. With a view of joining this expedition, and taking command of it, he proceeded to Lima. While there, he obtained introductions to persons of distinction in Peru, New Grenada, and Ecuador. He proceeded to the latter place, and arrived there just about the time that the "Tumbes" and "Guisse" (Peruvian ships of war then moored off Guayaquil) opened fire on the patriotic army of Ecuador, commanded by General Flores, and shot the men down while they were effecting the passage of the Salado up to their waists in water.

He was shocked on learning this act of the Peruvian naval forces, in a friendly port, against a people of equal rank, and with whom the Peruvian Government professed to be in close friendly relation; and his indignation was great when he learned that, in place of condemning the shocking murders then committed by order of General Castilla, the Peruvian Government, in order to screen the guilt of the author, were heaping compliments on the executioners.

Claimant had at this time most valuable testimonials, which were all stolen from him with his luggage, and which he never recovered.

These documents had been submitted by Colonel The O'Gorman Mahon, after perusal, to, amongst others, General Flores, Commander in Chief of the Army of Ecuador, and they obtained for claimant a flattering reception from his Excellency the Jefe Supremo Don G. Garcia Moreno, who honoured claimant with the commission of Post Captain.

For the present, the Government having resolved to steer clear of every possible pretext for dispute, and to devote itself to the development of the resources of the country, claimant was instructed to direct his attention to the investigation and study of certain plans and propositions, embracing the construction of public roads of considerable extent, and a scheme of immigration on a large scale, with the view to undertake their execution as Government Contractor, at a fixed yearly salary of 12,000 dollars, for travelling and ordinary expenses incidental to the general supervision of the engineering and other departments, apart from the large customary emoluments arising from the various contracts, which were to be under his direction.

The advantages to accrue to him from the execution of these important works were brilliant in the extreme; and he accordingly proceeded to the South to make the necessary inquiries and calculations to enable him without delay to report to the Ecuadorian Government, and commence the works, and he left Valparaiso with positive data that these contracts would secure to him a splendid fortune. He was on his way to Guayaquil, for the purpose of commencing the works; but, alas! all his hopes, plans, and expectations of wealth just within his grasp, were abruptly blighted, frustrated, and destroyed, by an act of arbitrary tyranny unsurpassed in atrocity by that of any Oriental despot—for the Orientals, when they descend to cruelty, never fail to assign a motive; but in Peru, claimant was seized and thrown into pestilential dungeons, to associate with murderers, and others, the most profligate, vile, and abandoned of the criminal classes, and detained there for nearly ten months, and subjected to treatment, the thought of which makes even now his blood run cold, his heart sick, and his mind diseased, in ignorance of the nature of the abominable charge on which he was seized, in open and studied violation of all laws, divine and human, especially the Peruvian law.

CLAIMANT'S SEIZURE, IMPRISONMENT, and SUBSEQUENT TREATMENT.

On Saturday, the 23d of March 1861, about seven o'clock, a.m., as claimant stepped on the mole of Callao (where he landed in order to wait the departure of another steamer for Guayaquil), he was suddenly seized by a negro soldier of the Peruvian Government. The soldier gripped him by the throat with his left hand, and holding the point of his naked bayonet pressed to claimant's breast with his right, told him that "If he made any attempt to move or speak he would kill him." He thus held him until a man, who turned out to be a spy sent from Arica, by the Peruvian Government, to watch claimant, and who had come ashore in the same boat with him from the steamer, accompanied by another dressed in a sort of naval uniform, and two soldiers (negroes) joined them. The spy who had come ashore with claimant said to the soldier who was still grasping his throat, "That will do," on which he released his hold and withdrew the bayonet from his breast. The official in uniform then ordered claimant to follow him, but claimant's bewilderment at the manner in which he had just been treated, and the exhaustion and pain consequent upon the pressure on his throat, rendered him incapable of obeying the command, whereon the soldiers who had come with him struck claimant several severe blows in the back with the butt-ends of their muskets, and pushed him forward in a staggering state. The choking which he underwent from the soldier deprived claimant for some minutes of power to articulate, but when he recovered the use of his speech he asked the person in uniform "Why he was being treated in such a manner." He replied by commanding claimant to keep silent, and ordered his men to drive him on. Claimant told him that he was a British subject, produced his passport, inquired if he had infringed any law of the country, and, if so, begged to be informed what his offence was, and required him to show his authority for seizing him, and subjecting him to such brutal outrage. The official replied that he would show claimant too much authority; then, making a gesture to the soldiers, they pierced and wounded claimant in several places in the thighs with their bayonets, on which the official added, tauntingly, "Well, you know my authority now, don't you? God damn you and your passport!"

The severe pain caused by the bayonets made claimant spring forward some distance; then, turning to the official, he again loudly demanded to know why he, a stranger, who had not offended against any person or any law, should be outraged in such a manner, and also what he further meant to do with him. He protested, as a subject of Her Britannic Majesty, against being driven as a beast through the most public part of the town, without being shown a warrant or any other written authority, for depriving him of his liberty. A heavy blow on claimant's head with the butt of a musket, which stunned him, prevented him from hearing the reply, if any; and two soldiers seizing him, one by the collar, the other by the breast of his coat, pulled and hurried him onward, almost insensible, an abusive mob following.

Thus was claimant dragged into a yard where several officers and soldiers were assembled, and was at once thrust violently on the floor of a little wooden box, in which he was kept about half an hour. When partially recovered from the stunning effects of the last blow, blood was found gushing from a deep cut in his head. A guard of four or five soldiers was placed over him, one of whom kept claimant's arms tightly pinioned behind his back. He felt very faint, and asked for a drink of water; on which another of the guards, with a curse, ordered him to be silent, and then struck him violently in the mouth, with his clenched fist, knocking him down. Claimant remained lying on the floor for about a quarter of an hour, when his keepers ordered him to stand up; but not having strength to do so, he was pulled out into the yard, where he found the official who had brought him from the quay, and a guard of soldiers drawn up in line. They marched claimant back through Calle de Comercio (Commercial-street), between a party of soldiers in parade order formed in two lines (a sergeant holding him by the coat), through some rooms and passages up to the door of a black hole in the arsenal, into which an officer, with drawn sword, ordered him to enter. He had kept totally silent since he had been knocked down, but upon seeing the disgusting place into which he was about to be forced, he repeated his remonstrances and protests, and besought this officer not to insist on his compliance with the order. He turned away from claimant, saying to the soldiers, "Adelante!" (forward), when the guards, instantly bringing their bayonets to the charge, thrust him, after inflicting several severe wounds and tearing his clothes, into the dungeon, about 10 feet square, and then locked the door. He was in total darkness and without air, except what was admitted through the keyhole. The floor was covered with human excrement and urine. In each corner there was a heap of putrid matter, and the stench of the place was such as could not long be endured by human beings, especially by one who had been brought up as claimant had been; while the heat (March is one of the hottest months in Lima) was stifling. The filth had not been cleared away for months. There was not a single article of furniture in the dreadful place.

A few minutes after he was locked up, he was seized with violent pains and dizziness in the head, and was obliged to clean away, with his vest, the excrement and urine with which the floor was covered before he could lie down, and had to turn his coat and trousers into a bed, to escape from the moisture and some of the pestilential vapours which he felt were overpowering him. He remained in this condition about seven hours, creeping from time to time through all the filth of the floor to the keyhole, to breathe and implore the sentries to allow him a little water to quench his burning thirst, which was denied him. The sentries, on discovering that he was breathing air through the keyhole, prevented his doing so by constantly thrusting sticks, knives, and the points of their bayonets through it, lacerating his parched lips and mouth. Claimant was borne from this dungeon (for he was unable to walk without support) to a cell nearly opposite, about three o'clock p.m. on the same day, and, having again asked for a drink of water while being removed, a corporal told him "Not to make him angry, or he would give him that," thrusting his bayonet in claimant's face, which he said claimant "would be sure to get as soon as the General came." This fresh place of confinement consisted of four bare walls. At 6 o'clock p.m. two officers came to claimant and ordered him to rise up, saying, "You are going on an excursion to Lima." One of the officers brought him paper, pen, and ink, and desired him to write down his name and nationality, which claimant did instantly. A long conversation, in a whisper, ensued between one of the officers, who had told claimant he was going to Lima, and another; the former said to the latter in a loud voice, "No, you need not put the manacles on him; we are sufficient for him; I don't want your guard. If he were the devil himself, instead of a mere assassin, we would not be afraid of him." The officers then led claimant between them to the railway station, and they proceeded by train to Lima, and went to the Préfecture, followed by a mob. They reached the Préfecture about sunset. Claimant had not broken his fast since dinner-hour the previous day on board the steamer, and feeling almost totally exhausted from the effects of the violence of which he had been made the subject, and the deprivation of food and drink, he requested the Préfect to allow him to send for a little wine and biscuit. This request having been granted, claimant gave to one of the sergeants at the Préfecture a ten-dollar gold piece to buy a bottle of claret and some biscuits, but before he had tasted either, or received his change, he was commanded, by a man in uniform, to follow him;—he at the same time taking possession of claimant's walking-cane, for which he had paid six dollars, observing, "I cannot allow an animal like you to carry such an article of luxury as this."

Claimant was then marched through several streets to the "Prison of the Inquisition," and into the "Capilla" (chapel) of this building, where he was locked up, and a strong guard was posted outside the door. He lay down on the floor, supporting his aching head against the wall, and remained thus until about 10 o'clock p.m., when an official, followed by a guard with fixed bayonets, entered, and ordered claimant to accompany him. This guard marched him through iron-grated doors and filthy alleys, and then into a still more horrible place than he had been imprisoned in before, the bare sight of which thrilled him with horror. The official told the "caporal" to take special charge of him, adding, as he did so, that he was "Un sugeto muy malo y un hombre perdido" (a very bad character and doomed man). "Caporals" are almost invariably condemned murderers and robbers.

The horrible appearance of the den, and the treatment which claimant knew awaited him as the consequence of the words just uttered, sent a thrill of anguish through his soul. He turned to the official and implored him, by everything he held dear on earth and his hopes of future happiness, not to abandon an unoffending gentleman to the wretches by whom they were then surrounded. He answered not a word, but casting claimant violently from him, he fell against the wall, and heard the key grate in the lock of the massive door. Claimant, who had not from his cradle to that moment offended with intent (in thought, word, or deed) man, woman, or child, wept scorching tears while he lay groaning and writhing in mental and bodily agony on the floor.

It was only by degrees he became aware of the full extent of the horrors of that awful place. Several candles placed in bottles were burning in different parts of the dungeon. The prisoners, of the most filthy and degrading character, chiefly in a drunken state, others still drinking "aguardiente" (white rum) from bottles, which they constantly passed from one to another. The major part of them were naked, except about the loins, on which they wore "clouts" or aprons, and were heavily manacled by their legs and wrists. They were reclining in all imaginable positions on the floor, the whole of which was occupied by them, with the exception of the spot where claimant was lying, and that occupied by two "sambullos" (sambullo is a wooden vessel open at the top). These "sambullos" emitted a most envenomed stench, and were, from time to time, used by these wretches for the necessary calls of nature; and their contents, being continually disturbed, materially added to their previous most sickening effects. The only visible ventilator the place contained—as in the case of the black hole in Callao—was the keyhole, some of the consequences of which were painfully visible in the copious streams of steaming perspiration which were gushing from the pores of the naked and shockingly filthy bodies of the criminals. The heat was so intense that claimant became perplexed in wonder and astonishment to think that any human being could survive even one night in so polluted a place.

The drunken inmates, fourteen in number, packed into one dungeon of 10 feet square, swearing and shouting in the most uproarious manner, throwing the empty bottles at each other's heads, cutting all those in their immediate neighbourhood with knives (with which all were provided), the moisture running down the walls, and urine and liquid excrement all over the floor, whilst the fœtid odours that issued from the sambullos and the bodies of the naked prisoners, rendered the place almost unbearable. The danger was imminent of the drunken men succeeding in the efforts which they made to set fire to what they called "La casa de los valientes y felices" (the home of the brave and happy). All this, coupled with the clanking of their chains, their fiend-like appearance, and the overpowering heat, presented a spectacle which struck claimant with horror.

The noxious atmosphere which claimant was then breathing rapidly undermined his mental powers, and the little bodily strength he still possessed. His vision

vision became obscured, and his thoughts erratic and confused. His heart felt as though it were being inflated, and his burning brain ached as though it would split. His inner and outer garments were saturated with steaming moisture, and his veins felt as so many streams of lava. A violent ague soon after shook his entire frame; he got on his legs, but they were unable longer to support their burden; he staggered over the prostrate bodies of the criminals to the door of the dungeon, and addressing, through the keyhole, the guards who were conversing outside, he begged of them, "for God's sake," to open the door, if only for a few minutes, and let him get some air and water, or he should be suffocated. Those guards cursed him in the vilest possible manner, and most inhumanly told him to "Die like a dog. They would not give him one drop of water, or allow him to get a mouthful of air."

He had, in staggering towards the door, unavoidably brushed against some of the prostrate drunkards.

Hearing the reply he had just received, these latter rose up, and fiercely assailed him for having, as they stated, "tried to murder them." They loaded him with every conceivable base epithet, and swore that, unless he gave them money for "aguardiente," they would tie him up hand and foot, and lodge a charge against him in the morning before the criminal judge. They lifted him into their midst and commenced searching for money, whereupon he gave them a golden ounce (17 dollars), and some cigars from his "bourse de voyage," which, having been strapped over his shoulder, he still retained. On the receipt of the money and cigars, these villains were immediately appeased; they swore claimant was "a good fellow," asked him for whose murder he had been convicted; and two of the most ferocious-looking and heavily-ironed (apparently leaders of the gang) dragged claimant in between them, swearing at the same time that "he was a damned liberal fellow, and must sleep with them, as they would not see him without a bed." They were lying on the floor in pools of urine and excrement.

Previously he had not spoken a word to any of these convicts, and when he found their chains pressing into his flesh, as he lay helpless, tightly wedged in, although conscious their object was to protect him from the others, yet indescribable pangs of anguish shot through his brain and bosom. He had been thus forced, regardless of his firm remonstrances and protests, and his agonized appeals and supplications, into association with the vilest of the vile, and was now the helpless slave of monsters in human form, whose hands reeked with the blood of scores of victims (one was subsequently pointed out to him who had committed no less, incredible as it may seem in Europe, than 30 murders).* He felt his heart withered and breaking. He could not weep, and so remained where the murderers had fixed him, in an almost total state of stupefaction, until the day was far advanced.

Sunday, March 24.—The first fresh occurrence which his shattered reason enabled him to comprehend was, that two soldiers were supporting him in their arms, while a number of others with fixed bayonets stood around in the dungeon. The criminals had disappeared. Supported in this manner, claimant was led back to the Capilla, where, as on the preceding evening, he was again locked up, and sentries stationed over the door, with strict orders from one of the officials to "Run him through if he uttered a word." The soldiers who had supported him thither laid him on the floor of the chapel, where he remained until the following day, being too feeble to rise up.

Monday, March 25, he fell into a troubled slumber, the first which he was enabled to obtain since the night of the 22d on board the steamer. From this sleep he was violently aroused by a caporal, who, pulling claimant up, held him on his legs, and conducted him to the back part of the chapel, and placed him on a wooden form.

Some time elapsed before he could collect his senses sufficiently to realise the scene before him, in which, as he soon with astonishment and indignation learnt, it had been intended he should enact an important part. The large folding-doors of the chapel were thrown wide open. Inside and across a detachment of troops with arms, and an officer with drawn sword, were formed. A large table strewn with papers, at which sat three persons, stood at the inner extremity of the the chapel where claimant was seated. Near to him two caporals stood in front of and close to the table, and the sota-Alcaide (first assistant-keeper of the prison, late a convict) occupied a stand near the centre of the floor, for the purpose of attending to the summonses of a bell which lay on the table, and conveying to the military the whispered instructions of one of the three persons there seated. These latter were dressed as men in the ordinary pursuits of life, in suits of garments no two articles of which corresponded in colour, in violation of the law.* The man who occupied the middle seat held in his hands, and was poring over, a large package of manuscripts; the one seated on his right hand had all the requisites for writing, including stamped paper, spread out before him; he on the left was looking over the contents of a printed book, which rested on his knees. Claimant was called upon to stand up, and had difficulty and suffered much pain in doing so, and only succeeded by seizing hold of the table, by means of which also claimant was forced to support himself the greater part of the subsequent period, during which he was compelled, by menace of armed force and violent threats, to submit to the inquisitorial ordeal which immediately followed. It was by stealth that he was enabled to write in pencil the details of this and the previous two days' vile treatment to which he had been subjected by the officials of the Government, as a prison official told him that, "If he were discovered speaking or writing, his guards had stringent orders from a high quarter to shoot him down or bayonet him." He received this information from the official in charge of the prison. He, however, succeeded in keeping his pencil-notes.

During the interview which ensued, claimant asked the individual acting as chief inquisitor, and whose authority the others obeyed, who and what he was; why claimant had been seized and so vilely used; if he was accused of any infraction of the laws, in which case he requested to be informed of the nature of the charge, whatever it might be. That up to that moment he was kept ignorant of what he was accused—if anything. He stated that he was engaged solely on his lawful and peaceable business; that he had neither wronged nor injured anyone; that he was a subject of Her Britannic Majesty, under whose flag he had served; that he invoked the protection of that flag against the unmerited outrages to which he had been subjected, and that he protested against the inquisitorial course that was being pursued towards him.

This person declined to say who he was, or mention any charge against claimant,† haughtily observing, that "He did not care for the representatives of claimant's nation, her flag, her Government, or her Queen; that he was superior to them all, and would make claimant feel it; that claimant might as well remonstrate with, and protest to, the walls of the chapel as to him; that he was claimant's sole master, and that he had ordered claimant to be brought there to answer his questions, but not to ask any."

This personage directed, from time to time, the secretary to write on the stamped paper according to his instructions; and then imperiously ordered claimant to subscribe his name at the foot of what had been so written. This he at once declined, observing that, having heard what had been dictated, he knew the document was neither consistent with his statements nor the facts to which they bore reference; that it had not escaped him the inquisitor had given a forced construction and false aspect to plain and unequivocal sentences pronounced by claimant, as all who heard must be well aware, suppressing the comments which, in consequence of its insinuations and suggestions, it had been necessary for claimant to make; in a word, that he might write what he chose, but as that document was not consistent with truth, it could not receive claimant's sanction.

The inquisitor stormed, raged, and bullied;‡ he would be obeyed, and would permit no resistance to his will. He said if claimant longer refused, he should have a taste of the "chicote" (the cowhide strap used for flogging criminals), and then be sent back in irons to the black hole. Suiting the action to the word, he made a signal, and the chicote and manacles were brought in, and placed before claimant with studied parade. Two men proceeded to strip him of his his clothes, but all to no purpose ; he remained obdurate. After some whispering to his colleagues, this inquisitor suddenly changed from his course of menace, saying that, before proceeding further, he wished claimant to understand, that what he required was a mere formality which bound claimant to nothing, but was requisite for the sake of regularity in this inquisitor's proceedings ; that he believed the whole affair was the result of mistake ; that if claimant signed, he would order him to comfortable quarters ; that claimant should no longer be kept in secret confinement ; that he should be permitted to take air in the prison yard, and have writing materials at his disposal ; that he hoped they should be good friends, and that if claimant was a friend to himself, he would sign without further delay.

Catching a ray of hope to be able to communicate his miserable position to the representatives of Her Britannic Majesty, claimant replied that, if the inquisitor pledged his honour to perform what he had just promised, he should write his name, but with the distinct proviso, that by doing so, it was not to be supposed he gave his sanction to what the document contained. The inquisitor gave the required pledge, and claimant subscribed his name as commanded. Claimant was about three hours before these inquisitors, and was then allowed to pass into the yard, where he soon learned that his recent inquisitor was no other than the notorious criminal judge Luis Ponce ; that it would be folly on claimant's part to place the slightest reliance on any promises this judge might make, and that claimant ought to lose no time in making his situation known to the representatives of his Government in Lima.

Claimant was looking over a newspaper which one of the political prisoners had given him, when the same gentleman who had afforded him the information and advice just mentioned, came running up to say that fresh orders had been received by the Alcaide (head gaoler) from the Government and judge in reference to claimant, and that a guard of soldiers were coming to again consign him to secret confinement.

But one prospect of procuring assistance now remained, and claimant determined to avail himself of it before the guards could again lock him up. Assisted by one of the prisoners he succeeded in reaching the room of the gentleman who had lent him the journal. Claimant gave him a few hurried instructions, which he promised to fulfil, about addressing a protest against Judge Ponce's infamous conduct, and getting some letters in claimant's name published in the journals, so that his imprisonment might become known. To this end he signed his name on four or five leaves of blank paper, and left 22 dollars to meet expenses. He had barely concluded signing the papers when an officer and four soldiers came rushing into where he was, and the latter, by order of the former, lifted claimant bodily in their arms, and bore him rapidly off into a dungeon fronting the Capilla (this was about 6 o'clock in the evening). A corporal and five soldiers were placed on guard over claimant, and strictly ordered not to allow him to pronounce a word, "not even to Christ," or approach within five feet of the inner side of the doorway. He protested against this fresh brutality to the officer, who told him in reply that "he was acting in conformity with orders from his Government," and that "if he had received orders to shoot claimant he would have done so." The officer went away as soon as he told claimant this, saying to the guard as he was retiring, "Do your duty." The moment this order was uttered, one of them charged claimant with his bayonet, which, penetrating through his coat, entered his flesh close above his left hip, inflicting a deep wound. He had by this time been about 60 hours in prison, suffering as few other men, if any, have ever done, without having received any food or drink, and afraid to speak. He endeavoured by putting his hands to his mouth and making signs of eating and drinking, to intimate that he required food. While he was thus occupied, a prison official rushed into claimant's dungeon with a naked sword in his hand. He waved it about his head, swearing most frightful oaths that he would cut claimant in pieces, like a "son of a bitch," as he expressed it, and kicked claimant severely half a dozen times in his side and back as he lay reclining on one of the heaps of manacles and other irons which the place contained. After this fellow had ceased this kicking, and before he went away from the dungeon, claimant said aloud that he would readily give all the money he had (showing some gold pieces in his extended hand) for a jar of water and some bread. The official ordered claimant to be silent, and said, "He had a mind to chain him at the barra for having presumed to speak."

This officer locked the door of the dungeon, leaving two sentinels, with bayonets fixed, inside; the rest of the guards remained outside close to the door. About 20 minutes might have elapsed from the time claimant had been permitted to take air in the yard until he was borne to his new place of confinement. The keyhole was, as in his previous dungeons, the only means of ventilation. He lay on the heap of irons until morning. The floors and walls were filthy and damp, and the place did not contain any furniture whatsoever. With the exception of the glare produced by lighted matches, which the two inside guards kept constantly flaring about, he remained in darkness until 1 o'clock, p.m., on the 26th March, when the door was opened. The constant sparkling of those matches, and the incessant yellings of the men who used them, together with the responsive howlings of their companions outside, and the disgustingly obscene conversation of the guards and their numerous black female companions, rendered it impossible to procure a moment's repose, although his worn-out body and mind absolutely required it.

During the short time the door remained open, claimant threw on the floor of the dungeon two silver dollars, and pointed to the money, which the soldiers instantly picked up, and then he pointed to his mouth, soon after which the soldiers made signs to him. Acting in conformity with their signals, he approached within about a yard of the doorway; looking forth he distinguished one of the prisoners holding in his hand a plateful of rice, which he stretched out to claimant at arm's length. This was the first time he could by any means obtain any food since his seizure three days previously. He devoured part of the rice ravenously, but his stomach immediately rejected it. On examining the rice which still remained on the plate, he found it to be mixed with human hairs and vermin. He would have died of starvation before putting another grain of that poisonous compound into his mouth. He passed the following night as he had the previous one. The next day (27th March) Judge Ponce came to the dungeon and asked claimant, while a sinister smile played about this judge's countenance, "Well, how do you like the room which I have given you?" Claimant told him that he had violated all the promises which he had made in order to get him to sign a truthless writing, and again asked him, "Now that claimant had signed according to his wishes, to inform him honestly and fully of his reasons for having deluded him." He said, "The cause is nothing. I think you won't require any more apartments than this one." Claimant told him that he could not much longer resist the constant severe torment which he was compelled to suffer, and that "he was dying of starvation," adding that he would freely pay any price, however exorbitant, which might be demanded for some nutritious food and water, and begged of this judge not to longer inhumanly persist in withholding them from him.

This judge's answers to this supplication were: "There are several other things which you must do for me, and you are not yet in the right condition for doing them. I will consider your application to me for food another time, and see if anything can be done for you; but at present I cannot permit you to get anything. Cheer up, friend (Buen animo, amigo), all will soon be over between us." He then left the dungeon, laughing heartily.

Claimant did not see him again until about 2.30 o'clock p.m. on the 28th of March, more than five days after claimant's seizure, when he discovered him standing in front of his dungeon door, in the yard, but he also saw at the same time, with delight, Colonel The O'Gorman Mahon standing by his side. He heard the Colonel ask Judge Ponce if he might converse with claimant, but the judge replied, "No! no! I won't allow any person to speak to him!" The colonel then suddenly retired, without uttering a syllable further to any one; but claimant was too well acquainted with his humane and fearless character not to rest mentally satisfied that he should take speedy steps to relieve a hapless fellow Irishman from the humiliation of being thus caged like a ferocious beast in Judge Ponce's menagerie.

Claimant received an unfolded letter from The O'Gorman Mahon that day, informing him he had learnt from the newspapers that claimant had been arrested, and desiring to know whether he required any legal or other assistance.* This letter was handed to claimant by a prison official, accompanied by the individual who had been left-hand man of the inquisitorial trio in the Capilla on Monday, the 25th March. This man brought with him writing materials with which to enable claimant to reply to The O'Gorman Mahon, who was waiting at the inner gate of the prison for an answer. Claimant wrote his reply, kneeling on the floor, which he was obliged to use as his desk. During the time he was writing it, the official punched him on the back and side with his scabbard, desiring him to make haste and finish. About an hour after the colonel had withdrawn from the front of the dungeon door, as just described, he again returned to it, accompanied by Judge Ponce, and a young gentleman intimately connected with the Peruvian Ministry of Foreign Affairs—Mr. Carrasco.

The colonel and Mr. Carrasco at once entered, Judge Ponce, at the same time ordering out claimant's guards, addressing himself to claimant, said: "Well, you may now speak." Then Mr. Carrasco informed him that the colonel, on being apprised of claimant's miserable position, had gone twice that day to the Peruvian Minister of Foreign Affairs (Señor Melgar), who, in reply to the colonel's applications and remonstrances, had sent for Judge Ponce, and ordered him to release claimant from secret confinement, and directed also that he should be allowed to purchase food and see his friends.

Thus was claimant rescued from the fate that awaited him at the hands of Judge Ponce. He felt himself saved; and by whom? By him, a warm and noble hearted Irishman, who was hourly risking his own life in that nest of assassins, by his untiring efforts to bring to justice the villains who, in broad daylight, had robbed and murdered his young friend Captain Lambert, R.N.; efforts in which the gallant colonel was frustrated by this very Judge Ponce, whose conduct on that occasion was publicly reprimanded by the superior tribunal.

Later in the day, an officer entered with a small brown paper parcel in his hand, saying it contained money sent for claimant by the Intendente (chief of police) to purchase food. Claimant told this officer he must have mistaken him for some one else, but if it were really designed for him, he requested that he would return it with his compliments, and state that he possessed sufficient funds of his own, but that he could not avoid looking on the offer as strange, coming at such a moment, after the lapse of five such days of suffering from total deprivation of food and drink, during which he had experienced worse than a mad dog's treatment; that what he required from him and the other officials of the Government was to know with what crime, if any, he was charged, why he was seized, and why detained a prisoner, and subjected to such brutal treatment.

Claimant had been marched regularly, during his incarceration in this prison of the inquisition, by an officer with drawn sword, a sergeant and eight privates with fixed bayonets, from his respective places of confinement to a "sambullo," which stood in an exposed part of one of the most frequented and filthy parts of this edifice. During the indispensable time claimant had to remain in this receptacle, this guard formed three sides of a hollow square facing inwards towards him with arms at the charge, much to the astonishment of the convicts. The moment he descended from this position, he was collared by one or more of the soldiers, and hurried into the centre of his guard, who instantly marched him back to his cell without permitting him to readjust his garments. Still he dared not for his life speak. Nevertheless claimant found means to communicate with the gentleman in whose hands he had left the sheets of paper, with his signatures already alluded to. This he effected in the following manner: having pencilled a telegram, and unravelled a cigar, he rolled the paper on which he had written into the part of the cigar intended for the mouth; then, lighting the other end, and smoking it for a short time, he threw it out into the yard through his dungeon door, when he happened to see the gentleman referred to passing.

The receipt of Colonel The O'Gorman Mahon's letter, dated from the office of the Peruvian Minister, in whose presence it had been written, and by whose orders it had been delivered in claimant's den, proved that claimant's little despatches had produced the desired effect, and that his friend, the political prisoner, had not failed in his promises. Then came the colonel's welcome visit, soon after which he sent a bedstead, bedding, table, and sundry other articles of furniture. Claimant was now permitted to purchase food and speak. He was allowed to take some exercise in the yard; he was permitted to purchase pens, ink, and paper. He immediately wrote down the full particulars of the ruffianly bullying he had undergone from Judge Ponce. He also made records from his pencilled notes of the inhuman wrong and savage barbarity to which he had been subjected by the Government officials. About 6 o'clock p. m., on the 29th March, the guards were again placed in his dungeon and outside the door, as usual. He was locked in. These guards (filthy Indians and negroes) continued throughout the night to scream to one another, and hold ignited matches close to claimant's eyes, as on the night preceding, for what purpose he never could ascertain, unless it were to be satisfied that he had not yet cut his throat, which they doubtless expected he should do under such appalling circumstances; or, perhaps, to prevent all possibility of his sleeping. The door was opened at 9 o'clock a. m. the following day, when the guards were removed until sunset, and then replaced as before, and so continued to be stationed until the 27th of August (five months after claimant's seizure), when claimant was transferred to San Francisco de Paula. All this time the Peruvian Government had in their possession voluminous evidence of his complete innocence, upon which same evidence he was subsequently fully acquitted, four months afterwards.

Protracted confinement in the horrid dens of the Inquisition had, in the meanwhile, been steadily undermining his health. He was becoming gradually insane, and his sight had become impaired to such an extent that he despaired of its ever being restored. The necessity for his removal, therefore, became urgent, there being no alternative between insanity and a miserable death, or immediate change to some other locality. Accordingly, on the 27th August, claimant was transferred to the prison of San Francisco de Paula, at the opposite side of the river, after five months and four days' incarceration in the dungeons of this abominable Peruvian Inquisition. This act of mercy was not, however, extended to claimant until after Monsieur de Lesseps, the French Minister, absolutely insisted on claimant's removal.

June 4. Judge Ponce ordered claimant to his presence in the chapel, for the second time since claimant's imprisonment, nearly 10 weeks after the first interview.

August 9. Judge Ponce again compelled claimant to appear, more than eight weeks after the last interview.

August 12. The judge had claimant again forced before him.

August 19. Another meeting took place. This was the first occasion on which the judge afforded claimant any interpreter whatsoever, to enable claimant to clearly understand the judge, and convey his sentiments accurately in reply. But this individual was not the sworn interpreter of the court, but the personal friend of Judge Ponce. This man, Christopher Conroy, was not under the obligation of an oath to prevent him from making a false record. It suited this unjust judge's purpose, no doubt, better to introduce his intimate friend, Christopher Conroy, instead of the responsible interpreter.

The final interview with Judge Ponce took place August 22, at the termination of which he had claimant publicly manacled with the "grillos and barra,"* notwithstanding that from the 16th of April he was proved to be wholly innocent, and was ultimately pronounced wholly innocent upon the amplest testimony at that date, and for nearly four months previously in the possession of the Peruvian Government and Judge Ponce.

Before claimant was removed from the prison of the Inquisition, the dungeons in which he had been there confined were totally transformed, no doubt in order to prevent a full public discovery being made of the horrors of the places in which he had been so long doomed to the most inhuman tortures.

During the whole of the time his transfer to San Francisco de Paula was being effected, he was held tightly by the collar of his coat by one of his police guards armed with a sword and a Sharp's rifle capped.

In the dungeon to which he was consigned was a mass of grillos, chains, fetters, manacles, barras, anvils, pincers, hammers, punches; in a word, all the iron materials for torture, amounting in the aggregate to about a ton weight; and as if the presence of these detestable implements was not considered sufficient to impress his mind with the fearful power at Judge Ponce's disposal, claimant was compelled to witness their application to the unfortunate wretches subjected to this judge's control, and thus were the horrors of his dungeon aggravated. In illustration,

* A solid bar of iron, about 14 feet long and six inches in circumference, rove through the eyes of the grillos (massive iron shackles), which were pressed by it hard down on his ankles.

illustration, he refers to a case which he was compelled to witness on the 12th of April:—Two convicts, already heavily ironed, were brought in for the purpose of having other irons added to them. They had ripped the abdomen of one of their fellow criminals, and then attacked each other with knives, the consequence of which was innumerable gashes, from which blood flowed freely. They presented a loathsome and soul-harrowing sight, and they were swearing by most dreadful oaths that the death of one of them should alone end their strife. The punishment for this interchange of threats consisted in linking them closely together by chains encircling their waists, from which hung other chains secured round the legs and ankles. These latter were drawn together by means of grillos, so as to prevent the possibility of walking, and as their hands and arms were manacled they could no longer inflict injury on themselves or others, except with their teeth. When about to be removed, one of them said to the official presiding over the operations which had rendered them helpless, "I am as good a man as you, although your —— for the general has made you an officer. When I get free I shall inquire how you, a 'zapatero' (shoemaker), can be allowed to trample in this manner on the best friends of the grand marshal."

This official was dressed in uniform, and in addition to his sword carried a heavy stick, which (on hearing the above quoted words) he flourished rapidly, and striking the speaker on the head, felled him, both convicts going down together. The man who had received the blow lay motionless, while the official showered on him kicks with his feet, and blows with his club, until it became difficult to distinguish eyes, nose, or mouth, to such a mass of gore were all battered and reduced.

The political prisoners who witnessed this scene, strove, by crying out "Shame! shame!" to restrain the fury of the savage, while claimant protested as loudly against having his dungeon made the arena of such barbarities, and demanded that this official and the disgusting implements of torture should be removed from his cell, whereat the official turned like an enraged tiger on claimant, and swore by his Creator that "If claimant again opened his lips, he would serve him in a similar manner, if not worse." That he would have attempted to realise this threat there can be little doubt, had he not been restrained by a universal burst of indignation from the gentlemen prisoners who were looking on.

September 17. A man came and desired claimant to sign his name on a sheet of paper, which already bore a single signature, and nothing else. Claimant declined doing so.

Claimant continued to pine in confinement until 30th November, when the Judge of First Instance, Senor Carrillo, passed sentence in his case, the tenor of which was that claimant was innocent, and yet he must be banished perpetually from Peru.

There are only six hours allowed for appeal, but claimant did not hear of this sentence until 10 days after it was pronounced.

The copy of this sentence, which he succeeded in obtaining, conveyed to him the first information he had received from any of the Peruvian officials of the nature of the crime of which the Government had accused him.

Some person unknown to claimant appealed against the decision of Judge Carrillo to the Superior Court, which confirmed claimant's complete innocence, and reversed the sentence of banishment.

On the 14th of December the "Comercio" published the sentence which the Superior Court passed upon claimant.

This sentence states, "That as Melville White had been in Tacna, about 1,000 miles from Lima, from the 21st to the 28th of July 1860, he could not have been the perpetrator of the attack made on the president, in Lima, on the 25th of the same month."

Consequently, the Court fully acquitted him of the charge which had been fabricated against him, and censured the judge of the First Instance, "For not having pronounced judgment within the period commanded by law," i. e., "within 60 or 80 days at the utmost from the period of arrest."

The Attorney General, not content with the decision of the Superior Court, appealed from that decision to the Supreme Court, the highest tribunal in Peru to which such cases can be referred, hoping, no doubt, to obtain such a modification of the sentence of the Superior Court as would afford some justification for the conduct of the Peruvian Government and Judge Ponce, for the unconstitutional manner in which they set all laws, divine and human, especially the Peruvian, at nought. But the judges of the Superior and Supreme Courts were not so plastic or pliable as Judges Ponce and Carrillo, whose conduct claimant refrains from stigmatising as it merits, out of respect to the arbitrator. The judges of the Supreme Court accordingly, on 23d December, confirmed the sentence of the Superior Court, and commanded claimant's liberation from prison.

And although claimant was thus ordered by the Supreme Court, on the 23d of December, to be set at liberty, yet he was by the Government kept in confinement at San Francisco de Paula until the 9th of January 1862, on which day he was first informed by the colonel commanding at that prison that he was discharged from custody.

But this was not all. After the passing of the sentence by the final tribunal, which, according to the Peruvian laws, had cognisance of his case, the matter was taken out of the hands of the judicature by the Supreme Government, and claimant was accordingly told, on leaving the prison, by the said colonel, that he was to call at the prefecture on the following morning, at 10 o'clock, to learn the tenor of a decree which the Supreme Government had passed against him; showing him at the same time a letter, signed General Freire, Minister at War, instructing him (the colonel) to that effect.

No officer of the Government informed claimant, previous to his liberation, of the sentences passed by the Superior and Supreme Courts, although the law ordains that such information shall be duly furnished. (See the Laws accompanying this case.)

He proceeded to the prefecture next day at the hour appointed, when the Intendente, Colonel Secada, read to him a decree of President Castilla, signed by Senor Morales, Peruvian Prime Minister, which, after referring to claimant's complete acquittal by the courts, commanded him to immediately leave the Republic. Claimant protested against this decree as being a serious infraction of his rights as an unoffending Briton, a violation of the Peruvian law, and of the treaties between his Sovereign and the Peruvian Republic. He applied for, and after much difficulty obtained, a legalised copy of the process (expediente) which had been framed against him.

Judge Carrillo and his secretary compelled claimant to pay 100 dollars 4 reales for this copy, notwithstanding his having pointed out to them the written law of the State, which commanded that he should be furnished with it gratis. He holds the secretary's receipt for the money, with the exception of three dollars, which three dollars he had to pay to the notaries for legalising his signature. Several forgeries were committed by the judge and his secretary in the original expediente, while it was being copied. Having obtained this copy, claimant departed from Peru, in compliance with the decree of perpetual banishment enacted against him.

All claimant's wearing apparel and most valuable papers and documents were taken possession of by the Peruvian Government, on the 23d of March 1861, when he was seized, and were never restored to him.

MOTIVES for the CONDUCT of the PERUVIAN GOVERNMENT.

The question naturally suggests itself here, What motive could the Peruvian Government have had in violating the treaties with Great Britain and their own law in the person of claimant, and subjecting him to such cruelty and oppression? And there is no difficulty in answering that question. The Peruvian Government contemplated renewing hostilities with the Ecuadorian Government at no distant period, with a view to annex Ecuador to Peru. The Peruvians were well aware that claimant had entered into arrangements with the Ecuadorian Government, for the purpose of constructing roads and other internal means of communication throughout the Republic, which, in the event of such hostilities, would create great facilities for the movement of troops throughout Ecuador. It was, therefore, the object of the Peruvian Government to prevent or delay the execution of those works, and the only effectual means of so doing was to rid itself, at all risks, of the engineer who had undertaken to carry out the intentions of the Ecuadorian Government; and the Peruvian Government accordingly seized and incarcerated claimant. The sequel has proved the correctness of their judgment, for the works up to this moment remain unexecuted.

This desire on the part of the Peruvian Government was perhaps strengthened, and their hostility towards claimant increased, in consequence of the opinion he entertained of the infamous act of their naval forces, in a friendly port, in firing on the army of Ecuador, and shooting down the men whilst they were effecting the passage of the Salado, up to their waists in water, and of the no less infamous act of the Government, in heaping compliments on the murderers, instead of condemning them.

The Peruvian Government knew claimant was innocent of any charge that might be brought against him. They knew that the person who attempted the life of the President was living and at large, to the knowledge of everybody at Lima. Within three weeks from claimant's seizure, it was proved by a Commission of Government officials sent from Lima to Tacna, by and on behalf of the Peruvian Government, that claimant was living at Tacna, 1,000 miles from Lima, on the day and at the instant when the attempt was made upon the life of President Castilla; and yet on this very charge, as claimant nine months afterwards learned for the first time, he was detained in dungeons in Peru for nearly 10 months.

Recognition by Her Britannic Majesty's Government of Claimant's Right to Compensation and Full Reparation.

In July 1861 (five months after the date of claimant's imprisonment), the Right Honourable Earl Russell wrote to the Peruvian Government, informing them that their conduct was "atrocious." In October following, his Lordship again wrote, saying that "The Peruvian Government had mistaken the forbearance of Her Majesty's Government for indifference," and that "the time had then arrived when Great Britain would no longer permit those outrages on her subjects." In February 1862, four months afterwards, and when claimant had been liberated by his dastardly persecutors, and after he had been compelled to flee Peru for his life, Earl Russell wrote a third time, to the effect that "Her Majesty's Government espoused claimant's cause with warmth," and that "Her Majesty's Government were very much displeased and indignant about his (claimant's) ill-treatment, and his being ordered out of Peru."

On the 5th of August 1862, Mr. Jervis, in his place in the House of Commons, asked the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, "Whether any steps had been taken to obtain from the Government of Peru, satisfaction for the outrages committed against Captain Melville White?"

Mr. Layard said, "The treatment by the Peruvian Government of British subjects had been such as to call for the most grave remonstrances on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

"The case referred to by the honourable and gallant Member, was only an example of the unjustifiable proceedings which the Peruvian Government had taken with respect to Englishmen in Peru. Captain Melville White had been arrested, thrown into prison, treated in the most barbarous manner, refused a statement of the charges brought against him, and suddenly sent out of the country. He was now preparing a statement of his case, which, as soon as it was received at the Foreign Office, would be acted upon by the Government, and redress demanded for Captain Melville White.

"This case was most serious, and the House might rest assured that Her Majesty's Government will insist on full reparation."

On the 5th of May 1863, claimant's case was again brought before the House of Commons. The following is an extract from the published reports of the proceedings on that occasion:—

"The Times," Wednesday, 6 May 1863.

"The Case of Captain Melville White."

"Colonel Dunne inquired of the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, What steps had been taken to obtain redress for the cruelties inflicted by the Peruvian Government on Captain Melville White, a British subject?"

"Mr. Layard said, That the case of Captain Melville White was one of the worst cases he remembered to have seen. He had been arrested on a most frivolous, and, as it afterwards proved, a most unfounded charge. He was thrown into prison, treated with the greatest barbarity, and on the matter being referred to the Peruvian Courts of Justice they had acted in a manner which was disgraceful to them. After ten months' imprisonment he had been released at the earnest remonstrance of the British Government, and no reason had been given for his imprisonment. The British Government had referred to the law officers of the Crown the statement made by Captain Melville White, of the circumstances under which he had been so maltreated, requesting that his case should be at once be taken into consideration, and that a sum should be named by them as an adequate compensation to Captain Melville White for the injuries he had received. Captain Melville White had sent in a claim of 292,174*l.* to the Foreign Office. The British Government had not thought it right to make this demand, but they were willing to leave the case to arbitration, and as the Peruvian Government had no objection to do the same thing, he trusted that some decision would be soon come to which would do justice to all parties and be satisfactory to Captain Melville White and his friends."

It is accordingly for those atrocities, for those outrages and losses, that Captain Melville White seeks compensation.

And he submits respectfully that he is entitled to reparation for the wanton and cruel manner in which the treaties between the British and Peruvian Governments (abstracts of which are herein set out) have been violated, and the Peruvian laws (abstracts of which are also herein set out) have been trampled upon, in the person of claimant, without the slightest justification or excuse; and for the great pecuniary damage which he has sustained in the loss of his fixed salary, referred to at page 2, paragraph 6, and by being obliged to abandon the highly lucrative and remunerative contracts which he had entered into with the Ecuadorian Government, also referred to in the same place; for the pecuniary expenses he has incurred, as hereinafter set forth; for the injury his health has sustained; for his blasted prospects, his ruined constitution; for the injury to his mind and nervous system, and his loss of sight; for the damage to his reputation in consequence of the malicious slanders of the Peruvian Government, their President, and Judges; and for other grievous wrongs which claimant now proceeds more particularly to specify in the order of their occurrence, and for which he seeks full compensation and reparation from the Peruvian Government.

Before proceeding to set forth the particulars of the grounds upon which Captain Melville White claims the most ample compensation, he submits, for the perusal of the arbitrator, testimonials from distinguished officers, military and naval, from which the arbitrator shall ascertain the principles that have ever guided claimant, and the social position he has enjoyed.

London, 7 October 1862.

My dear Captain White,

I HAVE much pleasure in stating that you were personally known to my firm for a great many years in India, and that the character you bore there as a gentleman and officer was the highest that any person could ever possess; moreover, I always found you moving in the first society. Your correspondence with my firm, while you commanded a detachment of the Hon. East India Company's Naval Brigade during the mutiny, was meritorious in the extreme. It does you great honour, and is worthy of the noble and humane cause which you had come from Europe to India to sustain, and in which you constantly laboured with patriotism and zeal.

My firm had the pleasure of paying to Bishop Oliffe, by your instructions, sums of money of which you speak in your book as having been transmitted for the benefit of the Catholic orphans and other charities.

Your relations with my firm were as stated in your pamphlet. I have read it with pain and amazement. I shall rejoice if I can render you any service during my stay in this country, and it shall give me great pleasure to learn your welfare and restoration to good health.

I am glad that my visit to Europe has afforded this opportunity of renewing our acquaintance, and of bearing testimony to your worth and services at the awful period of the mutiny.

Believe me, &c.

Thomas A. Apcar.

From Brigadier (now General) Coghlan, R. A., &c., Governor of Aden.

CAPTAIN MELVILLE WHITE, author of a pamphlet entitled "Britons Robbed, Tortured, and Murdered in Peru," and himself the subject of outrage and barbarity narrated in that pamphlet, was known to me some six years ago, when I was serving at Aden as Political Resident and Commandant.

Captain Melville White at that time commanded a ship betwixt India and the ports in the Red Sea, and he had the opportunity to render me service as the bearer of despatches to the officer commanding the British squadron employed at Hodeida, as described in his book; for that service, so cheerfully rendered, I was much obliged to Captain White.

Captain Melville White's position, socially and officially, was that of a gentleman; and, so far as I am acquainted with his career, his conduct has justified that title. I shall be glad to hear that he is substantially compensated for the wrongs which he suffered at the hands of the servants of the Peruvian Government.

My dear Captain White,

IN reply to your letter of the 7th instant, I have great pleasure in bearing my testimony to your admirable conduct while we were fellow passengers on board the steamer "England," on the voyage from Madras to Vizagapatam, about five years ago.

When the ship was in imminent peril for several days, from the violence of the hurricane, the mutiny of the crew, and the general want of confidence, your nautical abilities, coolness and decision, were well calculated to re-assure the minds of the passengers, and I doubt not, tended materially to the ultimate safety of the vessel.

I shall be rejoiced to hear that your appeal to Government, and the exposure of the treatment you experienced from the authorities in Peru, may be attended with ample compensation for yourself, and the establishment of efficient protection for British subjects in Peru for the future.

My dear Sir,

I HAVE carefully perused your pamphlet, "Britons Robbed, Tortured, and Murdered in Peru," and have much pleasure in bearing testimony to the correctness of all you have stated in connection with our passage home in the "Octavia;" also that your conduct during the voyage was most gentlemanly; that you were most kind and obliging to all those who in any way needed your services on board; that you were on the best terms with the passengers, and that whenever I have met you it has always been in the best society. You are at liberty to make any use you like of this note, and I sincerely hope it may be of service to you.

My dear Captain White,

I HAVE to thank you for your pamphlet, which I have perused with much interest, and sincerely hope that you may receive ample redress through Her Majesty's Government for the treatment to which you have been subjected. Our personal acquaintance was not of long duration, but the intimacy was formed under circumstances which enable those so placed to understand and appreciate each other.

The kindness and consideration exhibited by you to the passengers on board the "England" during the days the vessel was in imminent danger, the crew mutinous, and all confusion, secured the esteem and regard of all, and I may be permitted to add, the calmness exhibited by you throughout that most trying scene, tended materially to uphold and restore confidence to many who had almost given up hope. I shall always be happy to hear of your welfare, and trust you will at some future period favour me with the result of your appeal to the British Government.

Believe me, &c.

From Commodore Edgell, R.N., C.B., Aide-de-Camp to the Queen.

Brighton, 20 October 1862.

CAPTAIN MELVILLE WHITE, the author of a pamphlet recording his sufferings whilst unjustifiably detained as a prisoner at Lima, in Peru, was known to me in India when returning home to recruit his health from illness contracted on service during the mutinies.

I have every reason to believe his statement true from my knowledge of his gentlemanly bearing, as well as from personal knowledge of the dungeons at Callao, and the treatment which foreigners too often have met at the hands of the Peruvian Government; and I trust that the Government of Peru will now be taught a lesson that will render life secure, and the name of a British subject more respected than it has hitherto been.

From General George Moyle Sherer, late Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, my Commanding Officer during the late Mutinies in India.

My dear Captain White,

Jersey, 12 November 1862.

It was with very great pleasure I received your communication of the 6th inst., transmitting your pamphlet, which I have read with the deepest interest, and (while sympathizing in all you have undergone since we last met), let me say, I shall be heartily glad to hear that the shameful indignities and most cruel sufferings you had to endure at the hands of the barbarian officials in Peru have (through the agency of the British Government) been amply atoned for by the Peruvian authorities, who will in future, I hope, be compelled to respect every British subject, and made to compensate your pecuniary loss, as well as grievous injury in your health, which I am truly sorry to hear has suffered so severely.

Never can I forget your services at Julpigoree during the rebellion in 1857-58. The manner in which you had drilled your Naval Brigade, and made them (as they really were) most efficient soldiers, did you the greatest credit. Few, if any one, indeed, in your situation, could have accomplished what you had (in so short a time) effected. Your detachment coming as it did to my assistance at such a critical moment, just as I was about to execute some of those bloodthirsty mutineers, was of the greatest possible service to me, and seeing your resolute and most determined conduct on that occasion gave me additional confidence.

Trusting I may soon hear of your speedy and perfect recovery,

Believe me, &c.,

Captain Melville White,

From Sir Frederick J. Halliday, K.C.B., late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal.

My dear Sir,

London, 2 Dec. 1862.

I REMEMBER your going to Rungpore with a party of the Naval Brigade, during the mutinies, and from thence to Julpigoree, where you did good service.

No one was better qualified than General Sherer to judge of the value of the service you rendered at that critical time, and I observe that he bears strong testimony to its importance and to your merits.

I am sorry to see that you have since that time been subjected to indignity and suffering in Peru, and I hope you will obtain full redress.

I am, &c.

To Captain Melville White.

Frederick James Halliday.

From General George Moyle Sherer, late Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, my Commanding Officer during the late Mutinies in India.

My dear Captain White,

Jersey, 29 January, 1863.

FINDING from your communication of the 26th instant, that among the numerous documents you were so unfortunate as to lose during your travels in South America was an official letter you had received from Mr. Longmore, magistrate of Rungpore, acknowledging in the most flattering terms the valuable services you had performed while the Naval Brigade, to which you were attached, remained at Rungpore; and as the death of Mr. Longmore renders it impossible that he can now bear testimony to those services, I have the greatest pleasure in stating that I have not only heard that gentleman, but many of the residents at Rungpore, speak of your conduct in the highest commendation possible: and I have no hesitation in affirming that but for the most energetic and judicious mode you adopted in training the men under your command, they would never have become the well-disciplined and efficient brigade they proved to be.

I consider your management of those sailors did you the greatest credit; and that you should have come, as a volunteer, from England at your own expense, to serve your country at such a momentous period, is, in my opinion, beyond all praise; and I can only say that, if every officer in India had shown a like front, the rebellion would, I consider, have been crushed at the outset.

My hope is that you will obtain some reward for your services in the East, and trusting to hear of your speedy recovery,

Believe me, &c.

G. M. Sherer, Major-General, late Aide-de-Camp to the Queen.

My dear Captain White,

IN complying with your request contained in your note of yesterday's date—just received—wherein you ask me “To record my sense of your moral character and honour, as, also, if I consider you capable of uttering or countenancing aught else than truth” (you may imagine my surprise at such extraordinary questions regarding your reputation), I can have no hesitation in stating that I have the highest possible opinion of your character in every relation of life; and must say that I think you may be justly proud in having performed such acts of heroism, which few men at your age have ever achieved, and only hope I may yet see you rewarded by your country for your truly noble and most praiseworthy services, which deserve to be handsomely requited.

Yours, &c.

From Colonel The O’Gorman Mahon, formerly Member of Parliament for the County of Clare, and subsequently for Ennis.

Junior United Service Club, Waterloo-place,
23 April 1863.

My dear Captain Melville White,

IN reply to your application, I derive great pleasure from being able to bear testimony to the accuracy of the statements contained in your work—“Britons Robbed, Tortured, and Murdered in Peru”—relative to the events which occurred during my residence in that country.

It was not until after a careful perusal of the highly creditable testimonials you possessed, that I introduced you to Generals Flores and Stagg, and Senor Garcia Moreno, President of the State of Ecuador. My personal knowledge of you enables me to attest that your candour, strict adherence to truth, and upright characteristics, acquired the respect and admiration of all to whom your honourable career became known; my indignation was, consequently, great, when informed of the atrocious charge of assassination so iniquitously trumped up against you, and for which there did not exist even the most remote shadow of justification, a fact that was well known to the Peruvian authorities, while they continued to heap on you contumely and sufferings only awarded to criminals after conviction.

Your loyalty and gallant services to Her Majesty while in command of a detachment of the Naval Brigade during the Indian mutiny are amply attested by your superior officers, and entitle you to substantial reward at the hands of Her Majesty's Government, while, at the same time, it would be difficult to limit the amount of compensation to which you are justly entitled for the many heavy wrongs inflicted on you by the Peruvian authorities.

The admirable fortitude displayed under your unmerited sufferings makes me happy to recognise in you, my dear captain, a fellow-countryman of the true stamp, of whom any nation might well be proud.

Captain Melville White,
&c. &c. &c.
36, Cavendish-square.

Most faithfully yours,
The O'Gorman Mahon, Colonel, J. P. and D. L.

From Commodore Frushard, late Commander-in-Chief of Her Majesty's Indian Navy.

My dear Captain White,

Bombay, 24 March 1863.

I AM very sorry to find you have been so great a sufferer, as shown in the pamphlet you have kindly sent me; and I trust you will be aided to obtain redress from the Peruvian Government.

I very gladly testify to having always heard you spoken of in high terms as a gentleman and seaman, and my full concurrence from personal acquaintance.

I also testify to the truth of your statements in your pamphlet, relative to your having brought me despatches from the Political Resident at Aden, at no small risk to yourself, and to your having assisted the squadron with a supply of rope, that was much needed, and also to your having shared your private stock of mess stores with my officers and myself—a kindness thankfully remembered. The occurrences at Juddah were reported to me by the Vice-Consul at that port, who spoke highly in your praise. I am very sorry to find, from the medical certificates you quote, that your sufferings are so prolonged, and trust this letter may find you in happier circumstances.

Yours, &c.

J. Frushard.

CLAIMANT'S SUBMISSION TO THE ARBITRATION.

On the following grounds for compensation, Claimant affixes the amounts to such items only as refer to actual cash disbursements and pecuniary losses, leaving the Arbitrator to estimate, himself, the amount of compensation to which claimant is entitled for the long catalogue of wrongs, of which he was made the unoffending victim, and the dreadful consequences thereby entailed on him.

Grounds on which Claimant Demands Compensation.

For having, without the slightest pretext or shadow of right, on the 18th day of March 1860, on his departure from Arica for Callao, placed a spy on board the steamer "Bolivia" to watch claimant; and for having, on his arrival at Callao, at 7 o'clock, A.M., on Saturday, the 23d of March 1861, caused claimant to be seized (without a written warrant or authority signed by a competent person in that behalf) by negro soldiers - - - - -
For causing the said soldiers to gripe claimant by the throat until he was nearly suffocated, leaving deep and painful wounds and bruises on his neck, caused by the pressure of the soldiers' knuckles against it - - - - -
For holding him, on the same day, in the public streets at Callao, for upwards of 15 minutes, with the point of a bayonet pressed against his breast - - - - -
For causing the soldiers who seized him, whilst he was bewildered from the effects of the said suffocation and strangulation, to inflict upon him four severe blows in the back with the but-ends of their muskets, and push him forward in a staggering state - - - - -
On the same day, for inflicting three severe bayonet wounds on claimant in the public streets in Callao, and causing excruciating pain and great loss of blood, under the instructions of an officer who tauntingly observed—"Well, you know my authority now, don't you? God damn you and your passport;" while claimant was demanding the written warrant or authority for his seizure - - - - -
For seizing claimant without a written warrant or authority, and refusing to inform him of the nature of the crime with which he was charged, or to show a written authority or warrant for his seizure - - - - -
For having, on the same day, in the public streets at Callao, inflicted a deep wound on his head, having been struck by a soldier, under instructions of an officer, with the but-end of a musket, which stunned claimant, and occasioned much loss of blood, whilst legally protesting against the brutal outrages of which he was made the victim; and for causing two soldiers to seize him, the one by the collar, the other by the breast of the coat, and pull, and drag him along the street whilst in an insensible state - - - - -

For driving claimant, a gentleman and naval officer of high rank, like a brute beast through the public streets of Callao, without any just cause, at the points of bayonets, from the Quay to the Préfecture, amid the insulting taunts of the rabble

For having, on the same day, dragged claimant into a yard, before a number of officers and soldiers, and thrust him into, and flung him on the floor of, a wooden box at the Préfecture at Callao, and kept him there for half-an-hour, during which time the wound in his head was bleeding - - - - -

For having, on the same day, whilst asking for a little water to quench his burning thirst, been struck by a soldier a violent blow with his clenched fist in the mouth, which knocked claimant down, and caused great loss of blood - - - - -

For pulling claimant from the box into the yard when unable, from exhaustion and pain, to walk - - - - -

For having, on the same day, marched claimant through the most public streets at Callao, as a criminal, from the Préfecture to the Arsenal, under a strong guard of armed soldiers, one of whom held claimant's coat skirts, amidst the taunts of the rabble

For thrusting claimant, at bayonets' points, into a black hole or dungeon at the Arsenal at Callao, and there locking him up - - - - -

For inflicting upon claimant four bayonet wounds, and cutting his clothes, whilst forcing him into the dungeon, thereby causing him much pain and loss of blood -

For forbidding him to speak on pain of death, keeping him without air, in entire darkness in the said dungeon, the floor of which was covered with human excrement and urine, the corners being heaped up with fetid putrid matter, the stench being insufferable and the heat stifling, which caused claimant intense pain and dizziness in the head, preventing him from standing, and compelling him to take off his vest to sweep away the excrement and urine on the floor before he could lie down - - - - -

For having on the same day caused claimant's mouth to bleed copiously from wounds inflicted by soldiers thrusting the points of sticks, knives, and bayonets through the keyhole of the dungeon, whilst he was endeavouring to get a mouthful of air, and vainly begging, "in God's name," for some water to assuage his burning thirst - - - - -

For keeping him on the same day locked up in this dungeon, from eight o'clock a.m. until three o'clock p.m., without food or drink, during which time he was almost delirious for want of water and air, and from the intense heat and poisonous effluvia and stench of the dungeon - - - - -

For carrying him from this dungeon, about three o'clock p.m., whilst unable to walk, to a dungeon opposite, and for thrusting a bayonet in his face - - - - -

For having on the same day, in the presence and hearing of several persons, falsely and maliciously called claimant an assassin - - - - -

For having, on the evening of the same day, marched claimant, as a criminal, by armed soldiers, through one of the most frequented thoroughfares of Callao, from the dungeon in the Arsenal to the Railway Station, amidst the taunts of the rabble, and publicly conducted him by rail to Lima, as a criminal, in presence of numerous passengers, it being very well known to every one in Peru, that the real assassin, a Peruvian, was living in Lima - - - - -

For having, the same evening, marched claimant through the public streets in Lima, as a criminal, from the Railway Station to the Préfecture, amidst the gross abuse of the rabble - - - - -

For forcing him away, after allowing him to purchase wine and biscuits, without permitting him to taste them, although he had been kept without food or drink for 30 hours - - - - -

For keeping the 10-dollar gold piece given to purchase the wine and biscuits - - - - -

For robbing him of his gold-headed cane, which cost six dollars - - - - -

For marching him, in custody of armed soldiers, from the Préfecture in Lima, through the public streets, to the prison of the Inquisition - - - - -

For removing him, in custody of soldiers with fixed bayonets, through iron-grated doors and filthy alleys, and casting him violently against the wall of, and locking him up in, a dungeon, about nine feet by seven, in which were several lighted candles, fixed in bottles, and 14 prisoners of the most filthy and degrading character, some of whom were drunk, others becoming so as fast as possible, being engaged in drinking rum from bottles, which they passed from one to another. The major part of them were heavily manacled by their legs and waists, and nearly naked, having only a cloth round their loins; they occupied the whole of the floor, except where claimant was cast, and two tubs, open at top, stood, from which was emitted the most envenomed stench, being used by those wretches for the calls of nature, the continual disturbance of the contents adding to the sickening and disgusting state of the atmosphere, no air being admitted, except through the keyhole. The bodies of the prisoners steaming with perspiration, and the heat unbearable. The prisoners sprawling about, roaring and shouting in the most vociferous manner, throwing the empty bottles at each other's heads, and cutting and wounding all those within reach with knives, which they were permitted to keep. The moisture was running down the walls, and the urine and liquid excrement all over the floor, and the fetid stench that issued from the tubs and naked bodies of the criminals was indelible. This conveys but an imperfect idea of the place and society in which claimant, innocent of crime and uncondemned, had been cast - - - - -

	£.	s.	d.
For the awful torture and agony which the Peruvian Government doomed claimant to undergo, in the pestiferous dungeons of the Inquisition, amongst condemned murderers, on the nights of the 23d and 24th of March 1861, in violation of their treaties with Great Britain and the Peruvian laws, which prohibit the confinement in the dungeons of a prisoner who has not been condemned, a multi fortiori , a gentleman and naval officer, who was known by every one in Peru to be innocent of any breach of the laws -
For having violated the Peruvian law by the neglect of competent judicial authority to visit claimant until the third day after his seizure -
For the slanderous report given of claimant on the night of the 23d of March 1861, to the chained murderers in the dungeon of the horrible Inquisition, when forced therein -
For the loss of all his wearing apparel, and documents and papers of almost inestimable value, on the 23d of March 1861 -	2,000	-	-
24th of March 1861. For the 17 dollars which he was compelled on this night to give to the chained murderers in the Inquisition, with whom he was associated -	3	8	-
For forcing him into association with the vilest of the vile -
For violating the Peruvian law by permitting their criminal judges, before whom he was first brought, to conceal their judicial characters by wearing a costume prohibited by their laws, with a view of preventing claimant from penetrating through their base designs against him -
For having, on the 25th of March 1861, by their criminal judge, Ponce, threatened to cowhide claimant and put him in irons, and absolutely partly stripped him, for the purpose of carrying out this barbarous torture, because he refused to sign a document which was truthless. For storming, raging, and bullying claimant by judicial authority -
For refusing to give information when demanded by claimant on the occasion of being called before the judge, of the nature of the offence with which he was charged -
For inducing him to sign a false document, under promises, which Judge Ponce subsequently violated, viz., that claimant should no longer be kept in secret confinement; that he should be allowed to speak; that he should be permitted to take air in the prison yard, and have writing materials -
For threatening to chain him to the Barra and Grillos because he asked for food and drink, after having passed 60 hours without either -
For having, on the 25th of March 1861, been violently kicked by a brutal official six times, as claimant lay in an almost dying state upon a heap of horrid instruments of torture, in a beastly dungeon, wholly incapable of defending himself -
The money which he was compelled to pay for the insertion in the public journal "Comercio," of a notification of his imprisonment in the dungeons of the Inquisition, and of his protest to the criminal Judge Ponce -	4	8	-
26th March 1861. For causing soldiers to carry claimant bodily from a room in the yard of the Inquisition into another dungeon, and locking him up there without food or drink, with a heap of manacles for a bed, without an article of furniture, the floor and walls being filthy and damp, and keeping him there for 18 hours, and preventing him from getting air through the keyhole, by ordering soldiers not to allow him within four feet of the door, and directing the soldiers to do their duty; whereupon one of them charged claimant with his fixed bayonet, ran him through the left hip, and caused him great agony and loss of blood; and for keeping him in the said dungeon in solitary confinement, with two soldiers inside, who continually lighted matches in claimant's eyes to prevent his sleeping; and yelling and howling, and indulging in the most obscene and disgusting conversation -
For money which he gave to a soldier in his dungeon for some filthy rice which he could not eat -	-	8	-
For giving him poisonous rice, filled with human hair and vermin, which, after eating ravenously, claimant's stomach rejected -
For having been visited in the dungeon by Judge Ponce, and taunted and insulted by him, and told that "He would consider claimant's application for food and drink another time, and see if anything could be done for him, but at present he could not permit claimant to get anything," crying, "Cheer up, friend, all will soon be over between us" (alluding to claimant's probable death from starvation); and laughing heartily when leaving the dungeon -
For being refused permission by Judge Ponce to speak to Colonel The O'Gorman Mahon, when he first called at the dungeon -
For having, on the 12th of April, by their paid agent, threatened to club claimant into a worse state than the awful one to which he had, in claimant's dungeon and presence, reduced two wretches whose heads and features he had so battered that it was impossible to distinguish them, because claimant protested against making his dungeon the arena of such brutalities, and compelling claimant to witness such scenes -
For having on the 23d May 1861, published in the journal "Comercio," No. 6,920, a document entitled "Project of Law," proclaiming claimant to the world as an assassin, and signed Manual Morales (Minister of State) -
For having, on the 27th of the same month, published in the same journal, No. 6,925, another document, entitled "Project of Amnesty," signed José Fabio Melgar, Manual Morales, Nicholas Friere, and Juan Oviedo, Peruvian Ministers of State, proclaiming claimant before the world as an assassin -
For keeping him five days in secret and silent confinement, without food or drink, without charging him with any violation of the law, and without trial, though the law requires that a prisoner shall be brought before a judge within 24 hours after his arrest -

L. s. d.

- For having, in violation of all decency, whilst a prisoner in the Inquisition, marched claimant daily under a guard of soldiers with fixed bayonets, and an officer with a drawn sword, to the sambullo, and keeping him in dread of his life whilst attending there to the calls of nature, before a hollow square of soldiers facing claimant, with fixed bayonets, under orders from their officer to run him through if he attempted to speak, and causing the soldiers to collar him on descending from the sambullo, and hurry him back to his dungeon, without being permitted to adjust his garments - - - - -

- For having, by Judge Ponce, intimidated claimant by armed force and violent threats, and subsequent promises, into signing a paper containing an infamous forgery, which this unprincipled judge presumed to call claimant's "declaration instruction," and for refusing to furnish a copy of it, in violation of the Peruvian law and the treaties with Great Britain - - - - -
- For having, on the 9th of August 1861, for the first time (after four months and 17 days' imprisonment), most slanderously and illegally issued a warrant of imprisonment against claimant, on a charge of shooting at President Castilla, on the 25th of July 1860, in the Plaza of Lima, although it had been proved by their own witnesses, on the 16th of April 1861 (more than three months previously), that claimant was at Tacna, 1,000 miles off, on that day - - - - -
- For constantly refusing to comply with claimant's legal demands to be informed of the cause of his imprisonment; and for having mocked at and rejected claimant's escrito (legal written application) of the 20th July 1861, written under the instruction of Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, the Hon. W. S. Jerningham, requiring to be informed of the cause of his imprisonment - - - - -
- For having, on the 22d of August 1861, publicly manacled claimant with Grillos and Barra, after he had been in the Inquisition five months, although no charge had been publicly preferred against him, and the pretended charge of assassination was disproved by the evidence of the witnesses of the Peruvian Government, on the 16th of April previously, who swore that at the very instant the attempt was made on the President's life, claimant was 1,000 miles off, at Tacna. - For having been slanderously and maliciously charged by Judge Ponce, in the presence of political and criminal prisoners, with being a scoundrel, robber, and assassin, this judge knowing such charges to be false, and that claimant was an honourable and unoffending gentleman and naval officer - - - - -

claimant to be innocent of any infraction of the laws of the country, and thus inflicting on him additional grave wrongs, and rendering the Peruvian Government liable to the most serious and heavy demands for the amplest pecuniary and other reparation	£. s. d.
For money paid for writing claimant's pamphlet, "Britons Robbed, Tortured, and Murdered in Peru," from memorandum made by him from time to time during his imprisonment, with a view of making claimant's case known to the Government in England, and especially to Members of the Houses of Parliament, in order to enforce his just claims against the Peruvian Government, his own mind, health, and sight being so impaired, that he was unable to prepare it himself	100 - -

Claimant's contracts with the Ecuadorian Government led to his accepting a permanent engagement under the Government of Ecuador, with an allowance of 12,000 dollars a-year for his personal expenses, and of which he was in the actual receipt when he was seized, it is submitted that as he lost that appointment by the conduct of the Peruvian Government, and as he is only 30 years of age, such an appointment was worth 10 years' purchase, which would entitle him to 120,000 dollars, as compensation	24,000 - -
Claimant submits that, as the works which he had undertaken to execute were on an extensive scale, and as he had the power of subletting the contracts, he is entitled to the large profits which he should have made by such contracts, if he had not been prevented by the Peruvian Government from executing them. Claimant possesses the certificates of eminent engineers, who are of opinion that the profits should have amounted to, at the lowest estimate, 20,000 £.; he therefore respectfully submits that he is entitled to that sum as compensation for the great loss he has thus sustained, and the great sacrifices he has thus been compelled to make, by being obliged to abandon those contracts, not to refer to the permanent increased salary to which the contracts were sure to lead	20,000 - -
Claimant also demands, as his undeniable right, the revocation of the scandalous decree of banishment which the Peruvian Government dared to enact against him, in violation of all their own laws, and their treaties with Great Britain; and a satisfactory written apology for the injuries done to him, and the indignities heaped upon him, and the immediate publication of such revocation and apology in all the journals in the Republic; as also that a copy of such revocation and apology shall be handed to claimant	- - -

These disbursements and losses amount to 59,740 £.

It will be for the arbitrator to estimate the amount due to claimant, in respect of each of the other wrongs and grievances enumerated in the black catalogue of crimes perpetrated by the Peruvian Government.

With such precedents as the French, Japanese, and English cases herein quoted afford, it is submitted the arbitrator should not find much difficulty in awarding Captain Melville White compensation commensurate with his sufferings.

The French claims against Peru, for the simple imprisonment of a French peasant, amounted to 58,400 £.

The English claims exacted from Japan, for the killing of Englishmen, in a moment of excitement, in an affray by fanatical ignorant Japanese footmen, amount to 135,000 £.

The damages awarded by a jury of 12 Englishmen, for the imprisonment for two or three hours in London, of an English tradesman, amount to 1,000 l.

Were claimant's compensation to be based by the arbitrator, upon an infinitely lower standard than any of the precedents just referred to, claimant's pecuniary compensation could not possibly fail to amount to nearly 300,000 l.

Claimant's case is so peculiar and so atrocious, that no amount of pecuniary compensation can atone for it; but, as his reputation, tortures, and blood, must now be balanced against gold, the arbitrator will, claimant feels assured, act on the just principle, "Fiat justitia, ruat cælum."

The Principles upon which Compensation ought to be Awarded.

Claimant admits the difficulty of suggesting a test by which compensation ought to be estimated by the arbitrator, because of the unprecedented nature of the conduct of the Peruvian Government.

Claimant, however, respectfully submits it ought to be governed by those cases which have arisen between the Peruvian Government and French subjects, which, although not parallel, are the nearest in point that are now to be found.

Also by the cases which have lately arisen between Her Britannic Majesty's Government and the Government of Japan, together with a case which was a short time since decided in London, respecting the detention there for a few hours of an English tradesman.

There is the greater reason why the French cases should be taken as precedents, because the French and Peruvian Governments have entered into treaties similar to those of the British and Peruvian Governments, and the Peruvian laws apply equally to French and English subjects. There is this distinction, however, between claimant's case and those about to be cited, viz., the French subjects were all in humble, though respectable, class of life, whereas claimant was born and reared a gentleman, and has obtained high rank in an honourable profession. Indignities, cruelties, and barbarities heaped and practised upon a person in his sphere of life, particularly when every one knew him to be innocent, especially his persecutors, would be much more acutely felt by him than by peasants, however respectable they might be, and his sufferings of mind and body consequent thereupon, would be proportionately augmented. This distinction, it is submitted, ought to be taken into the consideration of the arbitrator, and ought very much to increase the amount of compensation.

When the arbitrator also bears in mind the manner in which the Peruvian constitution, as well as the specific articles of its written codes, and the treaties with Great Britain, have been violated in every stage of the illegal and dastardly conduct pursued towards claimant, the arbitrator cannot fail to see that the payment of a sum of money, however large, cannot adequately compensate claimant for the sufferings he has undergone in respect of the outrages of which he has been made the victim, the privations he has endured, and his consequent fall from riches to poverty.

If the wrong of the Peruvian Government were in the first instance a crime, that crime increased in magnitude every day that claimant was detained in prison after his innocence was proved, and the pecuniary compensation assumes a proportionate aspect.

But the magnitude of the crime is still further increased by the audacity of the conduct of the Peruvian Government, in still further adding insult to injury, by their attempted denial of claimant's right to the amplest compensation when called upon by Her Majesty's Government to make reparation for their infamous wrongs, and by their presuming to offer 1,000 l. on the ground that they were bullied into it; and in the face of the facts stated in this case, and the admissions contained in the "expediente," persisting in submitting claimant's right to compensation to arbitration, notwithstanding that Earl Russell, in his Despatch of July 1861, announced their conduct as atrocious, and in February 1862 declared that "Her Majesty's Government had espoused claimant's cause with warmth;" and in another Despatch, that "Her Majesty's Government were much displeased and indignant at claimant's being ordered out of Peru;" and Mr. Layard, Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, on the 5th of August 1862, in his place in the House of Commons, after recapitulating some of the outrages committed on claimant, declared the case was "most serious," and that "the House might rest assured Her Majesty's Government would insist on full reparation."

Subsequently Mr. Layard declared, in his place in the House of Commons, that claimant's case was "one of the worst he had ever known," and that "he hoped soon to have the case settled to the entire satisfaction of Captain Melville White and his friends."

It is impossible to rest upon narrow grounds the compensation to which claimant is entitled for the injury done to him by seizing him without any just cause, and for all the subsequent ill-treatment, sufferings, and privations he has endured; shutting him up in dungeons with the vilest criminals, keeping him five days without food and drink, inflicting numerous deep and severe wounds upon his person, causing his blood to flow, and putting him in fetters; for the impairment of his mental powers, the injury to his bodily health, and his almost total loss of sight.

For the sentence passed by the Court of First Instance, which was an outrage upon all the principles of justice and humanity, and a direct violation of the rights of Her Britannic Majesty's subjects; for the infamous articles published in the Government journals after the courts had declared claimant's innocence; for the atrocious manner in which the Peruvian Government trampled under foot their treaties with Great Britain, the codes of the Republic, the sentences of the courts in claimant's favour, and international law and right, by daring to enact against him a "decree of the Supreme Government," wherein claimant, an unoffending British subject, an officer of high rank, and a gentleman, was emphatically commanded to be banished for ever from Peru.

Compensation for wrongs such as these should not be dealt out with a niggard hand. Reparation should be made upon the same broad basis upon which the wrongs were inflicted. The Peruvian Government did not deal out their atrocities with a niggard or sparing hand; it is but fair, then, that the same measure of justice should be meted out to them, now that they are called upon to make amends for their unsparing wrongs. No pecuniary amount can adequately compensate claimant for the privations and agony of mind and body he endured for nearly ten months. Not all the wealth of Peru would induce him to go through the same again. One man in 100,000 could not survive to tell the tale.

Claimant now proceeds to cite the cases between French subjects and the Peruvian Government, as well as between her Britannic Majesty's Government and the Government of Japan, and the case of an Englishman imprisoned in London.

It is respectfully submitted that these cases afford precedents for the adjudication of claimant's case.

Precedents for the Estimation of the Pecuniary Claims of Claimant.

In the case of Zuderel, a French peasant, 100,000 francs were paid to him as compensation for 20 days' imprisonment. In the case of the cooper, Rosé, 20,000 francs were paid him as compensation for two blows of the fist. (Vide the "Comercio" of 5th May 1860, No. 6,413, wherein is published the various sums exacted by the Government of France from the Peruvian Government, for misconduct on the part of the latter towards subjects of the former, amounting to 782,600 francs).

Since the French Government, for such comparatively trifling injuries inflicted on peasants, insisted on payment to them of the sums just mentioned, claimant submits that the arbitrator should award him, for the frightful application of brutal force of which claimant was made a victim, sums commensurate with the continuance and enormity of that abuse, bearing in mind his social position and the important fact that he never gave a shadow of ground for complaint in any way whatever.

The Frenchman, Zuderel, received, for simple imprisonment, 200 l. per diem for 20 days, at which rate he should have had to receive, had he been imprisoned as claimant was (nine months and 17 days), 58,400 l.

It is not to be supposed the French Government would have reduced their demand for daily compensation had this man's imprisonment been extended, as claimant's was, to nearly ten months! On the contrary, they would have been justified in largely increasing it, and they would have done so.

The other French subject, the cooper, Rosé, received 1,600 l. for two blows with the fist. What, it may be asked, would have been the amount of compensation demanded by the French Government for this person had he received, as claimant did, a dozen bayonet wounds in addition to being nearly choked, gashed in the head, and knocked down by a blow on the mouth?

The foregoing will enable the arbitrator to understand the effectual mode in which the French Government have compelled the Government of Peru to atone for their misconduct towards Frenchmen.

These cases, it is submitted, afford the very lowest bases upon which the arbitrator ought to award compensation to claimant in the adjustment of his demands.

Claimant now refers to the case where Her Britannic Majesty's Government have obtained from the Government of Japan compensation for outrages committed on Englishmen.

Extract from the "Times" of 16 June 1863.

"JAPAN.

"Mr. Liddell inquired of the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs what was the precise nature of the demands made by Her Majesty's Government upon the Government of Japan, in the shape of reparation for outrages committed upon British subjects in that country, and whether there was any objection to state what instructions had been sent to the British admiral on the station as to the steps to be taken in the event of the Tycoon's refusal to comply with those demands; and also whether Her Majesty's Government had any ground for supposing that the Tycoon had the power, even if he had the will, to obtain from Prince Satsuma reparation for the murder of Mr. Richardson?"

"Mr. Layard said that, as the House were aware, some months ago a murderous attack was made upon four British subjects who were riding upon the high road near Jeddo, which had been opened to foreigners under treaty. Mr. Richardson was killed, two of the gentlemen were wounded, and a lady who was of the party escaped almost by a miracle. This was not the only outrage which had recently been committed upon British subjects in Japan, and Her Majesty's Government had made demands upon the Japanese Government, the nature of which he had no objection to state. In the first place, they demanded an ample and formal apology for the murder of a British subject on a road which had been opened by treaty, and the payment of 100,000 l. by the Government of Japan as the penalty for that offence. It was true that this outrage was committed by the servants of a powerful Daimio named Prince Satsuma, and in order that punishment should be inflicted, Her Majesty's Government have demanded that the persons implicated should be taken, tried, and executed, in the presence of one or more British officers, and that a sum of 25,000 l. should be paid by Prince Satsuma as compensation to the family of the victim and those who suffered in the assault. Whether or not the Japanese Government had power to enforce this demand on Prince Satsuma he could not at present state. There was a further demand, in consequence of the murder of two marines who were on duty as sentinels when the British Legation was attacked on the 25th of June last. For this a sum of 10,000 l. had been demanded as compensation to the families of the victims. It would not be in accordance with precedent for him to state the instructions which had been given to the admiral, but he believed that they were such as were likely to enforce the demands of Her Majesty's Government."

The arbitrator will perceive from this extract that the pecuniary compensation demanded by the British Government from the Government of Japan amounts to 135,000 l., and this sum has been paid to the Government of Great Britain by the Japanese Government.

The crime which gave rise to this demand was a barbarous one, but it was humane compared to the atrocities to which claimant was subjected. In the former case, an English tradesman was riding along a road in a country which had just been forced open to Europeans, when a fanatical servant of one of the native nobles attacked and slew, in a moment of passion, in an affray, the Englishman. There was not any apparent premeditation on the part of the culprit, and the Government of Japan had no apparent connexion with the committal of the crime. In the latter case (claimant's), a naval officer of high rank was travelling in Peru, which has long been in professed friendly intercourse with Great Britain. He was seized, most illegally, and without the slightest justification, and for 10 months tortured in the most shocking manner. He was thus tortured while his torturers all along knew him to be wholly innocent. The vilest possible means were had recourse to by his torturers to fabricate schemes which might screen them from the consequences of their conduct towards him.

Claimant

Claimant had better have died a hundred deaths—if it had been possible for him to have done so—than undergo those 10 long months of horrors in the Peruvian dungeons.

Claimant's torturers were not ignorant fanatical footmen or coachmen, as in the Japanese case, no! they were the Government of Peru, who profess to treat as a civilized nation, on equal terms, with the great nations of the earth.

Will the arbitrator take, as ground work for the estimation of claimant's pecuniary demands, this case of Her Britannic Majesty's Government versus the Government of the Empire of Japan?

It may be well to here again revert to a case of simple imprisonment, which, in the case of an Englishman, occurred a short time since in London. This case clearly shows how such injustice is viewed and compensated for by an English jury.

The facts of the case are as follows:—

An English tradesman was, a short time since, accused of having illegally negotiated some "notes of hand." He was, in consequence, legally arrested and detained at the Mansion House, in London, a few hours. The following morning the matter was fully investigated before the Lord Mayor of London, and the prisoner was proved to be innocent. He brought an "action for damages" against the person by whom his detention had been caused. A jury of 12 Englishmen decided that the plaintiff was, for his few hours' detention, entitled to, as compensation, the sum of 1,000 l.

If the arbitrator was to take this verdict of 12 Englishmen—between two of their own countrymen—as the basis for adjudication on the wrongs of claimant, the arbitrator should find himself bound, in justice to one of the most injured of gentlemen, to award such damages to claimant as might deter even the very wealthy, very purse-proud, and very barbarous Government of Peru from again daring to so outrage justice, the laws, humanity, and public feeling.

It will be for the arbitrator to consider the application of those cases to claimant's.

PUBLIC OPINION.

THE arbitrator may be desirous of knowing what public opinion is regarding claimant's wrongs, and as he is most anxious to enable the arbitrator to fully understand this painful case, the following extracts are respectfully submitted from the mass of writings which have, from time to time, appeared in the French and British press, relative to the horrible conduct of the Peruvian Government towards Captain Melville White, claimant.

THE FRENCH AND BRITISH PRESS, TOUCHING THE CASE OF CAPTAIN MELVILLE WHITE.

"El Eco Hispano Americano," Paris, 16 August 1862.

"AN English naval officer, who has very grave and very just grounds of complaint against the Peruvian Government, has addressed to Lord Palmerston a note, which has been published and distributed to all the Members of both Houses of the British Parliament.

"This letter is only an abstract of a very interesting work which this officer is about to publish, in order to clearly lay before Europe the constant illegal and inhuman proceedings of the Peruvian Government towards foreigners.

"This case is too dreadful to fail to attract much public attention, and obtain the amplest atonement, at least, in the British Houses of Parliament.

"To this effect, in the House of Commons, on the 4th August (see the "Times" of the 5th), Mr. Jervis asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, if any steps had been taken to obtain from the Government of Peru satisfaction for the insults and tortures inflicted by them on Captain Melville White.

"Mr. Layard, thus interrogated, replied: 'That the treatment by the Peruvian Government of British subjects had been such as to call for the most grave remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

"The case referred to by the Honourable Member, was only an example of the unjustifiable proceedings which the Peruvian Government had taken with respect to Englishmen in Peru. Captain Melville White had been arrested, thrown into prison, treated in the most barbarous manner, refused a statement of the charges against him, and suddenly sent out of the country. He was now preparing a statement of his case, which, as soon as it was received at the Foreign Office, should be acted upon by the Government, and redress demanded for Captain Melville White.

"This case was most serious, and the House might rest assured that Her Majesty's Government would insist on full reparation."

"These frank and energetic declarations of Mr. Layard were received with great marks of favour by the House.

"On the other hand, it cannot escape the penetration of anyone that these scandalous injustices have been committed by the Peruvian Government almost immediately after they had realized in London a loan of millions of dollars. It is thus that the Government of Peru solicits, seeks, and makes good the gold of England in London, which does not, nevertheless, prevent them from maltreating British subjects in Peru.

"In presence of all these acts, it is impossible that Europe can omit becoming acquainted with, and attending to the scandalous inhumanities of the Peruvian Government, whose capital, Lima, is the focus of constant conspiracies against the European powers. It is impossible soon to forget the offers of money and men which General Castilla recently made to the Government of Juarez, in Mexico, against France.

"It is not surprising that the Peruvian Government never responded to the well-founded claims of the European powers, except by evasions.

"But, without doubt, a day must soon arrive in which Europe will settle with Peru in the most severe manner.

"The guarantees given in the British House of Commons, in the name of the British Cabinet, by Mr. Layard, gives us the well-founded hope that such measures will soon be realised.

"From the words of the British Secretary of State, it is quite evident that the infamous conduct of the Government of General Castilla towards foreigners, must occasion the most grave consequences to the Peruvian Government, if they do not at once renounce their deplorable traditional policy."

"The Illustrated London News," 16 May 1863.

"ECHOES OF THE WEEK.—Ships coming home from foreign parts have frequently, among other passengers, persons described as 'distressed British seamen;' but Parliament is just now besieged by a number of 'outraged British subjects,' claiming redress for their scandalous treatment from foreign Governments. After Don Pacifico and his broken cups and saucers, the British public grew sceptical as to the injuries sustained by gentlemen whose British nationality was, to say the least, problematical; and this unwillingness to listen to complaints has often been the means of a grave failure in justice. The poor Baron De Bode has not got his claims settled yet, though Committee after Committee of the House of Commons have decided in his favour. One case, however, has recently occurred, in which we trust ample compensation to the sufferer will be exacted by the British Government. The history of Captain Melville White, who was arrested in Lima, in Peru, on a perfectly false charge, flung into a loathsome dungeon in the old prison of the Inquisition, half starved, insulted, and at last banished the Peruvian territory, has just been brought before the Legislature."

The London "Punch," 16 May 1863.

"It appears from a question asked the other evening by Colonel Dunne, in the House of Commons, that Captain Melville White, a British subject, has been treated with gross cruelty by the Peruvian Government, in having been arrested on a frivolous and unfounded charge, cast into prison, and subjected to brutal violence at the hands of soldiery and ruffianry, for which the Peruvian courts of justice, comically so called, denied him redress. Captain Melville White, the plaintiff, had sent in a bill to the Foreign Office against the Government of Peru for 292,174*l.* The case is a bad one, and is clearly one for the amplest compensation. But should he succeed in getting only so much of the amount of compensation claimed by him as shall be awarded to him by the arbitration, which the Foreign Office proposes, his allowance will doubtless rise to a very heavy one."

The "Rotherham Advertiser," Saturday, 16 May 1863.

"Captain Melville White, who was thrown into prison in Peru by order of the authorities there, and barbarously treated, has published a statement of his wrongs, and the sum to be demanded by the British Government as compensation. The statement is addressed to Earl Russell, and, together with some correspondence on the subject, occupies 19 folio pages. Captain Melville White rests the justice of his demand for damages (292,174*l.*) on the ground that the French Government demanded, and obtained from the Peruvian Government, the sum of 4,000*l.* as compensation for 20 days' imprisonment of a Frenchman named Zuderel; and 1,600*l.* for two blows with the fist on another Frenchman named Rosé. Captain Melville White was imprisoned 9 months and 17 days, and during that time was most brutally treated, and then hurried out of the country. The British Consul at Callao did not make the slightest effort to procure any amelioration of Captain Melville White's sufferings.

"British Press and Jersey Times," Wednesday Evening, 20 May 1863.

"In the House of Commons, a few days ago, an episode in the proceedings arose out of an explanation given by Mr. Layard, Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs. Being interrogated by Colonel Dunne upon the case of Captain Melville White, which had been the subject of inquiry at the end of last Session, Mr. Layard stated that the gallant gentleman had claimed compensation in damages from the Peruvian Government in the sum of 292,174*l*. The picture presents a most serious appearance. The facts Captain Melville White states are evidently unimpeachable; and they disclose a case of cruelty and injustice on the part of the Peruvian authorities, and, what is still more extraordinary, one of criminal apathy on the part of the British Foreign Office and its representatives.

"Captain Melville White was arrested, in Callao, on the 23d of March 1861, falsely charged with having, on the 25th of July 1860, attempted to assassinate a Peruvian official, named General Castilla. He was ignominiously driven through the streets and thrust into the calaboose in that seaport, and from thence, loaded with fetters, transferred to a prison at Lima. It is admitted that it was very speedily known that Captain Melville White was innocent of the crime imputed to him, as he was at Tecna, 1,000 miles distant from Lima, on the day on which he was supposed to have there fired at the Peruvian General. After Captain Melville White had been in solitary confinement for several days, he wrote to Mr. John Barton, the British Consul, who seems to have paid but little attention to him during the period of his confinement. His position becoming known, naturally excited some sympathy amongst the English residents in Lima, and after great difficulty, a Mr. Carvell obtained admission to the dungeon in which Captain Melville White was confined. This Mr. Carvell refers to the condition of the prisoner as follows: 'I can describe the cell and the prisoner's occupation on my being admitted to him. A dungeon, seven feet by nine, damp stone walls, a wet stone floor; not an article of furniture of any kind, save a rusty iron pan, alongside of which was Melville White on his knees, eating with his fingers the dirty-looking rice it contained. This pan was absolutely the only article in the cell. Melville White was haggard, wan, and labouring under an excitement, from which he was relieved at last by a passionate flood of tears. The cell in which he had been first confined baffles description. We at once went to purchase a bedstead, bedding, chairs, a table, a lamp, and such other articles of necessity as could render his situation more endurable.' The same witness also deposes, that four or five weeks after Captain Melville White's arrest, his innocence was established, but notwithstanding, he was kept in prison nearly nine months longer. Every possible effort was made to convict him, in order to cover the enormity of the first offence, and to justify the cruelty inflicted upon him. When these efforts proved futile, and his innocence was recognized, the climax of these proceedings was reached in his condemnation to perpetual banishment from the Peruvian territory. The ameliorations that were made in his condition during his incarceration were due, not to the interference of the British Consul, but to the active benevolence exerted in his favour by Monsieur de Lesseps!

"British respect for law at home and abroad is shared in by the Government. There is never a disposition on their part to depart from strict international usage, and it cannot be expected that accused Englishmen, by the active interposition of their Government, shall be placed in a position exceptionally superior to any native of the country placed in similar circumstances; but British subjects, all over the world, have a right to expect and to demand, at least before trial and conviction, that they shall not be placed in such a life-destroying dungeon as that in which our gallant countryman was confined. If the British Consul had done his duty, Captain Melville White should not have remained incarcerated for 24 hours in this horrid cell, in which another Englishman, James Edwards, died, after an imprisonment of 72 hours. By the Peruvian code, the extreme period fixed for the full investigation and decision of such cases as Captain Melville White's, is 60 days. Some four or five weeks after his arrest, the innocence of Captain Melville White was generally known in Lima. Yet these two facts, well known to the British Consul, were not allowed to have their legitimate influence upon his action. If the British Consul had done his duty, he should at least have insisted upon the release of Captain Melville White at the end of the 60 or 80 days prescribed by the Peruvian law for the investigation and determination of such a case; but, instead of that being done, Captain Melville White was allowed to languish 'in the foul dens of the worst of Peruvian assassins' for the monstrous period of 9 months and 17 days. Even when released, by foreign intervention, from this unjust and cruel imprisonment, he was insulted by the decree of the Peruvian Government, condemning him to perpetual banishment from the Peruvian territory.

"This unmerited suffering has resulted in great pain of mind and body to a gallant sailor, who, as a volunteer, at his own expense, commanded a detachment of the Naval Brigade, and in assisting General Sherer, at Sulpigore, during the Indian Mutiny, in 1857-58, rendered good service to his Queen and country. His health is broken down, his sight irreparably impaired, and his prospects of fortune blasted by the combined cruelty and apathy of the Peruvian and the Home Governments. Earl Russell's slowness to move in the matter can only be accounted for upon the supposition that he was not well advised by the British Consul then at Lima. But the Government must be held responsible for the acts of their representatives; and now that Captain Melville White has given to the world the full details of his case, we trust some independent Member of the House of Commons will bring the subject fairly before that assembly. With regard to the claim for compensation, the sum of 4,500 l. mentioned by the Government is ridiculously inadequate for the wrongs done to Captain Melville White in his person and property. That subject, however, has properly been made the subject of arbitration, and we may hope that substantial compensation will be awarded. The conduct attributed to Consul John Barton should be made the subject of a vote of censure, in order to the due protection of British citizens in remote parts of the world."

"The Jersey Independent and Daily Telegraph," Thursday, 21 May 1863.

"We have a grave charge to make against our Government: that of ignoring, almost, the claims of a British subject, who has been most cruelly and unjustly used by the Peruvian Government. Everybody is by this time familiar with the case of Captain Melville White, the Englishman consigned to prison in Lima by the Peruvian authorities on a most trumpery and unfounded charge, who was seized in Callao, brutally beaten, cast into a dreadful calaboose in that town, 'within hail of the British Consulate,' and afterwards consigned to the Inquisition in Lima, loaded with fetters. For 9 months and 17 days was this grossly ill-used man confined in that horrible Peruvian den, and that after it had been clearly shown that he was thoroughly innocent of the charges made against him. Many accounts of his brutal arrest and deathly incarceration have appeared in the columns of English newspapers, but the following extracts from a pamphlet published in London by a Mr. Carvell (who, as will be seen, has also had bitter occasion to complain of the Peruvian Government), will afford our readers the most forcible picture of the loathsome den in which Captain Melville White was confined.

"This man, Carvell, in his pamphlet, says:—

"Thomas Melville White, a British subject, was seized in Callao, there brutally handled, taken thence to Lima, and thrown into the ancient prison of the Inquisition, where he remained incommunicado for several days. By some stratagem he contrived, however, to communicate his position to some one outside; and although things of this kind were of such frequent occurrence that people had learned to regard them with apathetic indifference, the knowledge that a British subject was confined in that loathsome den created some indignation among his countrymen residing in Lima. On learning the rumours afloat, I resolved to ascertain particulars. I went with a friend to the prison, but was refused admittance, the only reply to our inquiries being, that they must be addressed to Judge Ponce. We left our cards, desiring they should be given to the Englishman confined within the walls. After innumerable difficulties, we finally obtained, through the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, an order to see our countryman. When Judge Ponce found he could no longer keep the prisoner incommunicado, i. e. in solitary confinement, he permitted his removal to a cell less filthy than the one in which he had first been placed; but even this was the most horrible it has ever been my lot to behold. Human life must be counted by hours in such a place. In that cell another Englishman, James Edwards, was murdered; and there, too, was I doomed subsequently to be sent by Judge Gamboa. Yet, in the face of the well-known fact that Melville White had been lodged for days in this loathsome den, the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, in a Despatch to the British Minister, rebutted the charge of ill-treatment of Melville White, boldly asserted that, when first imprisoned, he was placed in 'a large airy apartment, and supplied with everything necessary to his comfort.' I can describe the cell and the prisoner's occupation on my being admitted to him:—

"A dungeon, seven feet by nine, damp stone walls, a wet stone floor; not an article of furniture of any kind, save a rusty iron pan, alongside of which was Melville White, on his knees, eating with his fingers the dirty-looking rice it contained; this pan was absolutely the only article in the cell. Melville White was haggard, wan, and labouring under an excitement, from which he was relieved at last by a passionate flood of tears.

"The cell in which he had first been confined baffles description.

"We at once went to purchase a bedstead, bedding, chairs, a table, a lamp, and such other articles as could render his situation more endurable.

"Notwithstanding these facts, of which there is ample proof, the Peruvian Minister made the assertion above-mentioned.

"Some four or five weeks after the arrest of Melville White, a Peruvian official came to me one evening privately, and stated that information had that day been received from Tacna, that Melville White was there on the day he was charged with firing at General Castilla; that the Government was annoyed, and fearful of getting into trouble, in consequence of the infamous manner in which an innocent man had been treated. On my remarking that he would of course be at once released, and adequately compensated for the sufferings he had endured, my informant replied that the Government, on the receipt of the intelligence proving the innocence of the accused, had resolved to convict him, coute que coute, as the safest way of getting out of the difficulty. Will it be credited in civilized England that this man was actually kept in prison nine months longer! All their efforts to convict him having proved futile, he was, notwithstanding the recognition of his innocence, condemned by a decree of the Peruvian Government to perpetual banishment from the Peruvian territory. In Lima no one ever questioned Melville White's innocence.

"The other victim I have mentioned, James Edwards, succumbed in 72 hours to the horrors of the cell in which Melville White was first confined.

"Her Majesty's Government, being informed of the extraordinary proceedings of Judge

Judge Ponce, in a despatch to Lima, pronounced his conduct 'scandalous,' and expressed a hope that it would lead to his disgrace. So far from Judge Ponce being disgraced, he became a greater favourite than ever with the Peruvian Executive, and the medium through which they vented their spleen on any of my unfortunate countrymen who had incurred their displeasure. He succeeded in murdering James Edwards in 72 hours, and also in nearly murdering Captain Melville White, whose naturally strong constitution enabled him to bear up against cruelty and suffering until rescued from impending death by Monsieur De Lesseps.

"The perusal of the above extract from this Mr. Carvell's pamphlet is enough to make an Englishman's cheeks flush with shame. To think that after Melville White had been proved innocent of the charge brought against him of firing at General Castilla, these Peruvian rascals had the insolence to think of convicting him by way of 'getting out of the difficulty'! And, again, the consignment of the poor fellow to that beastly hole of a dungeon! Happily, his constitution, naturally good, and hardened by his profession, was able to withstand that which had proved so fatal to James Edwards. We, who have not seen the dark dungeons of Naples, can but dimly imagine a place that could destroy life in the awfully brief space of seventy-two hours. And who was it that rescued our countryman from his loathsome dungeon? The captain and crew of a British man-of-war, said man-of-war within pistol-range of the shore. The British Consul, the functionary appointed by our Government to protect to the uttermost the lives and property of Her Majesty's subjects? No! thanks to the boldness and promptitude of an ungrammatical drunken Consul in Peru, the 'rescue from impending death' of Captain Melville White was left to the hands of a Frenchman, Monsieur de Lesseps! There was a time when England's name was so feared abroad that such a pitiful power as Peru would not have dared so much as to lift a hand against a British subject. Then British Consuls were formed of stuff other than that which goes to make up such illiterate rowdies as Mr John Barton, late Her Majesty's Consul in Lima.

"Captain Melville White, after having been bruised, imprisoned, and insulted by the Peruvian Government, comes here and begs, through the once powerful British Government, for compensation. He comes with a broken constitution and damaged prospects; he comes with the bitter reflection that a villanous Government have robbed him of some of the best years of his existence. Of course it is hard to say how much shall be paid by the Peruvian Government for the injuries inflicted by them upon Melville White; he has set his 'compensation' at a high figure, and he has precedents to support him. A Frenchman named Zuderel received from this same Government, for simple imprisonment, 200 l. a-day, for 20 days; and Captain Melville White very logically says, 'Had he been imprisoned as I was (9 months and 17 days) he should have had to receive, at this rate, 58,4000 l.' Another Frenchman, named Rosé, a cooper, was paid, in compensation for two blows with the fist, 20,000 francs. It may fairly be assumed that no amount of money, no fabulous sum, would adequately compensate Captain Melville White for the cruel injuries he has received. The point to be reached in his case is (as it was in the cases of the two Frenchmen) to make the Peruvians feel that they shall have to pay dearly for their unholy fun; that they may learn to respect the lives and liberties of British subjects in future. Captain Melville White sends in his bill to the Peruvian Government for 292,174 l., and he deserves to have this sum, large as it is, to the uttermost penny. Even 'Punch' acknowledges the justice of Captain Melville White's claims for compensation for having 'been treated with gross cruelty by the Peruvian Government, in having been arrested on a frivolous and unfounded charge, cast into prison, and subjected to brutal violence at the hands of soldiery and ruffianry, for which the Peruvian courts of justice, comically so called, denied him redress.'

"And Earl Russell and the law adviser of the Crown professed to think 4,500 l. a sum large enough to compensate Captain Melville White. We wonder how Her Majesty's Government can offer such a paltry sum of money to a man who rendered the State such efficient service, during that deplorable Indian Mutiny; going all the way from England, at his own expense, and training the Naval Brigade, and bringing it to the assistance of one of the brave officers of that bloody time, just at the very moment it was required. Of that act of Captain Melville White's career, Major General Sherer, who commanded at Julpigoree during the Mutiny of 1857-8, has gratefully and warmly spoken, as well as others of the Indian officers.

"Captain Melville White has borne himself throughout life as a brave and honourable Briton ought: it seems hard that he should be brought at last to sue, in formâ pauperis, of the British Government for his bare rights.

"There is a wide deficiency between 292,174 l. and 4,500 l. we admit; but, after a careful examination of Captain Melville White's case, we feel firmly persuaded that the amount of his compensation should approximate more to the first-named sum than the latter."

"The Banffshire Reporter," Saturday, 30 May 1863.

"The Case of Captain Melville White.

"A week or two since, in the House of Commons, were read the various claims for compensation made by Captain Melville White against the Peruvian Government, for false imprisonment for a crime of which he was proved to be perfectly innocent, and for maltreatment and injury to his health, through the brutal usage he was subjected to. Not a few of the claims did seem large; and, in the aggregate they amounted to 200,000 l. or 300,000 l.; but the claimant, who served as a volunteer, and held a command in the Naval Brigade, during the suppression of the Indian Mutiny, and produces high testimonials from superior officers, has addressed a very strong letter to Earl Russell, in which he shows that the treatment to which he was subjected was of the most barbarous kind, and that the claims he makes are not larger than had been enforced by the French Government for similar treatment of French subjects of less rank. He is particularly severe upon the conduct displayed by Mr. John Barton, who at the time was British Consul at Lima, and who seems to have been better cut out for pandering to the Peruvian officials than for affording protection to Her Majesty's subjects, and altogether unfit for his post. In Captain Melville White's pamphlet, copies of which he has sent to the public press, there is a very full exposure of that unscrupulous tyranny and disregard for justice, which have ever been the characteristics of the petty despots, who are one day beggars or brigands, and another day the chiefs of some of those half caste communities styled republics, which have been, and still are, the curse of South America."

"The Spectator," London, 30 May 1863.

"The case of Captain Melville White, whose treatment by the Peruvian Government was too disgusting and horrible for us to detail, will be brought before the House of Commons next week. This gentleman, who is well known to high Indian officials, and has strong testimonials from many of them, amongst others from Sir F. Haliday, the late Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, for his services during the Mutiny, was seized on the 23d March 1861, on the pier at Callao, and imprisoned for 9 months and 17 days, without a trial of any kind, under a charge which the Peruvian Government have confessed to be wholly groundless. He was not only causelessly confined during this time, but wounded and pricked with bayonets, imprisoned in the foulest and most loathsome places, obliged to lie down among human excrements, kept without food for days together, and all without any exertion on the part of the English Consul, Mr. John Barton, who certainly seems to have done absolutely less than the French Chargé d'Affaires to vindicate the honour of the English flag. None of the circumstances of the case appear to be either disputable or disputed, and the only question that can arise will concern the amount of compensation to be demanded. Consider that Captain Melville White lost a most valuable contract given to him by the Ecuadorian Government, the net profit of which he estimated at 20,000 l., by this infamous treatment, besides losing his health and his eyesight. Such injuries are exciting; but the French Government have demanded as much as 200 l. per diem compensation for the unjust imprisonment of a French subject, Zuderel, during only 20 days; and another, a cooper, Rosé, was handsomely compensated by 1,600 l. for two blows with the fist. At this rate, Captain Melville White's compensation should certainly be enormous; and though our Government will scarcely be willing to take French exactions as their model, it would be a premium on crime to let the Peruvian Government off for their intentional wickedness for such a sum as that."

"Bell's Weekly Messenger," London, 8 August 1863.

"We have now the papers which have been laid before Parliament respecting Captain Melville White's case, which Mr. Layard acknowledges to have been 'one of the worst ever brought to his knowledge.'"

"Captain Melville White is a man who deserves well of his fellow-subjects. At his own expense he went to India during the mutiny there, and trained the Naval Brigade as a volunteer; of his usefulness in this unpaid-for service he has abundant testimonials. Subsequently, visiting Peru on business, which bade fair to have been extremely profitable, he was accused of firing at Grand Marshal Castilla, in the streets of Lima, and wounding him in the arm. Captain Melville White was, fortunately, at the time the marshal was wounded, more than 1,000 miles away from Lima. The Peruvian Government have confessed this fact; it is satisfactorily shown that they knew it at the time; and they have further confessed that they had no charge whatever to make against him; and yet they allowed their victim to be imprisoned for 10 months, beaten, wounded with bayonets, and kept in a cell, seven feet by nine, totally destitute of furniture, unless an iron pan used to contain boiled rice may be so designated. The injury to his health through such treatment may be easily imagined, and the only wonder is that he escaped with life. All this time the Peruvian Government assured the English Consul that Captain Melville White was detained in an 'airy and commodious apartment, and supplied with everything that could conduce to his comfort.' When Mr. Barton, the British Consul, was asked why he did not interfere, he replied that he dared not do so until after he had reported the case at home, and received instructions from the British Foreign Minister. The O'Gorman Mahon interfered, and through his determined energy Captain Melville White was released. Now came the question of compensation. The French Government exacted 200 l. per day for a French peasant similarly treated, and for other Frenchmen in due proportion to their rank; but then, luckily for them, the French have a Napoleon to look to. In the case of Captain Melville White, the Foreign Office suggested 4,500 l.; and when that paltry sum was indignantly refused, the case was committed to the arbitration of the Senate of Hamburg! While the matter is thus under discussion, let us remember that there have been several instances of British subjects tortured, imprisoned, and murdered (the word is not too strong) by the Peruvian Government. If, therefore, we are to have British commerce and British interests interests protected at all, such a Government as that of Peru ought to be made to feel that British subjects are as much cared for by the authorities at home as those of Napoleon III.; and that if they are incarcerated, tortured, and slain, the pastime, however exciting, is one which will cost dear to those who indulge in it."

"The Dorset County Chronicle," 20 August 1863.

"It was certainly the greatest boast of ancient Rome that the simple words 'I am a Roman citizen' ('Civis Romanus sum') was, under almost all possible complication of circumstances, a safeguard to him who was qualified to use them. Rome had many faults; she was not always grateful to her best and bravest sons; but she always knew that the slightest insult offered to her humblest citizen was an injury to her whole state, and that no state was so mighty and no monarch so magnificent as to be permitted with impunity to indulge in such an offence. This was her traditional policy, learned under her republican institutions, and retained when those institutions had crumbled away under the heavy blows of Cæsar and his imperior successors. The Apostle Paul could make the magistrates of a far-off land tremble at their misdoings by simply reminding them of his political rights; and it stands clear before us that Nero himself, tyrant and madman as he was, would have permitted no infraction of these grand and majestic privileges. The only nation which at this moment stands in a similarly proud position is that which has a Napoleon on the throne.

"French subjects may and do enjoy, whatever they may say to the contrary, far less liberty than we do on this side of the Channel; but the honour and dignity of the nation is far more ably and spiritedly maintained, and the rights of individual French subjects in foreign lands far more universally and more successfully vindicated. In the short narrative which we are about to lay before our readers it will be shown how differently the wrongs of a French subject are viewed in Paris and those of an English subject at our Foreign Office, and in what manner the Ministries of the two countries treat other countries who outrage those under their respective protection. We do not take the civilization of Peru as worth much (it is many degrees lower than it was in the time of the Incas), but still, as it claims to be a civilized nation, and affects to treat on equal terms with England and France, it must be held to its good behaviour, and made to understand the rules of international intercourse.

"We all know that the normal state of Peru is one of tumult and civil war; their almanacs cannot publish the names of president and ministry, because these generally depend on a guerilla warfare going on at the time; but among the many soldiers of fortune who have lately held the reins of power in that most unhappy country, Don Ramon Castilla stands pre-eminent for unpopularity. In the year 1860 this hero, walking in the streets of Lima, was made the mark for a pistol-shot, and wounded in the arm. The man who fired the shot was known, and it would not have been difficult to bring him to justice; but nobody took any interest in the matter. Castilla, however, was extremely desirous of concealing his want of popularity, and considered it better to allow the attempted murderer to escape than to have it supposed that any native Peruvian sought his life. But, though deliberately making this choice he still felt, with the old English constable, that a great crime had been intended, and that it was necessary to make an example of somebody. Hang the right man if you can, but at all events let some victim be selected. In this case Don Ramon did not desire the real criminal to suffer, but the Peruvian Government were resolved on severity. Casting about for a proper person on whom to exercise it, they came to the conclusion that a British subject would be the safest. The relations between Great Britain and Peru had assumed a very quiet, easy-going aspect. The justice and dignity of the Republic must be vindicated; Don Ramon Castilla must have satisfaction; and it would be generally understood that if anybody shot at him, somebody would be severely punished for it. The gentleman on whom the choice of the Government fell, to be the vicarious sacrifice in this case, was Captain Melville White, a man well known in India as having at his own expense gone to that country, in the time of the mutiny, and drilled as a volunteer the Naval Brigade. He was in Peru on commercial business, and in a fair way of realising a large fortune. Now Captain Melville White had the evidence of the Peruvian Government's own witnesses and spies that on the day when the shot was fired he was at Tacna, which is rather more than a thousand miles from Lima; and this might have been considered as a fortunate circumstance, and would have been so anywhere but in Peru; as it was, the evident innocence of Captain Melville White was no small disadvantage to him. The Peruvian Government confess that he was apprehended without any reason; 'that they had not the slightest ground for believing him guilty,' and consequently did not bring him to trial. He was, however, dragged through the streets of Lima, repeatedly knocked down, severely beaten, wounded in many places with a bayonet, and at last thrust into a loathsome dungeon seven feet by nine, totally destitute of furniture, unless an iron pan be so designated. Here he was fed with boiled rice mixed with dirt and hair, not permitted for a long time to see any friends, and, in fine, his captivity lasted 10 months! The result of this was that all his commercial prospects were blighted, his health miserably shattered, and his sight greatly impaired. In that dungeon he would have remained till his death, but for the exertions of The O'Gorman Mahon, who, happily for Captain Melville White, chanced to be travelling in Peru at the time. He interfered, and did the duty of a British Minister; and finally succeeded in opening the doors of the prison, and setting free a most injured and oppressed man. But had we no Minister at Lima? Oh yes, we had, and he allowed Captain Melville White to remain in prison while he sent over to England for instructions how to act! Mr. John Barton, that is the individual's name, stated that he dared not demand the release of a British subject under such circumstances. Now, let us turn to the French case. A mere peasant boy, named Zuderel, was seized upon by this same Peruvian Government; his release was at once demanded by the French Minister, and refused. He sent to France for instructions, and the reply came in the shape of a line-of-battle ship and three frigates, with orders to fire on Callao if Zuderel were not released in 24 hours, and 200*l.* per day paid to him for his unjust incarceration. We hardly require to be told that French subjects are safe all over Peru, and that when the French Minister makes his appearance at the prison, the guards turn out and present arms; while they pointed at Mr. Barton with their cigars, and said 'Ah! he is only the English Minister.' This is not the only instance in which such a difference might be observed. It is not too strong a term to use if we say that two other Englishmen have been treated by the Peruvian Government in a way similar to Captain Melville White, and have been murdered, because they had not the strength of constitution to bear up under what nearly killed him. It is probable that we should have had Captain Melville White's case hushed up as many others have been, but for his own admirable energy; the energy of The O'Gorman Mahon; and Mr. Layard, who declared in his place in the House of Commons, that the case was 'one of the worst that had ever come to his knowledge.' As it is, the case is referred to the arbitration of the Senate of Hamburg, and thus for the present the matter rests. It is one in which every Englishman who travels is deeply concerned."

The foregoing judgments of the press on claimant's life and tortures may prove of interest to the Arbitrator, as may also the following analysis of the Expediente, to which the Arbitrator's attention is respectfully, but particularly requested. A duly translated and legalised copy of the Expediente accompanies these claims.

This Expediente (Process) is the document for which the Peruvian Government, after having for 10 months infamously tortured claimant, compelled him to pay 20*l.*, which sum he was obliged to pay in order to ascertain the nature of the charge which had been preferred against him. The careful perusal by the Arbitrator of this Peruvian state document cannot prove otherwise than deeply instructive.

ABSTRACT OF THE EXPEDIENTE (PROCESS).

Page 140 (13 January 1862). The Arbitrator will find claimant's petition of this date, three days after his liberation, asking permission from the courts to inspect the process which the Government inquisitorially formed against him.

Page 2 (15 January 1862) will be found to contain another petition of claimant's, dated five days after his liberation, begging of the court to furnish him with a copy of this inquisitorially formed process.

Page 3 (23 March 1861) contains a document from Nicholas Freire, Préfet of Callao, wherein he advises the Peruvian Government of claimant's seizure; asks what he shall do with claimant, and formally accuses claimant of being the assassin of President Castilla. This accusation is made, the Préfet states, by one Manuel Romero.

Page 5 (26 March 1861) contains a copy of the forged writing which Judge Ponce compelled claimant to sign, but under protest, in order to avoid additional torture.

Page 9 (27 March 1861) contains a copy of claimant's protest against this judge's conduct, to which protest no attention was given in claimant's behalf. It also contains the decree of Judge Ponce (28 March 1861), asking the Government to furnish him with all "the data relative to Melville White."

Page 12 (3 April 1861) contains a false statement of Judge Ponce's secretary, José Banda, touching claimant's refusal to take money from the police.

Page 13 (5 April 1861) contains a similar declaration from the gaoler, J. M. Carrillo. It also contains a declaration of equal tenor from Manuel Milan, a convict and sweeper of the prison.

Page 15 (5 April 1861) contains a declaration from Florentine Ollarzu to a similar effect. This man had just then terminated, as a convict, years of confinement in the Inquisition.

Page 17 (9 April 1861) contains the despatch of Manuel Morales (Peruvian Prime Minister), charging claimant with having attempted to murder President Castilla on the 25th July, 1860, in the streets of Lima, and instructing Judge Ponce to put himself in communication with David Douglas, "the German," and Manuel Romero (two notorious spies of the Government), who, the Minister states, shall "swear the criminality of Melville White"!

Page 20 (3 May 1861) contains the affidavit of H. Michael, purser of the steamer "Bolivia," the substance of which declaration is, that Mr. Michael "had seen the Irishman, Melville White, travelling in the steamers on the Pacific coast of South America for about a year and a-half.

Page 21 (3 May 1861) contains the deposition of Robert Hart, mate of the steamer "Bolivia." The substance of this declaration is, that Mr. Hart "had observed Melville White travelling by the various steamers plying on the Pacific coast of South America, sometimes as first-class and sometimes as second-class passenger, very rarely speaking to the officers of the ship or his fellow passengers." Mr. Hart also declares, that "he has not the remotest idea whether Melville White had or had not attempted the life of President Castilla."

Page 22 (3 May 1861) contains the affidavit of Andrew Wilson, steward of the steamer "Bolivia;" the substance of whose declaration is as follows: "He had seen Melville White travelling in the steamers on the Pacific for about a year, during which time he had seen him drink only two glasses of liquor, with two friends; deponent saw Melville White with gold coins; deponent does not know whether Melville White is possessed of a large fortune; deponent believes Melville White travels wholly for his own pleasure."

Page 26 (10 April 1861) contains the deposition of Manuel Romero, a near blood relative of President Castilla, declaring that Captain Thomas Melville White, if he was not the assassin of the President, had at least knowledge of the person who fired the shot."

This spy, Romero, appears from the process to be the principal witness of the Government; but he declares that he so swears because some other person told him that "Captain Melville White was a mysterious person."

Page 33 (11 April 1861) contains the deposition of Joseph Morales Bermudez, Préfect of the province of Arica, whose declaration being a very important one, is here given in extenso. On being sworn by the judge, Señor Bermudez was interrogated thus:—"State the causes which induced you to ask for an officer from the Port Captain's to take charge of, on the 18th March 1861, in the Port of Arica, Melville White, who was supposed to be the assassin of the President." Señor Bermudez replied, that "on the 18th of March, 1861, between noon and one o'clock, p.m., Mr. Manuel Romero, Commander of the Coast Guard, presented himself at the Préfecture, and stated that in the steamer "Bolivia" there was in transit an Englishman named Melville White, whom he knew, by more than sufficient data, to be the assassin of President Castilla, and was the party who knew all about the assassination."

Señor Bermudez being questioned touching his further reasons for thus making claimant a prisoner, replied:—

"In addition to a long account which Romero gave me of the movements of Melville White, both in this Republic as well as in the Republics of Bolivia and Chili, Romero presented to me a letter from President Castilla, in which he manifested the liveliest desire for discovering the whereabouts of Melville White."

Señor Bermudez being further asked by the judge "whether he had, prior to that date, ever heard anything spoken against Melville White," replied, that "up to the day mentioned, he had never heard anything said against Melville White."

Page 35 (11 April 1861) contains the depositions of Peter Joseph Carreno, Captain of the Port of Arica. The substance of this declaration is, that "Manuel Romero, Captain of the Coast Guard, went to deponent on the 18th March, 1861, and told him that, 'without any consideration or thought,' he desired officers to take into custody Melville White, who was going by the steamer, and whom, Romero told deponent, was the assassin of General Castilla."

"Asked, if before the 18th March, 1861, he had ever heard that Melville White, who was then on board the steamer, was the assassin of President Castilla?" He replied that "he had only the words of the commander of the coast guard (Romero) to that effect, and of no one else." That "he did not know Melville White"; and that "he only saw Melville White at the moment of the vessel's departure, when he was pointed out to deponent by the purser of the ship."

Page 37 (11 April 1861) contains the deposition of Charles Worm, a Dane. On being sworn, the judge asked him "whether he had known Melville White in the Port of Arica, in a state of poverty, trying to get up a subscription for himself?" He replied, that "he did not know whether Melville White endeavoured to raise a subscription or not; but he did know that he endeavoured to negotiate funds. He also knew, that on Melville White's departure from Arica he left a bill unpaid at his hotel, the amount of which bill he remitted immediately on the ship's touching at Islay."

"That he had met Melville White at Tacna about eight months previously, when he asked deponent what was going on in Arica."

"That he heard Melville White talk as though he had travelled throughout the world; and to the best of deponent's knowledge and belief, Melville White spoke truly; deponent believes he has travelled everywhere."

"That his principal acquaintance with Melville White was by sight only."

Page 38 (12 April 1861) contains the deposition of David Douglas, who calls himself a Scotchman, by trade a "woollen-yarn dyer." This individual is notorious as having been, for many years, the spy, the pimp, of General Castilla. This pimp is, after Romero, his confederate, the principal witness of the Peruvian Government. This man declares as follows:—

"I knew Melville White at Corocoro, Bolivia, living as a guest at the mansion of Mr. Thomas Pearson, an English merchant of high standing. I also saw Melville White at the house of Mr. Peter Cazo, of the same city. I told Romero that I thought Melville White was co-operating against General Castilla, with and in favour of General Echenique. I did not like Melville White; Melville White had a bill of exchange for 800 dollars, and another for 500 dollars, drawn in his favour on Mr. Michael Benavidez, of Tacna, by General Echenique, and President Linares. I believe Melville White to be the assassin of President Castilla, because Emetrio Maldonado told me that he believed Melville White to be the assassin. Melville White was a great friend of the President of the republic of Bolivia; and had, at all times, free access to the palace.

"I heard Melville White say repeatedly that he had been a Naval Captain in the service of the East India Company; that he had served in India during the late insurrection, and that he knew the languages of India.

"I doubted this, but I found him a well-informed man. I knew General Castilla well; he lodged in my house during his imprisonment in Bolivia, after the battle of Ingavi; since which time I have been in constant correspondence with him."

Page 43 (12 April 1861) contains the deposition of Mrs. Isabella Amie, hotel proprietress, at Arica, to the following effect:—

"I know Melville White; he has, during the last year, lodged on two occasions at my house; the last time, he left without settling his bill, but he sent me the amount from Islay, where the ship, in which he went, first touched. He resided a third time at my house in company with two ladies and a young gentleman, friends of his, in company with whom he was travelling. On this occasion I remarked that Melville White looked sad and thin."

Page 45 (13 April 1861) contains the deposition of John Williams, the keeper of a tap-room at Arica, and a great favourite of the Peruvian Government. This man has made a large fortune out of the misfortunes of unsuspecting European seamen. From a position very like that of a stable-boy, he has sprung into the more lucrative, though despicable one, of spy, even on poor hard-working seamen, to the Peruvian Government. This man swears:

"Carlito Peralto told me to receive from Melville White 1*l.* 5*s.*, which he owed to Mrs. Dorra.

"I know very little of Melville White, but I have heard him say that he was a captain in the East Indies.

"I have heard from Lima, only since Melville White's arrest, that he was the suspected assassin of President Castilla."

Page 48 (16 April 1861) contains the affidavit of Mrs. Isabella Palacios Dorra, hotel-keeper, at Tacna, who declares:

"Melville White lodged at my hotel on four occasions; I know him personally; he assured me that he was an Irishman and captain.

"On the 21st of July 1860, he came to reside at my hotel, and continued to reside at my house until the 28th of the same month, a week's stay.

"He showed in my house a great deal of affability, and his conduct was irreproachable.

"I do not know what was planned in my house by Douglas and Romero, ascribing to Melville White the assassination of President Castilla.

"Melville White used to occupy himself much in my house reading newspapers, and teaching my son the English language."

The arbitrator will perceive the important bearing which this deposition has on claimant's whole case.

Page 51 (16 April 1860) contains the deposition of Michael Benavidez, Consul at Tacna, for the Republic of Buenos Ayres, and one of the most influential merchants in Peru. In substance his declaration is thus:

"What David Douglas and Manuel Romero have sworn against Melville White, relative to his intercourse and pecuniary transactions with me and others is absolute perjury; I have never seen, spoken to, or even heard of Melville White heretofore."

Page 53 (17 April 1861) sets forth the declaration of Carlito Peralto, a farmer, who swears

"I know the Irishman, Melville White. What John Williams has sworn against him I know to be false. Melville White never owed me, and I never asked him for, any money whatsoever. Melville White used to visit a refreshment-room which I kept in Tacna; by this means I was enabled to know him.

"He told me that he was an Irishman, and had come from the old world to travel among the Indians in South America. I wanted to sell him a saddle for 40 dollars, and he declined purchasing it at that price.

"Louis Dorra told me that Melville White was an English captain, a great man, spoke various languages, and accompanied General Belzu to Europe."

Page 56 (18 April 1861) contains the affidavit of Louis Dorra, hotel-keeper, at whose house claimant resided whenever he was at Tacna, who swears:—

"All that my lawful wife Isabella Dorra has sworn respecting Melville White is true. I have nothing to add to her declaration; I never told Carliso Peralto that Melville White accompanied General Belzu to Europe; I did tell him that Melville White was a captain, and spoke many languages."

Page 57 (20 April 1861) contains the deposition of Patrick Dowling, merchant tailor, of Tacna, who swears:—

"I knew Captain Melville White, I used to work for him; he told me that he had served in India, supporting the power of the English; that the infirmities which he there contracted compelled him to retire in search of health.

"Melville White speaks fluently French, German, English, and even Latin. He has received a good education, and is both affable and cheerful.

"I have heard that Melville White is now lying in prison in Lima, accused of being the assassin of President Castilla.

"I have no motive for asserting or denying the accuracy of this charge, but from the character and noble sentiments which he has shown, I do not think him capable of committing so horrid a crime."

Page 60 (27 April 1861) contains the affidavit of Armando Louis Blondel, of Tacna, the most extensive mining merchant in Peru, who swears:

"I know Melville White personally. He has visited me repeatedly. I always observed the very best conduct and manners on his part. I became, in consequence, much interested in him, and introduced him to my partner. I know he is a British subject. I know not whether he is single or married. At the end of July 1860, Melville White visited me at my office at Tacna, solely for the purpose of paying his salutations. I do not know whether Melville White has ever been in friendly relations with General Echenique, late President of Peru, and President Linares of the Republic of Bolivia.

"I have lately learned that Melville White is accused by the Government of Peru of having attempted to assassinate General Castilla, on the 25th of July 1860, in the streets of Lima; but I have the very best of reasons for knowing that he could not be the author of that horrible attempt, for, as I have already stated in this declaration, Melville White presented himself at my house in Tacna, 1,000 miles distant from Lima, without any other object than that of paying his respects, at the end of last July, while the crime of which he is accused was committed on the 25th of the same month."

Page 65 (25 April 1861) contains a second deposition of the Peruvian spy, Samuel Francis Romero, near blood-relative of Castilla, wherein this spy swears:

"Mrs. Dorra must have made a mistake in swearing that Melville White was in Tacna on the 25th of July 1860, because I have sworn that it was in June that he was there."

Page 66 (25 April 1861) contains a second deposition of the pimp, David Douglas, a notorious spy of the Peruvian Government, a woollen-yarn dyer by trade, having a daughter at that moment, and for years previously living "under the protection" of the dissolute Castilla. This spy swears:

"I went on the 9th of last November to Mr. Patrick Dowling, to sound him about Melville White, who, Mr. Dowling told me, he considered a mysterious person. I told Mr. Dowling that was my opinion of Melville White."

Page 68 (29 April 1861) contains a second declaration from Mr. Patrick Dowling, who swears:

"I confirm, in all parts, my former declaration respecting the Irishman, Melville White.

"I said to Douglas that Melville White was mysterious, simply because he was such an enthusiastic traveller."

Page 70 (2 May 1861) contains a second deposition from Mrs. Isabella Palacios Dorra, proprietress of the hotel at which claimant invariably resided during his visits to Tacna. Mrs. Dorra swears:

"I wholly reiterate what I have heretofore deposed respecting Melville White. Melville White arrived at my hotel, 'Golden Lion,' in Tacna, on the 21st of July 1860, and remained at it until the 28th of the same month, when he took his departure for Bolivia, which facts are recorded in the books of my establishment, wherein are recorded the accounts of all my boarders, and the dates of their arrivals at, and departure from, my hotel.

Page 77 (16 May 1861) contains a despatch from Judge Ponce to the principal judge of Callao, instructing him to "discover all the movements of Melville White, the British subject, believed to be, and accused of being the person who, on the 25th of July 1860, attempted to assassinate President Castilla, in Lima"; and that "Melville White has been, before the 23d March 1861, imprisoned in Callao."

Pages 75, 76 (various dates, from the 25th to the 28th May 1861, inclusive) contain despatches from all the judges of Callao, saying:

"We know nothing whatever about Melville White.

"We have never issued any order of arrest against Melville White.

"There is not any record in our books of Melville White ever having been imprisoned in Callao."

Page 76 (29 May 1861) contains some slight notice of claimant's protests to Judge Ponce, against the atrocious acts of this judge and his Government against claimant. Claimant is here represented as having on that occasion addressed Judge Ponce thus:—

"I protest against the treatment and judgments that I am suffering, against my imprisonment, and against all the proceedings taken against me."

Page 78 (28 June 1861). Judge Ponce, in a despatch to the Judge of Arica, charges:

"In the name of the nation, Melville White with having tried to assassinate General Castilla, on the 25th July 1860, in the streets of Lima."

Page 99 (26 June 1861) contains the deposition of James Brain, of Iquique, by occupation a huckster, who swears:

"I made, in October 1860, a passage from Iquique to Callao.

"I saw, in the port of Islay, Melville White come from aboard the ship "Respigadera," on board the steamer "Bolivia," in which I was at the time travelling.

"I, being an Englishman, put to him, as a countryman of mine, some questions, to which he did not reply. He simply said he was going to Callao.

"Melville White was negligently attired whenever he appeared on deck, and I did not see any luggage with him.

"During the whole voyage he occupied himself in reading a book.

"I became very curious to know who this individual was, so retired from everybody, and whether he was known on board the steamer.

"With this object, I questioned several persons on board the steamer, who told me that they knew Melville, but that they did not know his occupation; that he was constantly travelling in the steamers on the Pacific; and the steward of the steamer told me that 'Melville White was suspected of being a spy of the English Government.'

"On arrival at Callao, I saw two decently dressed ladies shake hands with Melville, and salute him with much affection. I then became occupied in looking at a vessel, and I saw no more of Melville White or the two ladies.

"About two hours afterwards, I met the two ladies and Melville White, dressed as when on board the steamer. He was carrying a bag with silver or gold, but I do not know the contents of either metal. I cannot remember whether it was on the same day or in the afternoon that I saw Melville in Macaderes-street, Lima, when I said to him, in English, 'Good afternoon!' He did not reply, at which I was much surprised. He was elegantly dressed.

"I saw Melville White the following day in Callao. He was dressed in the same clothes which he wore during the passage on board the steamer.

"I embarked, and returned to Iquique, and saw no more of Melville White until he came down in the same steamer, "Bolivia," in which same steamer also travelled General Echenique."

The Peruvian Government, in their infamous machinations against claimant, relied much on the foregoing statements of the man Brain, the huckster, whom they well paid for it, no doubt. It is so peculiar an official document, that claimant could not refrain from here inserting it, in extenso, for the consideration of the arbitrator.

Page 102 (8 August 1861) contains a despatch of an Attorney General, a man named John Portal, commanding that "An order of arrest be issued against Melville White." Claimant had been at that time nearly five months in the dungeons!

Page 106 (20 August 1861) contains what Judge Ponce calls "Confession of Melville White." This confession may be of importance to the arbitrator; it is therefore given here, as recorded in the Peruvian State Documents, as having been uttered by claimant to Judge Ponce. Claimant says:

"I protest against the acts of the Peruvian Government towards me as diabolical. I protest against the brutal tortures to which I have been, by the Peruvian Government, subjected for the last five months. I protest against the gross inhumanity of keeping me for several days without food.

"I demand that I be immediately furnished with documentary and other information touching the pretexts upon which I have been consigned to these dungeons, I thus demand, in conformity with my written petition of the 20th of July last, illegally and unjustly rejected by Judge Ponce. I again most solemnly protest against all the horrible proceedings of which the Peruvian Government have made me the victim, from the moment of my seizure, at the points of bayonets, on the quay at Callao, on the 23d of March 1861, until forced before unknown inquisitors, in the chapel of this establishment, and by means of a guard of armed soldiers, compelled to sign a false document, under the most detestable threats, notwithstanding my repeated verbal protests against such acts.

"Finally, I protest firmly and solemnly against the utterly barbarous course that the Peruvian Government and their agents have doomed me, innocent of crime, to undergo."

Page 139 (28th August 1861) contains the accusations against claimant of an Attorney General of the Peruvian Government, a man named John Portal. This accusation is here given verbatim, and is as follows:—

“The Attorney General, accusing Thomas Melville White, says: That, on the 23d of March last, the Supreme Government had notice and vehement suspicions that the accused had been the author of the crime perpetrated on the night of the 25th of July 1860.

“It is not so difficult that such an imputation should be believed, when it was clearly stated that Don Manuel Romero is formally informed that the said Melville is the assassin of His Excellency General Castilla. Opening the proceedings at whatever of its pages, it is noticeable, on perusal, that that mysterious man, as his countrymen the Scotchman, Don David Douglas, calls him, had wandered about the coast and centre of the Republic for more than a year without having any office nor any known object in his multifarious voyages to Bolivia, with which place we were in hostilities. He could not have any commerce or business as regards the attainment of any scientific or pecuniary result, nor did his idle and poor life afford any guarantees of any kind for raising in his favour any hand protective of his totally unknown projects.

“Without any fixed residence, recommendations, or any honourable antecedents known in the country, it is not possible that any foreigner of errant life and unknown customs, should inspire the slightest confidence among people whose institutions are for their own security. Sufficient reasons, therefore, have those of the Government not to admit into their dominions any save persons who have some employment, or impart or bring in productive capital. Melville says he is a sailor of high rank, notwithstanding we see him devoted to wandering sad and poorly through the coast and deserts of our territories, undergoing the greatest vexations and privations, and committing faults unworthy of persons jealous of their reputation; travelling on credit; leaving debts at every place he crosses, and attacking capitalists with requests that are denied to him; living incognito, and only issuing from his retirement to speak against the present state of political affairs.

“He comes to and goes from this capital in different attitudes, and his means of subsistence it is impossible to ascertain. He does not prove where he was on the 25th day of July 1860, and the authorities of the South became alarmed at him when, after that catastrophe, they saw him make his appearance again on those shores, believing him capable of such an attempt, from the words that they had heard him utter beforehand at the hotel of Mrs. Dorra, and still more confirmed by the declarations that have been taken from the different parties who have attended there, and which appear in these proceedings. But all these investigations, regarded judicially, do not give sufficient conviction to believe Melville White guilty of so atrocious a crime, notwithstanding that Senor Romero, in his declarations, expresses himself clearly, and says that, ‘If Melville White is not the assassin of the President, at least he knows who is, and that he knows this from a person who is in Corocoro.’ This accusation is fully conclusive, and proceeds from none other than a political and official authority. If the declaration to which Romero refers had been taken, all doubts would have disappeared. Examining now the tenor and spirit of the declarations extant given by the foreigners, Andrew Wilson, Charles Worms, David Douglas, Isabella Amie, Patrick Dowling, and Mrs. Dorra, what is to be observed? That all in uniformity show the bad courses of Melville, who is taken for a spy, and who passes his life as a vagabond, devoting himself to this life for sinister purposes. For where can the suspicions fall that are inspired by a wandering foreigner, who to-day is well-dressed, and to-morrow badly; who to-day speaks badly the language of the country, and on the following day speaks it perfectly; who is in constant communication with places wherein reside enemies of the Republic; who one day has money, the next bills of exchange; and who yet leaves debts which, even up to the present time, are unsatisfied. Is such the proceeding of a man of good habits and pure faith? Certainly not, for he who has good intentions towards the country in which he is residing, does not seek to cause the slightest note in regard to his individualism.

“Thomas Melville White, according to his own confession, has been for more than a year in our territory without any known domicile, and without any intercourse with our society, because occupied in his wandering life, very foreign to a foreigner, he has devoted himself to attracting towards him the public attention, worrying or distracting the Government and its subalterns from their ordinary avocations.

“When a foreigner treads a foreign territory, he should behave himself with morality and order, because otherwise he becomes liable to the principles of international rights, whereby Sovereigns are empowered to expel from their dominions all such persons as under aspect are prejudicial to them. This is so laid down by Vattel and the most modern treatise writers. It remains proved that the most decided accusers of Melville are his own countrymen, in whom his obscure conduct had inspired profound repugnance. For these reasons, and the right that every nation has to reject from its bosom any foreigner who has inspired suspicions of evil conduct, the undersigned is of opinion that Thomas Melville White be condemned to leave the Republic, and prohibited from again returning to it.

“Portal.”

Page 116 (26 September 1861) contains a defence of claimant made by some lawyer whom claimant never saw nor spoke to. This defence is given here in extenso, and is as follows:—

“I, Don Pablo Mora, on behalf of Thomas Melville White, in the proceedings pending against him for the attempted assassination of the person of his Excellency the President of the Republic, Grand Marshal Don Ramon Castilla, in reply to the copy of the accusation of the Attorney General, say that, in justice, your Honour must be pleased to disregard that accusation as unfounded, contrary to the merits of the case, and all acts of reason and of law; and to finally and fully absolve the accused in pursuance of what I now proceed to state:

“Melville White having been accused of the crime of having fired the shot which wounded General Castilla, on the 25th of July 1860, no pains have been spared to discover the truth of the accusation, and in everything appears clear the complete innocence of my client, who is unblemished by the slightest stain, notwithstanding that an immediate relation of his Excellency the President afforded or supplied the data that cast suspicion upon the accused, and that both Don Manuel Romero, actuated by his affection, and Don David Douglas, out of thirst for gain and lucre, the exclusive origin of those suspicions, exhausted their utmost resources to render their statements well-founded, and gratify their respective aspirations. Nothing is therefore more natural than that the Attorney General should have acknowledged the inculpability of Melville White, and nothing more astonishing than that instead of proclaiming it with frankness, and fulfilling his sacred duty by adhering to the side of truth, protecting the right, and aiding the oppressed, he, without the slightest shade of justice, allowing of such oppression, has adopted the course of accusing Melville White, not of the attempted assassination of the President, but of acts utterly foreign to that affair, which, not being justified, can be entertained only by an absolute forgetfulness of criminal jurisprudence.

“It is true, that at the commencement of the accusation, it is established, that it is not difficult to give credit to the charge brought against Melville White, ‘If it is stated that Don Manuel Romero has been properly informed that the accused was the party who attempted to take the life of his Excellency;’ but it is also true that, laying aside altogether that proposal, that whilst the Attorney General does not show on what he bases the blind evidence he gives to the assertions of Senor Romero, he at once proceeds to relate that, ‘Don David Douglas qualified Melville as a mysterious man.’ That ‘Melville, on account of his poverty and strange life, inspires just suspicions in our nation, whose institutions are to secure themselves.’ That ‘Melville is supposed to be a sailor of high rank, wanders the deserts of our territory, travels on credit, lives incognito, comes forth from his retirement to speak against the present order of things, goes to and comes from this capital in divers attitudes, and alarms the authorities of the South, who believe him capable of the attempt of the 25th of July 1860, on account of the words that he uttered previously at a party given at the café of Mrs. Dorra.’

“Without staying to investigate where all those charges tend, and what stimulus the Attorney General has obeyed in giving them a place in his accusation, I shall note the inference he deduces from the acts. He says that, ‘The investigations made in this tribunal do not afford sufficient conviction for believing Melville White guilty of the atrocious crime imputed to him.’ And when he should have ended his judgment upon this assumption, and demanded the final absolution of the accused in order not to incur contradiction, he adds that,—‘Senor Romero, who is a public employé, and whose word is reliable, affirms that—if Melville White is not the assassin of Grand Marshal Castilla, that he knows who is, and that ‘This information was given to the deponent by a party living in Corocoro, whose declaration, had it been taken, would have removed all doubts that existed upon the subject.’

“It is readily perceivable that, although the Attorney General wanders painfully, although he places himself at discord with himself, by maintaining that the criminality of Melville White is no longer doubtful, and that there is no reason to believe him guilty, although he struggles with the merits of the proceedings, establishing that this ‘party’ was at the réunion given to Romero by Mrs. Dorra; and that the declaration of the Corocoro witness has not been taken, it being, however, true that he is none other than Douglas, although he places himself in antagonism to the prescriptions of right in giving to the testimony of Romero a merit that the law does not—at last, he states an immovable fact, he acknowledges the innocence of my client; and, whilst acknowledging the same, he inserted the vilest calumnies against him, of which the accusation is so loaded. When he came to that part of the accusation, the magistrate finds himself on practical ground—on the ground of the law, protective of inculpability and of right—of the law which, maintaining Melville White in possession of his innocence, did not bind him to prove where he was on the 25th of July, 1860; but did bind his accusers to proving that he was in the vicinity of the crime. In short, the Attorney General departed from the law, which holds for invalid the declaration of Romero, for it is founded upon that of Douglas, and that of Douglas because he supports it himself, and deduces the blame for events which he says happened in Corocoro, in the Republic of Bolivia, many months before the 25th of July 1860.

“Thomas Melville White being tried as suspected of being the assassin of General Castilla, as soon as there is no sign adverse to him, the express mandate of the law, and the strict rules of logic exact that he be declared innocent; but the Attorney General has not thought proper to pursue this course; and in order to deviate therefrom he appeals to the testimony of Wilson, Worms, Douglas, Dowling, and the ladies Amie and Dorra, and asserts asserts that my client is a 'vagabond spy of the enemies of the Republic, irregular and immoral;' and demands that, 'in punishment of his crimes, he be banished from the country for ever, in accordance with the principles of international right that Vattel inculcates.' Anyone who, in a calm spirit, examines the declarations to which the Attorney General refers, will note that their meaning has been violated or perverted; and, even supposing that they did contain such charges against Melville, they would not deserve any attention, if it be a fact that the Republic has been at peace with all nations, and has had no enemies who would have employed my client in the character of a spy.

"It is only sufficient for a man to be accused of 'irregularities and immorality,' for him to be punished, without any proof rendered of the injuries his corruption has led to; and the only thing certain is, that my client is denominated a 'vagabond' by those individuals who, in his incessant voyages and roaming of divers climates, and visiting divers cities, cannot understand that he is seeking for his highly-gifted mind repose and satisfaction. Although all this were not upon indisputable evidence, no reasoning would be able to justify the scandalous attempt that would be committed, if, in accordance with the prescription of the laws of the Criminal Code, it be not stated or ascertained whether Melville White had or had not been guilty, and if, after not being tried in submission to an established rule, the Attorney General should have recourse to the Code of Nations to take from it the penalty that ought to be imposed upon the innocent Melville. It seems that the Attorney General has not dwelt upon the gravity of these objections, and that he has not noted that the treatise writer, by whom he is guided, notwithstanding his not being the best authority as regards philosophical rights, in nowise favours his theory. In fact, Vattel, coinciding with the ideas reigning in his time, deduces or infers, from the dominion that every nation has over its territory, the right of prohibiting the entrance of foreigners, a right which, being only exercisable after due publicity, most positively exacts, that as long as the prohibition does not exist, the same principles apply as regards the natives as to individuals from other countries. According to this opinion, and according to the feeling of those authors who judge that all men have a right of way to establish themselves in any part of the land, without any further condition save that of being protected, in the case of an honourable man, by the established laws, and the delinquent devoted to condign punishment; there is no other resource than to acknowledge that Thomas Melville White has not infringed any law of the Republic; and that in his character of an innocent man he cannot be punished either with banishment or any lesser penalty. Wherefore, I pray your Honour that, considering as answered the foregoing, that you will be pleased to order as I solicited at the commencement, such being but justice.

"Pablo Mora."

Page 121 (30th September 1861) contains a decree of the judge, William Carrillo, calling for the deposition of President Castilla in claimant's case.

"Owing to the multitude of official and private data that I have received, I am convinced, even to certainty, that the accused (in this case) is really and truly guilty. I knew Douglas at Cochabamba, Bolivia, and have ever since protected his family. I have a daughter of his now in Arequipa."

Page 126 (30th November 1861) contains the sentence of the judge of First Instance, a man named William Carrillo, against claimant. This sentence is here given in full, and is as follows:—

"In the criminal cause pending officially against Thomas Melville White, for the crime of a frustrated attempt of assassination, committed against the person of his Excellency the President of the Republic, Don Ramon Castilla, accused by the Attorney General, Mr. John Portal. In view whereof, and considering, first: That Thomas Melville White was brought to justice as accused of being the author of the crime of attempted assassination, committed upon the person of his Excellency Grand Marshal Don Ramon Castilla, President of the Republic, by firing a shot at him on the 25th July 1860, at seven o'clock at night, in Bishop-street, Lima, on his way to the Government House, whereby he was wounded in the left arm. Second, that in the summary or proceedings ordered to be taken, all the evidence possible has been adduced, the cause has passed through all its stages up to that of the pronouncing of sentence. Third, that Don David Douglas, a native of Scotland, and mining engineer, answering the citation made upon him by the Commandant of the Coast Guard of Arica, Don Manuel Romero, states: first, that being at Corocoro, in Bolivia, about the month of April or May of the former year, he was told that Thomas Melville White had said, at the house of Don Pedro Cazo, that he wished the downfall of his Excellency General Castilla; and that he should be replaced by General Don José Rufino Echenique; second, that the said Cazo, who is a great friend of the latter, communicated to him that in his house there had been a meeting, kept up by drinking, at which toasts had been given for the overthrow of the presidential chair of his Excellency General Castilla, and the elevation to the command of Don José Rufino Echenique, telling him at the same time that Melville White was going to do something astonishing in Peru, which Cazo said, on account of Douglas having told him that Melville White seemed to him a bad man. Fourth, that it being most amply justified in the process, that Melville White is a man of no known occupation; that he made frequent voyages between Lima and Bolivia; that he was in contact with Echenique and Linares, of whom Douglas saw bills drawn in his favour, it becomes very necessary to suppose as very probable that Melville White was an agent of theirs in their attempt to overthrow from his command General Castilla, such being the idea that his countrymen had formed of him; this judgment being strengthened by White having shown himself sorrowful when Linares issued the decree of interdiction, it being then that he extended his voyages to the Republic of Chili, whither Echenique had transferred himself, both having come to Callao in the same steamer in March last. Fifth, that it not having been possible to discover from the books of the arrivals and departures of the steamers from the ports of Callao and Arica, the months and days upon which Melville White must have been in Lima, the Court is compelled to rely upon the merits of the declarations of Mrs. Isabella Dorra and Mr. Louis Blondel, residents of Tacna, not considering Melville as the material author of that atrocious crime. Sixth, that the law requires, in order to impose a penalty, that the delinquency of the criminal should be demonstrated with all clearness. Seventh, that every State has a right to expel from its bosom all wandering or vagabond foreigners; and more especially so when they appear to be suspected of being complicated in the gravest crimes.

“ SENTENCE.

“ Upon all which grounds, and all others arising in the suit, and the opinion given by the Attorney General, I sentence that: I ought to acquit, and do acquit, Thomas Melville White as regards complicity in the crime of which he is accused, and generally from co-operating to upset public order; but he must be expelled from the territory of the Republic, without ever being allowed to return to it. And by this my sentence, which shall be consulted by, or forwarded to, the superior tribunal, if no appeal be made within the legal term, definitively judging in first instance, I pronounce, ordain, and sign.

“ Lima, 30 November 1861.”

“ Guillermo Carrillo.”

Page 131 (11 December 1861) contains another accusation against claimant, of another Attorney General, a man named Valle, to the Superior Court. This accusation is here given in all its parts, and is as follows:—

“ Most Illustrious Sir,—The Attorney General says that the proceedings cast very well-grounded suspicions that Thomas Melville White, if he was not the perpetrator of the crime of which he is accused, at any rate he is an accomplice, and acquainted with the conspiracies which have been got up to disturb public order; but it having been impossible to obtain a conviction of his criminality as required for the imposition of any penalty by the law, his absolution from the case is in accordance with right; for although those suspicions are not sufficient to declare him criminal, they are so in the opinion of the Attorney General to hold him only as free from the proceedings that have been taken against him, and which may be opened afresh with any better evidence that can be obtained, but not of the crime which has given rise to it, which is what the laws determine for cases similar to the present. The same does not happen with regard to his expulsion from the territory of the Republic. This order, which contains a condemnation, is in contradiction to his release from the court; and the conduct that has been observed of him, and has served as a basis for the judge, which really is not the best, as results from the process. It is sufficient for him to be placed under the immediate surveillance of the police. In virtue of the foregoing, the Attorney General prays that your most Illustrious Worship may confirm the sentence appealed against in that part that releases from the instance Thomas Melville White, and revoke it in as far as regards the part relating to his expulsion from the territory, he being ordered to be under the surveillance of the police, as above stated; saving the honour of your illustrious self.

“ Lima, 11 December 1861.”

“ Valle.”

Page 132 (7 December 1861) contains an appeal made on behalf of claimant to the Superior Court, against the infamous sentence of the inferior judge, a man named William Carrillo, by a gentleman named Paul Mora, whom claimant has never known. This appeal is here given in full, and is as follows:—

“ Most Illustrious Sir,—I, Don Pablo Mora, for Thomas Melville White, in the proceedings pending against him for having attempted the life of his Excellency the President of the Republic, in expressing wrongs, beg to say, that, in justice, your Most Illustrious Worship must be pleased to declare and denounce those wrongs, which are inflicted upon my client in the sentence of First Instance, definitively revoking it, in view of what I now proceed to state. The reasons that have assisted the inferior judge for absolving Melville White from the charge as regards his having fired a shot at General Castilla, and for condemning him to banishment for ever from the Republic, are contained in the arguments third, fourth, and seventh, of the sentence appealed against. But upon paying the slightest attention to those arguments, it is perceivable that, as regards the merit of the third, it has neither moral nor judicial value, for it is based upon the statement of Don David Douglas, to which our penal legislature attaches no evidential character, and should any be given to it, prudence should counsel the judge to weigh it well over in a case like the present in which the man, Douglas, not over-scrupulous, has been able to insult insult the truth, to recommend himself to General Castilla, in the hope of obtaining the large reward offered to whomsoever should discover his assassin. That the fourth contains a palpable contradiction, since it is set forth therein that General Echenique and President Lanares were in collusion to destroy the administration of General Castilla, having in their employ my client; and in continuation it is manifested that he was sad at the decree of interdiction, although that decree could in nowise embarrass the plans that its author had against the President of Peru, nor act as any obstacle to him who was supposed to be their servant, passing from one republic to the other, under the protection of the Bolivian authorities; and that that of the seventh, in qualifying the accused as a vagabond, and as being complicated in the gravest crimes, in order to condemn him to banishment, contains a generality which, from the tenor of the proceedings, does not acquire any signification, and which conduces directly to the violation of the 36th article of the Civil Code, and the second article of the treaty made between this Republic and Great Britain on the 10th of April 1850, which, in promising that foreigners shall enjoy in Peru all the safety requisite for their persons, means to say that they shall be punished only in those cases where delinquency has been proved.

"Therefore, I beg your Illustrious Honour that you will consider a great wrong towards Melville White has been established, and be pleased to order as I solicited at the commencement, such being justice, &c. &c.

"Pablo Mora."

Page 135 (16 December 1861) contains the sentence which the Superior Court passed in claimant's favour.

This sentence is here given at full length, and is as follows:—

"In the criminal cause pending against Captain Thomas Melville White for attempted assassination in the person of his Excellency the President of the Republic, Grand Marshal Don Ramon Castilla:

"Considering that, from the declarations of Mr. Louis Dorra, Mrs. Isabella Palacios Dorra, and Mr. Louis Blondel, it appears that Thomas Melville White was in the city of Tacna from the 21st up to the 28th of July 1860, wherefore he could not be the author of the attempt made upon the person of his Excellency the President of the Republic, in this capital, on the 25th of the same month; neither has any other charge been proved against the accused.

"We sentence, that we ought to revoke, and do revoke, the sentence of the Court of First Instance, dated 30 November 1861, whereby 'Thomas Melville White is acquitted by the court of the crime imputed to him, and generally from his being any co-operator in upsetting public order; but to be, nevertheless, expelled from the territory of the Republic, and never again allowed to return to it.'

"We fully absolve Melville White, and censure the judge of the Court of First Instance for not having pronounced sentence within the period prescribed by law, 60 or 80 days at the utmost from the period of arrest. Judges—

Page 139 (23 December 1861) contains the sentence passed by the Supreme Court in claimant's case, the substance of which is as follows:—

Cassio.	Munoz."
Herrera.

Don Juan Antonio Ribeyro, one of the judges of the Supreme Court, whose signature is the first affixed to the foregoing sentence, was almost wholly instrumental in passing it, and was in consequence raised by Castilla, a few days after its enactment, to the post of Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic, in which capacity this same Senor Ribeyro a short time afterwards legalised claimant's copy of the expediente!

What a reward for Don Juan Antonio Ribeyro, the upright magistrate(?) to receive from his client and patron, Don Ramon Castilla, for this judge's ingenuity in "Declaring Melville White innocent, but subjecting him to vigilance of the police!"

Page 142 (17 February 1862) contains the various legalizations of the foregoing expediente (process), in the original Spanish, by the Peruvian and British authorities in Lima. These official certificates are as follows:—

the demand made and the order given by the senior judge of the cause, I issue the present certified copy, which I have corrected and concerted or arranged with the interested party, as ordained by the law, whereof I certify.

Claimant

Claimant now proceeds to show how the Peruvian Codes have been violated and trampled under foot, in every step of the proceedings, which the Peruvian Government saw fit to adopt towards him. He shall afterwards refer, with a like object, to the treaties between the British and Peruvian Governments.
